The conclusion at which we have arrived can be supported on another ground. The definition of ancestral property already given involves the idea of inheritance, and inheritance there means succession ab intestato and does not obviously include testamentary succession. Now it has been held in many cases that the appointment of an heir is tantamount to a gift which comes into operation on the death of the appointer and that the property received by the appointee should be regarded in the nature of a bequest.

As remarked by Sir Meredyth Plowden (at page 231) in Ralla v. Budha (5): "The power of adoption, when validly exercised, has precisely the same effect as regards the warisan ekjaddi or presumptive heirs, as a valid transfer of the adoptor's land by gift to the adopted son would have: it operates in fact as a transfer of his land, but a transfer taking effect after the death of the donor instead of in his life-time." If this is the correct description of the mode in which the appointed heir gets the property, then it is clear that he does not inherit it within the meaning of the above definition of ancestral property. The appointee is a legatee of the property and the son of a legatee has absolutely no right to control an alienation by the father of the property bequeathed to the latter.

We would now refer to two judgments which, it is contended by the learned Pleader for the appellant, have adopted a different view.

The first case upon which reliance has been placed is that reported as Thamman Singh v. Jit Singh (6). It arose out of a suit brought by an adopted son to contest an alienation by his adoptive father, and the sole point which was decided was whether the adoptive father had a right to repudiate an adoption once validly made. Having decided it in the negative, the learned Judges remanded the case to the Divisional Judge for disposal, with the remark that the adoption under the deed was valid and that the plaintiff's locus standi was established. The further question that, even if the adoption or appointment was valid, the appointed heir was not entitled to impeach the alienation by his adoptive father because the property was not ancestral as regards him, was not raised by the parties and no opinion was, therefore, expressed on it.

The other case which requires notice is Chajju v. Dalipa (7), the placitum of which is to the effect that "by custom among Mahtons of Nawashahr Tahsil, in the Jullundur District, the sons of an appointed heir who predeceased his adoptive father are entitled to succeed on the latter's death to his estate." With respect to this case, we would make two observations. In the first place, we find that the appointee was a nephew of the appointer and the former's sons were, therefore, agnates of the latter. In the second place the learned Judges regarded the appointment of heir in the same light as a gift and remarked that "there can be no question that a gift, if valid, would benefit the donee's sons, whether the donee himself predeceased the donor or not." Looking at the case in the light of the above observations and having regard to its special facts, we do not think it militates against the view taken by us about the nature of the property in the hands of an appointed heir.

It is, however, significant that in the case of kritrima adoptions which, as has been pointed out in several judgments of this Court resemble the customary appointment of an heir in the Punjab, the Calcutta High Court has held that the sons of a person adopted in the kritrima form are not entitled to inherit the property of the adoptive father [vide, inter alia, Juswant Singh v. Doolee Chand (8)]. At page 258 of the report the learned Judges make the following observations:—

"Under the Hindu Law, as laid down in Macnaghten, Volume I, page 76, and also in a decision of this Court in Volume VIII of the Weekly Reporter, the relation of the kritrima son extends to the contracting parties only, and the son so adopted will not be considered the grandson of the adopting father's father, nor will the son of the adopted be considered the grandson of his adopting father." These observations are, in our opinion, equally applicable to the person appointed an heir under the Customary Law.

From the general principles of the Customary Law relating to the nature of the ancestral land and from the incidents of the customary appointment of heir, the result which we deduce is that the property in the hands of Jawala was not ancestral qua the plaintiff.

We accordingly hold that the plaintiff's suit has been rightly dismissed by the Courts below and that this appeal must fail. The appellant must pay the costs of the respondent in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

NARAYANA REDDI—PLAINTIFF No. 2—APPELLANT

KAMAKSHI AMMAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Suit, abatement of—Minor suing to recover certain property as his by survivorship despite a Will of his father—Death of minor—Legal representative, right of, to continue suit.

A minor sued through his guardian for possession of certain property as his by survivorship and also challenged the validity of his father's Will, which vested the property in the defendant in trust for the minor in case he should attain majority and in trust for a temple in case of his failure to do so. The minor died and his legal representative was placed on the record as plaintiff:

Held, (1) that as the minor had sued for possession of the suit property despite the Will, his legal representative was entitled to prosecute the suit;

(2) that the cause of action was not personal to the minor on the ground that it would be open to him to repudiate his guardian's action on attaining majority and that, therefore, the suit did not abate.

Second appeal from the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 334 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Karur, in Original Suit No. 294 of 1910.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Rangachariar (with him Messrs. N. Rajagopalachariar and K. Parthasarathi), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The 1st plaintiff, a minor, sued the 1st defendant by his guardian for possession of the suit property as his by survivorship, and for a declaration that the Will purporting to have been made by his deceased father, on which the 1st defendant relied, was null and void. This Will vested the property in the 1st defendant in trust for the 1st plaintiff in case he should attain majority and in trust for a temple in case of his failure to do so. First plaintiff died a minor. Second plaintiff, the present appellant, was placed on the record as his legal representative, subject to objection to be disposed of in the final judgment. The 2nd plaintiff then had the other defendants impleaded, as representing the temple and as having taken possession of the property on its behalf in accordance with the Will on the 1st plaintiff's decease.

The lower Appellate Court held, and these defendants have argued here, that the 2nd plaintiff's cause of action is not identical with the 1st plaintiff's and that the former, therefore, cannot carry on the latter's suit. We cannot follow the learned Subordinate Judge in his argument based on the alleged division of the Will into two portions, one of which it was, he held, unnecessary for the 1st plaintiff to have declared inoperative. It is in fact doubtful whether the 1st plaintiff was under any obligation to ask for relief in respect of the Will at all, since it was the foundation, not of his claim, but of the 1st defendant's defence, and it was for the 1st defendant to propound it and establish its validity. But in any case, the 1st plaintiff sued, alleging that the property had vested in him and that he was entitled to possession of it notwithstanding the Will, and the 2nd plaintiff was entitled, as his heir, to prosecute that suit. The facts that the 2nd plaintiff impleaded fresh defendants, to whom the property had been transferred, and that he alleged the transfer to them as consequent on the 1st plaintiff's death, are immaterial, when the former alleged that both the 1st defendant and the other defendants took the property under colour of the same title, that based on the Will. We observe further that, not only was this the allegation in the plaint and the foundation on which the 1st plaintiff and after him the 2nd plaintiff were bound to base their claim, but it was not denied by the defendants subsequently impleaded, who set up no separate title or trespass on their part.

Here the lower Appellate Court's decision is supported further on the ground that the cause of action of a minor, such as the 1st plaintiff's is personal to him, since it would be open to him to reprobate his guardian's action on attaining majority and, therefore, does not survive to his heir. We have been shown no authority for this contention and it does not commend itself on its merits.

The second appeal must, therefore, be allowed. The lower Appellate Court's decision is set aside and it is directed to restore the appeal to its file and dispose of it according to law. The costs in this Court will be costs in the cause.

Appeal allowed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 178 (1) (d), 194—Privity of contract, whether exists between lessor and under-lessee—Covenant by tenure-holder not to excavate tank—Breach of covenant by raiyat—Tenure-holder, liability of—No actual damages suffered—Infringement of right—Nominal damages.

Section 178 (1) (d) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is controlled by section 194.

There is neither privity of contract nor privity of estate between the head lessor and the under-lessee and hence the under-lessee is not personally liable for the rent reserved by, nor on the covenants contained in, the head lease.

Wherever any act injures another's right and would be evidence in future in favour of the wrong-doer, an action may be maintained for an invasion of the right, without proof of any specific damage.

Where a tenure-holder, who had expressly undertaken not to excavate any tank on the property, granted to a raiyat a lease of some land within the tenure and the raiyat being unaware of the restrictive covenant in the lease of the tenure-holder excavated a tank:

Held, (1) that the tenure-holder, and not the raiyat, was liable in damages to his lessor for excavation of the tank by the raiyat;

(2) that there had been a breach of covenant not to excavate any tank, that is, an infringement of the legal right of the plaintiff, who was consequently entitled to nominal damages, even though he may not have suffered actual damage.

Nominal damages does not necessarily mean small damages.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 13th November 1911, affirming that of the Munsif of Khulna, dated the 22nd February 1911.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that the defendants have no right to excavate a tank on the disputed holding. The plaintiff also asks for a mandatory injunction on the defendant to compel him to fill up the tank, or in the alternative for a decree for compensation to the extent of Rs. 400. The Courts below have dismissed the suit against all the four defendants. The first defendant is a raiyat in occupation of the land, while the other three are tenure-holders and intermediate between the plaintiff and the raiyat. The title of the tenure-holders was created on the 28th May 1854 by a lease under which they undertook not to cut down fruit-bearing trees and to excavate tanks on the property. The first defendant executed a kabuliat in favour of the tenure-holders on the 6th May 1883, but he was in occupation of a portion of the land from before that date. The Subordinate Judge has held that this kabuliat was the inception of the present tenancy, because at that time the tenant obtained a lease of additional lands of which he had not previously been in occupation. The case for the plaintiff is that the defendants have committed a breach of the covenant not to excavate a tank on the property comprised in the tenure and that they are consequently liable to indemnify him. The prayer for a mandatory injunction has not been seriously pressed; in fact the alternative claim shows that the plaintiff would be amply satisfied with a decree for compensation and does not intend that the tank should be filled up.

The first question for consideration is, whether there has been a breach of covenant; and if so, by whom? There is no room for controversy that there was an express undertaking by the tenure-holders not to excavate any tank on the property. That covenant has been broken. No doubt it has not been broken by the excavation of a tank by the tenure-holders themselves, but, prima facie, they must be held responsible for the act of their under-tenant. In the first place, in the lease which was granted to the raiyat on the 6th May 1883, they did not take the precaution to insert a covenant that the raiyat would not excavate any tank on the holding. Indeed there is nothing to show that the raiyat was ever apprised of this restrictive covenant in the lease of the tenure-holders. In the second place, it is plain that they have placed the raiyat in a position to excavate the tank. Our attention, however, has been drawn to section 194 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which is in these terms: "Where a proprietor or permanent tenure-holder holds his estate or tenure subject to the observance of any specified rule or condition, nothing in this Act shall entitle any person occupying land within the estate or tenure to do any act which involves a violation of that rule or condition." It has been argued for the appellant that this is a saving clause for conditions binding on landlords and that consequently the first defendant was not entitled to excavate a tank in violation of a condition to that effect in the lease of the tenure-holders. On behalf of the respondents it has been argued that the tenure-holders should not be held responsible, because if they had inserted a restrictive covenant in the lease granted to the raiyat, it would have been unenforceable under section 178, sub-section (1), clause (d), which provides that nothing in any contract between a landlord and a tenant made before or after the passing of the Act shall take away or limit the right of a tenant, as provided by the Act, to make improvements and claim compensations for them. Stress has also been laid on the fact that the Courts below have concurrently found that the excavation of this tank was an improvement of the holding, that the tank covers only a small portion of the land comprised in the holding and that water is needed for the use of men and cattle and will be beneficial for the purposes of cultivation. Under these circumstances, the tenure-holders-respondents contend that they should not be held responsible, as they could not have in any event restrained the first defendant from improving his holding by the excavation of the tank. This contention is clearly unsound, for, in our opinion, section 178, sub-section (1), clause (d), is controlled by section 194, which would have been superfluous if the object of the Legislature had been merely to lay down that the grantee is in no better position than the grantor. The Legislature obviously contemplated cases of the character now before us, where it might be argued with plausibility that the grantee was entitled, by virtue of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to do what could not be done by his grantor. To avoid the conflict which may in this way arise, the Legislature has expressly provided that persons occupying land within a tenure cannot do such acts as involve a violation of the conditions under which the tenure is held. It is thus plain that the tenure-holders might have effectively inserted a restrictive covenant against excavation of tanks in the sub-lease granted by them to the first defendant. The tenure-holders are consequently liable for breach of covenant, even if it be assumed that they have no remdy against their sub-lessee: Penley v. Watts (1), Smith v. Howell (2), Walker v. Hatton (3). This does not, however, show that the plaintiff is entitled to ask for damages as against the first defendant. It is well settled that there is neither privity of contract nor privity of estate between the head lessor and the under-lessee, and hence the under-lessee is not personally liable for the rent reserved by, nor on the covenants contained in, the head lease: Berney v. Moore (4), Holford v. Hatch (5), Laws of England by Halsbury, Volume 18, Article 865. Consequently the plaintiff has no cause of action against the first defendant.

The second question for consideration is the measure of damages for the breach of the covenant. It has been argued on behalf of the tenure-holders that no decree for damages should be made, because the plaintiff has suffered no appreciable damage. It has not been shown that the value of the land as security for the rent has diminished; nor has it been proved that if the land reverts to the plaintiff upon surrender, abandonment or sale of the tenure in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, the plaintiff will not be able to make a re-settlement on the same rent as at present. On the other hand, the excavation of the tank has been a real improvement of the holding. On these facts, we have been pressed to hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for damages. We are of opinion that this contention is not well founded. There has been a breach of the covenant not to excavate any tank, that is, an infringement of the legal right of the plaintiff, who is consequently entitled to nominal damages, even though he may not have suffered actual damages: Williams v. Williams (6), Wigsell v. Corporation of the School for the Indigent and Blind (7). As Serjeant Williams says, wherever any act injures another's right and would be evidence in future in favour of the wrong-doer, an action may be maintained for an invasion of the right, without proof of any specific damage, Millor v. Spateman (8); Patrick v. Greenaway (9). In this way, not only is the principle that wherever there is a wrong there should be a remedy, enforced, but the award of nominal damages for the infliction of a legal wrong may settle the question of title or determine rights of the greatest importance to the plaintiff. From this point of view, it has sometimes been said that even though the result of a trespass may benefit the plaintiff and not damnify him, he is entitled to nominal damages. Hence, if a breach of covenant is deliberate, the Court may award vindictive damages, as Bowen, L. J., put it in Whitham v. Kershaw (10). Here, however, there is no reason to apprehend that the tenure-holders have wilfully committed the breach of covenant. The plaintiff is consequently entitled to nominal damages, which is not necessarily small damages. As Halsbury, L.C., said in Medana v. Comet (11): "Nominal damages is a technical phrase which means that you have negatived anything like real damage, but that you are affirming by your nominal damages that there is an infraction of a legal right which, though it gives you no right to any real damages at all, yet gives you a right to the verdict or judgment because your legal right has been infringed: but the term nominal damages does not mean small damages." We assess the damages at Rs. 100, which according to the plaintiff is the sum required to fill up the tank.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the District Judge set aside. The suit will stand dismissed with costs in all the Courts as against the first defendant but it will stand decreed for Rs. 100 as against the other defendants. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court on the amount decreed, but as between him and the defendants other than the first defendant the costs in both the Courts below must be borne by themselves.

HARIDAS HALDAR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Kalighat palas, whether transferable in limited market—Heritable and partible and devisable—Alienation of a religious office, when permissible—Essentials of a valid custom—Immemorial existence of custom—Presumption—Reasonableness of custom—Inconsistency with general law—Mortgagor setting up title of third person—Estoppel—Trustee mortgagor—No estoppel where mortgage void as contrary to Statute—Mortgage of intangible property—Foreclosure.

According to custom the palas or turns of worship of the Kalighat shrine are transferable in the limited market of hereditary shebaits by blood or marriage.

The custom is a valid one.

A pala of the Kalighat temple is heritable, and it is immaterial whether the heir is a male or a female. It is also partible and devisable

Though probably religious offices were originally indivisible, they are now deemed partible.

In the absence of a custom or usage to the contrary or any term to that effect in the deed of endowment, a religious trust, or the right of management of a religious or charitable endowment or a religious office attached to a temple or any other endowment cannot be alienated by the holder.

But an alienation of a religious office may be made in favour of a person standing in the line of succession and not disqualified by personal unfitness.

A custom to be valid, (1) must be immemorial, (2) must be reasonable, (3) must have continued without interruption since its immemorial origin and (4) must be certain in respect of its nature generally as well as in respect of the locality where it is alleged to obtain and the persons whom it is alleged to affect.

Evidence showing exercise of a right in accordance with an alleged custom as far back as testimony can go, raises the presumption, though only a rebuttable presumption, as to the immemorial existence of the custom.

The period of ascertaining whether a particular custom is reasonable or not, is the time of its possible inception It is sufficient if no good legal reason can be assigned against it

Since customs in general involve some inconsistency with the general common law of the realm or are contrary to a particular maxim, the fact of this inconsistency is not of itself a ground for holding the custom unreasonable and bad.

Per Mookerjee, J.—A mortgagor cannot set up against his mortgagee the title of a third person, especially in view of his express declaration in the mortgage deed that no objection on his part or on behalf of his heirs or representatives shall be maintainable. Even a trustee cannot set up as a defence for himself against the mortgagee that the property mortgaged is trust property which he had no right to mortgage. The principle, however, is inapplicable when the mortgage is void as contrary to Statute.

A mortgagee of palas is a mortgagee of intangible property, and is entitled to foreclose the mortgage quite as much as a mortgagee of chattels, or a mortgagee of land.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage by way of conditional sale, executed in her favour by the defendants on the 16th August 1905, in renewal of two previous conditional mortgages, dated the 8th October 1900 and 9th December 1901. The earlier mortgages had been granted to secure loans of Rs. 1,400 and Rs. 800 respectively. The mortgage now in suit was given to secure the sum of Rs. 2,200, which was to carry interest at the moderate rate of 6 per cent. per annum and was made re-payable on the 16th August 1908. The subject-matter of the security consisted of 3 palas or turns of worship held by the mortgagors in the temple of the goddess Kali at Kalighat. The mortgage-money was not repaid on the due date, and the plaintiff commenced this action on the 13th September 1909 to recover the sum with interest and costs. The plaintiff alleged in the plaint that the palas were transferable according to immemorial custom. The first defendant, who alone contested the claim, set up in his written statement the case that the palas were not transfereable by custom, and that even if the alleged custom was proved, no Court should recognise and enforce it, as it was unreasonable and opposed to public policy. The Subordinate Judge held that the palas were transferable by custom in a limited market, that the custom was neither unreasonable nor opposed to public policy and that the plaintiff was accordingly entitled to a foreclosure decree. On appeal, the District Judge has reversed the decision and has given the plaintiff only a personal decree against the defendants, as in his opinion the custom of transferability of palas was opposed to public policy and unenforceable in a Court of Justice. On the present appeal by the plaintiff, three substantial grounds emerge for consideration: namely, first, are the mortgagors estopped to deny the validity of the mortgage on the ground that the property given by way of security was inalienable; secondly, is the custom of transferability of palas reasonable, so that it may be recognised and enforced by a Court of Justice; and, thirdly, is the plaintiff entitled to a foreclosure decree, in view of the nature of the property given by way of security? Before I deal with these questions, it is necessary to define the custom which, the Courts below have concurrently found, does exist in respect of this particular religious foundation.

The Courts below have found that palas are ordinarily transferred by sale, mortgage, lease and gift, and that they are also the subject of partition and of testamentary devise. This is proved, not merely by oral evidence, but also by evidence of concrete instances in which such transactions have come before Courts and have been upheld as legal. One of the earliest transactions of which we find mention is a mortgage by way of conditional sale of a pala, which was executed on the 4th October 1819 and was foreclosed in due course. We have other instances of conditional mortgages, dated 11th April 1831 and 29th June 1831, which were both foreclosed in 1837. We have further a conditional mortgage of the 18th February 1835, which was foreclosed on the 8th August 1840 after contest in a suit in which the mortgagor unsuccessfully pleaded that the pala was non-transferable. A more modern instance is a conditional sale of 1864 which was foreclosed on the 16th December 1867. Instances of sales of palas, specially in recent years, are quite numerous, and it is not disputed that two of the palas in suit were acquired by the father of the first defendant, mortgagor, by purchase. Instances have also been adduced in which palas have been sold in execution of decrees, have been leased out for longer or shorter periods, have been bequeathed like other property and have in fact formed the subject of transfer in some form or other. One of the most recent instances on the record is a decree of this Court, dated 30th August 1900, which directed possession to be delivered of a pala which had been mortgaged by way of conditional sale, followed by a decree for foreclosure. It has been conclusively proved that 83 palas out of 360 have changed hands permanently. These facts amply justify the concurrent finding of the Courts below that the custom of transfer of palas of the Kalighat shrine has been established beyond the shadow of a doubt; the existence of the custom has been traced back almost to the time of the first establishment of British Courts in this country, and even as early as 1840 the Court found that the custom of transfer was fully established. The evidence, at the same time, established that these transfers have not been unrestricted; but have been confined to co-shebaits or to the members of families on whom a shebait can bestow his daughters in marriage; in other words, there is undisputed and overwhelming evidence, oral and documentary, that in practice palas have been transferred during at least 90 years, though in a limited market which those alone can enter who are qualified to become shebait by birth or marriage. Only one instance has been traced in which a transfer in favour of an absolute stranger, not connected with the hereditary shebaits by blood or marriage, has been recognised; but the transferee in that case was the hereditary pujari or priest whose function, it must be observed, is entirely distinct from that of a shebait,

The plaintiff is the widow of one Jnanendra Nath Mookherjee, who was the son of the daughter's son of a member of the senior branch of the family of Haldars, who are the hereditary shebaits of the goddess Kali. The husband of the plaintiff was also the son of a daughter of a Haldar, in other words, the husband of the plaintiff was descended from the Haldars on the paternal as also on the maternal side. The plaintiff is, consequently, a possible shebait; in other words, the contingency might have happened which would have entitled the plaintiff to take one or more palas by inheritance. The plaintiff is plainly entitled to the benefit of the custom, and this conclusion does not in any way contravene the well-established rule that a custom cannot be enlarged by parity of reasoning: Arthur v. Bakenham (1), Prodyote Kumar Tagore v. Rakhal Chandra Sarkar (2). The plaintiff is conclusively proved to belong to a class of persons to whom palas have hitherto transferred and the transfers have been been recognised as valid. Consequently, if the validity of the custom is established, there is no conceivable reason why the plaintiff should not by foreclosure become entitled to the three palas in dispute.

As regards the first question, it has been argued on behalf of the mortgagee that as no man is allowed to dispute a title which he himself has granted, the mortgagor cannot set up against his mortgagee the title of a third person; this cannot be disputed: Doe d. Bristow v. Pegge (3), Goodtitle d. Edwards v. Bailey (4), Doe d. Ogle v. Vickers (5), Doe d. Hurst v. Clifton (6), King v. Smith (7), Debendra Nath v. Mirza Abdul Samed (8). The rule has been held applicable where the mortgagor is a trustee, acting in a public capacity, and not for his own benefit [Doe d. Levy v. Horne (9), notwithstanding the contrary dictum in Fairtitle d. Mytton v. Gilbert (10), Doe d. Baggaley v. Hares (11)], and the principle has been repeatedly approved and applied in the Courts of the United States that a mortgagor is estopped to deny his title, and cannot set up as a defence for himself against the mortgagee that the property so mortgaged is trust property which he had no right to mortgage: Bush v. Marshall (12), Strong v. Waddell (13), Jones v. Reese (14), Farris v. Horston (15), Boisclair v. Jones (16); Usina v. Wilder (17); McLeon v. Smith (18). The reason for the rule is concisely put by Collier, C. J., in Stewart v. Anderson (19): "by the mortgage, the mortgagor professes to convey, and thus declares that he has an interest co-extensive with what he undertakes to transfer; and he will not be heard to say, in contradiction of his own deed or in opposition to a claim founded thereon, that he was guilty of a falsehood and had no estate or interest therein." This principle has been held inapplicable where the mortgage is void as contrary to Statute [Brewster v. Madden (20)], on the ground that "it is not competent to parties to a contract to estop themselves or anybody else in the face of an Act of Parliament:" Barrow's case (21). Hence it has been ruled that a corporation is not estopped from pleading that a mortgage made by it is ultra vires: Ex parte Watson (22). See also Fairtitle d. Mytton v. Gilbert (10), Blackburn District Benefit Building Society v. Cunliffe Brooks & Co. (23), British Mutual Banking Co. v. Charnwood Forest Railway Company (24). But the view has been steadily maintained that trustees for a public purpose are not, by the nature of their office, protected from the operation of estoppel as against the assignees of the original parties to the deed in question:

Doe d. Levy v. Horne (9), Webb v. Herne Bay Commissioners (25), Higgs v. Northern Assam Tea Co. (26). I am not prepared to accept the view indicated by Banerjee, J., in Mallika v. Ratan Mani (27), which receives no support from the decision of the Judicial Committee in Juggut Mohini Dossee v. Sokheemoney Dossee (28), cited in support of this position; but there are cases where trustees have been allowed to impeach their own grants [Ramonee Debia v. Baluck Doss (29)], and conflicting dicta are to be found in Gulam Nabi v Nagammal (30) and Gulzar Ali v. Fida Ali (31), [see Sidhu Sahu v. Gopi Charan Das (32), where the earlier cases are discussed]. I am of opinion that in the case before us, the Court should not depart from the ordinary rule that the mortgagor cannot dispute the title of the mortgagee, specially in view of the express declaration of the mortgagors in the fourth paragraph of the mortgage-deed that "no objection on their part or on behalf of their heirs or representatives shall be maintainable." But I do not desire to rest the decision solely on the ground of estoppel, for, as will presently be seen, there is no substance in the objection raised by the mortgagors.

As regards the second question, it has not been disputed on behalf of the mortgagee that in the absence of a custom or usage to the contrary or any term to that effect in the deed of endowment, a religious trust or the right of management of a religious or charitable endowment or a religious office attached to a temple or any other endowment cannot be alienated by the holder: Raja Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi (33), Rama Varma v. Raman Nayar (34), Kannan v. Nilakandan (35), Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Rangamma (36), Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (37), Sarkum v. Rahman Bakhsh (38); Narayana v. Ranga (39), Subbarayudu v. Kotayya (40), Alagappa v. Sivaramasundara (41), Rajeshwar v. Gopeshwar (42), Durga Bibi v. Chanchal Rani (43), Rup Narain Singh v. Junko Bye (44), Mallika v. Ratan Mani (27), Rangasami v. Ranga (45), Rajaram v. Ganesh (46), Ukoor Dass v. Chunder Sekhur Dass (47), Juggur Nath v. Kishen Pershad (48), Kali Charan v. Bangshi Mohan Das (49), Dube v. Srinivas (50), Ramanadhan v. Murugappa (51), Trimbak v. Lakshman (52) and Kuppa v. Dorasami (53). There is also authority for the proposition that an alienation of a religious office may be validly made in favour of a person standing in the line of succession and not disqualified by personal unfitness: Sitarambhai v. Sitaram Ganesh (54), Mancharam v. Pranshankar (55), Annasami v. Ramakrishna (56) and Nirodbarani Dassi v. Shiba Dass (57). But the appellant does not invite us to go even as far as this proposition. She asks us to assume that a pala or turn of worship is not alienable except by custom, and contends that the custom which has been proved in this case should be recognised by the Court: Raja Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi (33), Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (37). This raises the question, whether the custom possesses the characteristics deemed essential for the validity of a custom. These essential attributes were specified by Tindal, C. J., in Tyson v. Smith (58) in these terms: "A custom to be valid must have four essential attributes—first, it must be immemorial; secondly, it must be reasonable; thirdly, it must have continued without interruption since its immemorial origin; and, fourthly, it must be certain in respect of its nature generally, as well as in respect of the locality where it is alleged to obtain and the persons whom it is alleged to affect." See also Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal (59), Raja Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah (33), Lutchmeeput Singh v. Sadaullah Nushyo (60) and Ghasiti v. Umrao Jan (61). In the case before us, the custom obviously satisfies the first, third and fourth requirements. The time when the custom originated is unknown; all that has been ascertained is that as far as the evidence can be carried back, it has been in existence. This takes the case out of the rule formulated by Willes, J., in London Corporation v. Cox (62), that "a custom originating within time of memory, even though existing in fact, is void at law." There is no force in the contention that the proof of the existence of the custom should have been carried back by direct evidence to 1793, when the first Regulations were passed by the Indian Legislature, if not to the year 1773 when the Supreme Court was established. It is well settled that evidence showing exercise of a right in accordance with an alleged custom as far back as testimony can go, raises the presumption, though only a rebuttable presumption, as to the immemorial existence of the custom. As Tindal, C. J., said in Bastard v. Smith (63), "You cannot reasonably expect to have it proved that the custom did in fact exist before time of legal memory; but you are to require proof, as far back as living memory goes, of a continuous, peaceable and uninterrupted user of the custom." To the same effect is the observation of Farwell, J., in Mercer v. Denne (64): "not only ought the Court to be slow to draw an inference of fact which would defeat a right that has been exercised during so long a period as the present, unless such inference is irresistible, but it ought to presume everything possible to presume in favour of such a right." It is interesting to note that Vijnaneswara in his Mitakshara enunciated a similar rule (Yajnavalkya, Book II, 27). On the authority of a text of Katyayana, he holds that "time within the memory of man extends as far as a hundred years," as a man has, according to Sruti, a hundred years' duration of life (Mitakshara, trans. Gharpure, page 50). Apararka, in his commentary on the same text of Yajnavalkya, treats a period beyond three generations (that is, one hundred and five years) as time immemorial, and refers to an earlier text to show that a period beyond sixty years might be treated as time beyond human memory. In any event, it is well-settled that if the existence of the custom has been proved for a long period, the onus lies on the person seeking to disprove the custom to demonstrate its impossibility; in this case, the mortgagors have entirely failed to meet the evidence of the custom adduced by the plaintiff. There is also no room for serious controversy as regards the certainty and continuity of the custom. The only question, consequently, for consideration is whether it is reasonable, as the appellant contends, or unreasonable and opposed to public policy, as the respondent asserts. It is indisputable that if a custom be against reason, it has no force in law; but as explained in Co. Litt. 62*a*, the reason here referred to is not to be understood as meaning every unlearned man's reason, but artificial and legal reason warranted by authority of law; or as Blackstone puts it (Commentaries, Vol. I, page 77) it is sufficient if no good legal reason can be assigned against it. When, however, it is said that a custom is void because it is unreasonable, nothing more is meant than that the unreasonable character of the alleged custom conclusively proves that the usage, even though it may have existed from time immemorial, must have resulted from accident or indulgence and not from any right conferred in ancient times: Salisbury v. Gladstone (65). It is also well settled that the period for ascertaining whether a particular custom is reasonable or not, is the time of its possible inception; this is in accord with the observation in the Tanistry's case (66), "the commencement of a custom (for every custom hath a commencement, although the memory of man doth not extend to it, as the river Nile hath a spring although geographers cannot find it) ought to be upon reasonable ground and cause, for if it was unreasonable in the original, no usage or continuance can make it good. Quod ab initio non valet in tractu temporis non convalescet." When tested in the light of these principles, no good ground can be assigned why the custom should be condemned as unreasonable. There is no force in the contention of the respondents that because the custom contravenes the rule that a religious office is inalienable, it must be pronounced to be against public policy; if this argument were to prevail, all customs would be unreasonable. Since customs in general involve some inconsistency with the general common law of the realm or are contrary to a praticular maxim, the fact of this inconsistency is not of itself a ground for holding the custom unreasonable and bad: Tyson v. Smith (58). Thus in the Tanistry case (66), it is said that " several customs which have been adjudged void in our books as being unreasonable, against common right or purely against law, if their nature and quality be considered, will be found injurious to the multitude and prejudicial to the commonwealth." To the same effect is Co. Litt. 113*a*: "Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabili usitata privat communem legem." Is there then anything to show that this custom is injurious to the endowment or to the commonwealth? One of the mortgagors has a turn of worship or pala; he is entitled in this character to collect the offerings made to the goddess on the day on which his turn falls; he applies a portion of the income for the worship of the goddess and appropriates the remainder for his personal use. It is not material to consider whether he should not apply the whole of the income for religious and charitable purposes; but let us assume that he, and every shebait like him who has a pala, may be compelled to do so. He transfers his turn of worship to a person who, in certain contingencies, might, in his own right, have been a shebait and might have held a pala. The transferee, as holder of the pala, is under precisely the same obligation to the endowment as the transferor himself. It is difficult to appreciate how a custom which recognises and validates a transfer to members of a limited circle under these circumstances can be detrimental to the endowment or to the public. There is no question that a pala of the Kalighat temple is heritable, and it is immaterial whether the heir is a male or a female; the custom in this respect is established beyond doubt: Janokee v. Gopaul (67). There is also no question that though probably religious offices were originally indivisible, they are now deemed partible: Trimbak v. Lakshman (52), Mitta Kunth v. Neerunjun (68), Elder Widow v. Younger Widow (69), Sethuramasawmiar Iyer v. Sri Meruswami Iyar (70), Damodardas v. Uttamram (71), Nagiah v. Muthacharry (72), Limba v. Rama (73), Raman Lalji v. Gopal Lalji (74), Rajeshwar v. Gopeshwar (42), Anundi Moyee v. Boykantnath Roy (75), Ram Soondur Thakur v. Taruck Chunder (76), Debendro Nath v. Odit Churn (77), Eshan Chunder Roy v. Monmohini Dassi (78) and Goopee Kishen v. Thakoor Das (79). Indeed, the very name pala or turn of worship shows that the right is partible. This involves, by necessary implication, the attribute of transferability as amongst the members of the family of shebaits; partition signifies the surrender of a portion of joint right in exchange for a similar right from the co-owner. There is further no question that a pala has not only been deemed heritable and partible, it has also been treated as devisable, as is illustrated by the case of the sister of the first defendant, who obtained a pala under the testamentary devise of her father. This, again, involves the recognition of the transferable character of a pala; the exercise of the right to make a bequest implies an assertion of the right to make a transfer inter vivos. It follows, consequently, that the customary right to make a sale, mortgage, gift or lease of a pala in favour of persons within a limited circle is closely associated with and possibly developed out of the heritable, devisable and partible character of a pala. A custom of this description clearly cannot be characterised on any rational ground as unreasonable or opposed to public policy. It is further worthy of note that this is not a novel view of the true character of such a custom; for as early as 8th August 1840 the validity of a conditional mortgage of a pala effected on the 18th February 1835 was upheld in a contested litigation. Since every custom sanctioned by the Courts must be reasonable, it follows that every case where a custom has been upheld by the Courts is an example of a reasonable custom. When the evidence is examined from this point of view, the case for the mortgagee is materially strengthened; for, as is clear from the record, not only the existence but also the validity of the custom has been repeatedly recognised by the Courts during at least 70 years prior to the institution of this suit, while no single instance has been found where its reasonableness has been successfully assailed. The custom of transferability of a pala in favour of a limited circle of transferees must accordingly be held valid, and no good reason has been assigned why it should be deemed unreasonable or opposed to public policy.

As regards the third question, it has been argued on behalf of the mortgagors-respondents that as Order XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 applies only to mortgages of immoveable property, the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for foreclosure; and in this connection, reference has been made to Ishan Chander Roy v. Monmohini Dasi (78) and Jati Kar v. Mukund Deb (80) to show that a pala or turn of worship is not immoveable property. There is no substance in this connection. It is well-settled that foreclosure is a remedy of the mortgagee which is not confined to mortgages of land; it is equally applicable to mortgages of chattels, as decided by the House of Lords in Harrison v. Hart (81), Tanored v. Potts (82) and Kemp v. Westbrook (83). The case before us is clearly not that of a pledgee of a moveable; such a pledgee, as pointed out in Harrold v. Plenty (84), is in a very different position from an ordinary mortgagee, as he has only a special property in the thing pledged and may obtain a sale, but not a foreclosure. The plaintiff is a mortgagee, not of immoveable but of intangible property, and he is entitled to foreclose the mortgage quite as much as a mortgagee of chattels. [Jones on Chattel Mortgages, 1908, sections 699 and 776.] It is worthy of note that as early as 1181, Glanville described in detail a remedy applicable to chattel mortgages which is substantially equivalent to the modern procedure for foreclosure and order absolute on failure of the mortgagor to redeem within the period fixed by the Court. [Glanville, Tr. Beames, Book X, Ch. 6-8; Ed. Beale, 1900, pp. 204-210.] It may be added that if the contention of the mortgagors were to prevail, they might find themselves in a worse position than what they would occupy under a foreclosure decree; for if the procedure for foreclosure, with its consequent opportunity to the mortgagor to redeem, is not applicable, the mortgagee may very well contend that the contract between the parties must be strictly enforced, and that as the time for repayment has passed away, the title of the mortgagee to the mortgaged property has become absolute; such a result could hardly have been contemplated by the mortgagors.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the District Judge discharged. On account taken of the sum due on the conditional mortgage in suit on the 16th November next, it transpires that the mortgagee will be entitled to Rs. 3,421 for principal and interest up to that date. The decree will direct that if the defendants pay this sum together with costs of all the Courts with interest thereon (as specified in the decree of this Court) on or before the 16th November 1914, the mortgage will stand redeemed. On default, the mortgage will be foreclosed after the decree absolute has been made by the primary Court in due course. The hearing

GAYA BAKHSH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Ejectment, whether by notice or by suit—Perpetual lessee, not liable to ejectment by notice—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 60.

A perpetual lessee cannot be ejected by notice. The landlord must proceed against him by suit, as provided in section 60 of the Oudh Rent Act.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated 16th June 1913.

Mr. St. G. Jackson, for the Appellant.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I entirely agree with the Commissioner that ejectment by notice cannot be made. It is not necessary for the purposes of this case to decide whether the lease is open to forfeiture if a portion of the holding is sub-let or whether the rent is in arrears. These questions will arise subsequently, but I am clear that the appellant must proceed by suit. Section 56 (b) says that a tenant when served with a notice may contest it on the ground that he holds under an unexpired lease. That the respondents do so hold is beyond question, although it is curious that section 60 does not provide for a perpetual lease at all, but only for "long" leases. Whether the grant of a perpetual lease is valid or not is very doubtful, and it is particularly doubtful whether the Court of Wards had power to grant such a lease. In any case, it is quite impossible to hold that in the case of a lease for a term of years there must be a suit and that in the case of a perpetual lease a notice will suffice. What the appellant's remedy is it is not necessary to decide. He might have a good cause of action in the Civil Court to get the lease cancelled, but if he has any remedy in the Revenue Court it must be by suit under section 60. Appeal dismissed with costs.

This order will govern No. 21.

Appeal dismissed.

Gift—Construction of deed—Property gifted to wife for her life only—Reversion, right of, transfer of—Expectancy of succession—Transfer, validity of.

A heba gift-deed, executed by a Hindu in favour of his wife for her maintenance and performance of debsheba, without any words indicating inheritance or power of alienation usually contained in a deed of absolute gift, is a gift only for life of the donee and the right of ownership minus the right of the donee, to enjoy the property for her life remains in the donor. The reversion, which remains vested in the donor in such a case, is different from a mere expectancy of succession as in the case of a reversioner of a Hindu widow, and is, therefore, descendible to and transferable by his heirs.

Appeal against the decree of the officiating District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 29th of April 1911, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court, at Kandi, dated the 9th of June 1910.

Babu Sajani Kanta Sinha, for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Charan Majumdar and Naren Chandra Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant purchased an 8-annas share of the properties in execution of a mortgage-decree against one Gobind Gopal on the 15th June 1897, and is said to have obtained symbolical possession of the properties on the 21st November 1897.

It appears that one Lal Mohan was originally the owner of a 4-annas share of the properties. He had two sons, one of them being Gobind Gopal. Lal Mohan executed a heba patra in the year 1875 in favour of his 3rd wife, Khetramoni, in respect of the 4-annas share of the properties together with other properties. Khetramoni died in 1903. Both Lal Mohan and Gobind predeceased her, Lal Mohan in 1891 and Gobind in 1896. The plaintiff on the 20th September 1909 instituted the present suit for recovery of possession of an 8-annas share of the properties. It was conceded, however, in the Court below that Lal Mohan had only a 4-annas share, and the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to claim only a 2-annas share, that being the share of Gobind Gopal. The suit was resisted by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the sons of Gobind, and the defendant No. 3, who had purchased their interest, originally on the ground that Gobinda had no right to the properties which devolved upon the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and their uncle, Nrittya Gopal, on the death of Khetramoni, as heirs of Lal Moni.

The Courts below have concurred in dismissing the suit.

The questions raised in this appeal are, first, whether upon a proper construction of the heba, only a life-interest was created in favour of Khetramoni, and secondly, if so, whether Lal Mohan had any interest which could be inherited and mortgaged by his son, Gobind Gopal, and passed to the plaintiff at the sale held under the mortgage.

The learned District Judge has held that the heba was a gift out and out. We are unable to agree with him in the construction put by him upon the document. The heba states that it was executed in order to provide for the maintenance of Khetramoni and for the performance of "debsheba, &c." It is true the document recites that the debts of Lal Mohan had been paid up by Khetramoni by selling her own properties. That may have been the reason which induced Lal Mohan to make a provision for the maintenance of his wife and the performance of debsheba, but there is nothing in the document to indicate that it was an absolute gift. Lal Mohan had two sons by another wife. He would, therefore, naturally make a provision for the maintenance of his third wife and for performance of debsheba, but it is also natural that he should intend that the sons should get the properties after the death of Khetramoni. Moreover, the fact that the debsheba was also to be performed indicates that the properties could not have been intended to be absolutely given to Khetramoni. As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Mahomed Shamsool Huda v. Shewakram(1), in connection with the construction of a Will executed by a Hindu, "it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family; and it may be assumed that a Hindu knows that, as a general rule, at all events, women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate." In the present case it was a gift by a Hindu husband to his wife and had it been the intention of Lal Mohan to give the properties absolutely to Khetramoni, one would have expected words of inheritance and power of alienation which are usually contained in a deed of absolute gift.

Reference was made on behalf of the respondents to the provisions of section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act. No doubt under section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act, a transfer of property, unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, passes forthwith to the transferee all the interest which the transferor is then capable of passing in the property and in the legal incidents thereof. But the heba was executed in 1875 before the Transfer of Property Act was passed; the provisions of that section are, therefore, inapplicable.

As pointed out, however, by the Judicial Committee in the case of Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pandit (2), the rule of law before the Transfer of Property Act was that indefinite words of gift were calculated to convey all the interest of the grantor, but that it was necessary to read the whole instrument to gather the intention.

(2) 11 C. 121; 11 I. A. 218; 8 Ind Jur. 638; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 578.

Now, turning to the heba it seems to us that the words, "from this date you shall make collections by your own men and on payment of revenue and road-cess, you shall enjoy the lakheraj and collectorate properties in the schedule below," must be read in connection with the words which precede and follow them, "in order to provide for your maintenance and the performance of debsheba, &c.," and "we think that no objection to this either on my part or on the part of my representatives shall be entertained" refer to objection being raised during the life-time of Khetramoni either by Lal Mohan or his heirs. It appears to us that the indefinite words of gift must be limited by the purposes of the gift and that it was Lal Mohan's intention that Khetramoni should take the properties only for her life for her "maintenance and for debsheba, &c."

We may mention that although the learned District Judge held and the respondent has contended in this Court that there was an absolute gift to Khetramoni, the defendants stated in their written statements that the grant to Khetramoni was for her life for her maintenance, and that if it was an absolute gift Gobind had no right to the properties. What the defendants maintained in their defence was that Gobind having predeceased Khetramoni, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and their uncle, Nrittya Gopal, inherited the properties as heirs of Lal Mohan on the death of Khetramoni, and that Gobind had no interest which he could mortgage to the plaintiff.

But if the only right created in favour of Khetramoni was a life-interest, Lal Mohan had an interest in the properties subject to the right of Khetramoni to enjoy them during her life, an interest which was descendible to his heirs and capable of being transferred by them. Gobind, therefore, inherited one-half of such interest on the death of his father, Lal Mohan. Had it been merely the interest of a Hindu reversioner expectant upon the death of a Hindu widow, we would have been bound to hold, having regard to the opinion of the Judicial Committee in Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (3) and that of this Court in Nund Kishore Lal v. Kanee Ram Tewary (4), that it could not be the subject of transfer. But in the view we have taken of the heba, Lal Mohan gave only a life-estate to Khetramoni. The reversion on the determination of the life-estate given to Khetramoni remained vested in Lal Mohan. It was not a mere expectancy of succession as in the case of a reversioner of a Hindu widow. A Hindu widow has not a mere life-interest; the whole estate is vested in her absolutely for some purposes, though in some respects for a qualified interest. Here the right of ownership minus the right of Khetramoni to enjoy the property for her life remained with Lal Mohan. The right, therefore, which was left in Lal Mohan, could be, and was, inherited by his sons, Gobind Gopal and Nrittya Gopal on his death, and Gobind was quite competent to mortgage his interest to the plaintiff. The plaintiff thus acquired a good title to the share of Gobind on the death of Khetramoni at the sale held in execution of the decree based upon the mortgage.

The learned District Judge, however, has not decided the other issues in the case and the case must, therefore, go back for determination of the other issues.

The decree of the Court of appeal below is accordingly set aside and the case remanded to that Court for disposal after decision of the other issues. Costs to abide the result.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 112, 113, 189—Sale under the Act—Suit to contest sale—Jurisdiction—Civil suit barred both before and after sale, BALDEO SHUKUL v. BALBHADAR SINGH.

Section 189 of the Madras Estates Land Act precludes a Civil Court from taking cognizance of a suit for declaration that no valid sale can be effected and therefore a party is not entitled to contest in a civil suit, the validity of a sale under the said Act, and it makes no difference whether the suit is brought before or after the sale.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad, in Original Suit No. 91 of 1911.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and S. Sundara Raja Aiyangar, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Gopalaswamy Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit in ejectment. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiffs' title to the property had passed to one Sundara Raja Aiyangar and also on the ground that they cannot dispute the validity of the sale under the Estates Land Act under which the property was sold to the defendant and possession was delivered to him by the Collector. The plaintiffs appeal.

The plaintiffs were occupancy tenants. The defendant, the landholder, served notice of intention to sell the holding on the plaintiffs through the Collector under section 12 of the Estates Land Act. Intimation of the date of service was given by the Collector to the landholder under section 113 and the property was sold and the defendant was placed in possession by the Collector. It was open to the plaintiffs to bring a suit under section 112 to contest the defendant's right of sale within thirty days of the date of service on him. Clause 12 of Part A of the Schedule and section 189 precludes a Civil Court from taking cognizance of any dispute in respect of which a suit might be brought before a Collector. The plaintiffs are not, therefore, entitled in a civil suit to question the right of sale. Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar argues that the plaintiffs are only precluded from bringing a suit before the sale, but the section is not a bar to the suit which may be brought for the same purpose after the sale. The words of section 189 do not support this contention. It renders the section practically nugatory. It is not likely that the Legislature would allow the validity of a sale to be impeached after the sale, while prohibiting a suit for a declaration that no valid sale can be effected.

The case in Gouse Moideen Saib v. Muthialu Chettiar (1) has no application. There a sale was sought to be set aside on the ground of fraud—cases relating to fraud stand on a different footing. The defendant is not a wrong-doer and was lawfully placed in possession in proceedings to which the plaintiffs were parties. He is, therefore, also entitled to show that the plaintiffs had no title to possession. We think the Subordinate Judge is right and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

BALDEO SHUKUL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

BALBHADAR SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Malicious prosecution—Prosecutor, whether defendant must be proved to be—Mental distress—Bodily discomfort—Damages.

In order to succeed in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant was in fact his prosecutor in the proceedings before the Criminal Court.

The plaintiff was proceeding from the Jaunpur Railway Station to his home when the defendant ran up from behind and arrested him. The plaintiff was eventually put upon his trial on a charge of theft but was acquitted. On plaintiff's suit for damages for malicious prosecution:

Held, that in taking upon himself to arrest the plaintiff, the defendant took upon himself a responsibility far greater than he would have done if he had merely made a report or complaint alleging the commission of an offence of theft before an authority competent to take action in the matter;

(2) that the prosecution of the plaintiff before the Criminal Court was substantially the work of the defendant and that he was, therefore, liable for damages, and

(3) that the plaintiff was entitled to claim damages for his mental distress and bodily discomfort resulting from his arrest and detention in the lock-up.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur, dated the 23rd September 1913.

FACTS.—The facts appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.—No suit for malicious prosecution could lie against my client, as he did not initiate or carry on the prosecution. He simply gave information to his official superior. It was the latter's duty to consider the matter and to start the prosecution or not. The gist of an action for malicious prosecution lies not only in initiating the prosecution, but in conducting and carrying it on. I rely on Baboo Gunnesh Dutt Singh v. Magneeram Chowdhury (1), Pichuvayengar v. Oliver (2), Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (3) and Dudhnath Kundu v. Mathura Prasad (4).

The case has been tried throughout by the Courts below as a suit for malicious prosecution and it has never been treated as a suit for false imprisonment.

The burden of proving want of reasonable and probable cause lay entirely upon the plaintiff. Second Appeal No. 1132 of 1907 decided by Banerji, J., on 20th April 1910.

Moreover, no damages for mental pain and anxiety can be allowed in law. Bhooni Money Dossee v. Natobar Biswas (5), Futrookh Hossein v. Fusul Hossein (6).

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal (for Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji), for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—Baldeo Shukul, who is the defendant-appellant in this case, was a watchman employed by the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company at their railway station at Jaunpur. He has been sued for damages by the plaintiff, Balbhadar Singh, upon the following allegations:—That in the middle of the night between the 15th and the 16th day of January 1912, Balbhadar Singh, travelling upon his own private affairs, alighted at the railway station above-mentioned and was proceeding from thence to his home. He had gone a short distance from the railway station when the defendant, Baldeo, ran up to him from behind, caught hold of him and raised an alarm of thieves. Another watchman was summoned and the person of the plaintiff was secured. He was then taken before the goods clerk at the railway station, to whom the defendant, Baldeo, accused him of having been caught in the act of stealing a sack of grain from the shed where the defendant was employed as a watchman. Through the goods clerk, the plaintiff was made over to the Police and eventually put upon his trial on a charge of theft. The plaintiff contended further that the defendant, Baldeo, not merely gave false evidence against the plaintiff before the Criminal Court, but also looked after the case and assisted the Police in its prosecution. Finally, it is alleged that all these proceedings on the part of the defendant were taken maliciously on account of previouly existing enmity between the parties. In the Courts below the suit was treated as one for damages for malicious prosecution, pure and simple. The Courts laid upon the plaintiff the full burden of proof which lies upon a plaintiff in such a case. They seem to me to have considered the case with due regard to the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (3). They have found against the defendant and in favour of the plaintiff on every possible point raised by the pleadings, and have decreed the suit as brought. The defendant, coming to this Court in second appeal, has tendered a memorandum of appeal in which there are six paragraphs. One of these was withdrawn before the appeal was admitted. Another merely asserts a perfectly correct proposition of law, viz., that the evidence given in the criminal case which resulted in the acquittal of the plaintiff, Balbhadar Singh, could not be treated as an evidence in the present suit. As it has not been shown to me that this principle of law was in any way violated by the Courts below I may pass over this plea.

The remaining paragraphs of the memorandum of appeal raise in substance three pleas:—(1) that inasmuch as the defendant, Baldeo Shukul, neither made any report to the Police or complaint to a Magistrate against the plaintiff, Balbhadar Singh, it cannot be said that he was the prosecutor in this case, or that he is liable for damages for malicious prosecution; (2) that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove that there was no reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution and that the defendant was actuated by malice. The suggestion as put forward in argument is that there has been no clear finding on the point by the lower Appellate Court, and (3) it is contended that the amount of damages awarded is

(2) 26 M. 260.
(3) 30 A. 525; 12 C. W. N. 1017, 10 Bom. L. R. 1360; 8 C. L. J 337; 5 A. L. J. 665; 35 I. A. 189 (P.C.).
(4) 24 A. 317, A. W. N. (1902) 75.
(5) 28 C. 452; 5 C. W. N. 669.
(6) 1 N. W. P. H. C. R. 292.

excessive and that the damages have been assessed on unsound principles of law. In dealing with this appeal as a whole I certainly feel one difficulty. It seems to me probable that the plaintiff himself was not fully aware of the strength of his legal position on the facts alleged by him, and I have no doubt that the Courts below have underestimated the strength of the plaintiff's position. It may be that the present suit was, in a certain sense and to a certain extent, a suit for damages for malicious prosecution, but it was a great deal more than that. In its essence it was a suit for damages for false imprisonment. When the defendant, Baldeo, took it upon himself to arrest the plaintiff he assumed a responsibility in law far greater, and not as the appellant to this Court would suggest considerably smaller, than he would have done if he had merely made a report or complaint alleging the commission of an offence of theft against the plaintiff before an authority competent to take action on the same. If the Courts below had dismissed the plaintiff's suit, it might have been a matter for serious consideration whether I ought not to order its re-trial, on the ground that the essential nature of the suit had been misconceived. As the case stands, however, the Courts below have simply laid upon the plaintiff a heavier burden of proof than they would have done if they had rightly appreciated his legal position, and nevertheless they have found in the plaintiff's favour. With regard, therefore, to the first of the pleas put forward by the appellant I hold, in the first instance, that it was by no means necessary for the plaintiff in order to succeed in a suit for damages upon the facts alleged in the plaint, to prove that the defendant was in fact his prosecutor in the proceedings before the Criminal Court. The nature of the suit cannot be changed because the Courts below have seen fit to label it a suit for malicious prosecution, although the allegations in the plaint show it to be this and something considerably more. I hold, further, that on the facts found by them the Courts below were entitled to infer that the prosecution of the plaintiff before the Criminal Court was substantially the work of the defendant, and that he was liable for the same in damages. As to the second question, viz., the absence of reasonable and probable cause and the presence of malice, I am clearly of opinion that these points have been decided against the defendant by the Courts below upon evidence which justifies their decisions. The plea to the contrary is based upon detached passages quoted from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, in which that Court was dealing expressly with the pleas as they stood in the memorandum of appeal before it. In substance the lower Appellate Court has found that there was no theft committed at the time when the plaintiff was arrested, that the plaintiff was going about his lawful business at the time, that he was arrested on account of previous enmity and that the defendant knew perfectly well when he arrested the plaintiff that he had no lawful ground for doing so. The plea as regards damages is based upon the principle, said to be deducibl from certain English cases, that damages fo mental anxiety only cannot be awarded in suits for slander. What the plaintiff in the present case asked the Court to compensate him for over and above his out of pocket expenses, was not merely the injury to reputation, but the distress of mind and the bodily discomfort which he suffered through having been arrested in the middle of the night, sent to the lock-up and detained in custody amongst felons and bad characters for a period of almost a month and a half. In my opinion he was thoroughly entitled to claim compensation on this ground, and I see no reason to hold that the Court below has erred in accepting the moderate sum at which he assessed his sufferings. This appeal, therefore, fails and is hereby dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

possession—Fallow land—Grazing of cattle, whether interrupts operation of adverse possession—Co-sharer, adverse possession of, when presumed—Hostile title.

A partition may be occasionally established by oral evidence which, though not directly proving the factum of partition, may be of such a character as to justify the inference that a partition must have been made between the parties or their predecessors.

In a case where there were, first, transfer by one member of the family to another of cultivated lands in his occupation; secondly, long possession of specific parcels and sub-division among members of a particular branch; thirdly, reclamation and improvement of waste lands at considerable cost; fourthly, direct admission of parties that there had been a previous partition; fifthly, separate occupation of land, and collection of rent from the separate tenants and the institution of suits by the superior landlord against the members of the family as if they were separate tenants, and the separate enforcement of decrees so obtained;

Held, that the circumstances are sufficient to establish previous partition.

Where exclusive possession is taken of such lands as are cultivated during one season and left fallow during the two following seasons, and the owner is ousted, the mere fact that a stranger grazes his cattle during the period that the lands are not under cultivation would not interrupt the operation of adverse possession.

A co-sharer cannot be said to have been in adverse possession merely because he cultivated a larger area than what would fall to his share upon a distribution of all the lands.

In order to constitute adverse possession as against a co-sharer, there must be an assertion of hostile title for more than a period of 12 years before the commencement of the suit.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of some of the defendants in a suit for partition of joint property. The property was acquired by an ancestor of the parties to this litigation, one Sanatan, under a grant made in his favour on the 28th September 1784 by Raja Raghu Nath Narain. Sanatan left four sons, Brindaban, Janardan, Radha Churn and Ram Chandra. The plaintiffs are the sons of the representatives of the branch of Radha Churn. They are entitled, if their allegation that the property is still joint be true, to one-fourth share therein. But they claim to have acquired by purchase from two of the representatives of Brindaban half of his share, so that they are, according to these allegations, entitled to a six-annas share of the entire property. The defendants, who are the representatives of Ram Chandra, resisted the claim on the ground that there had been a previous partition about 60 years before the commencement of the suit and that consequently the property was not liable to be partitioned. They further pleaded that they had acquired a good title by adverse possession in respect of the parcels in their occupation. The Subordinate Judge has found on the evidence that the parties are in possession of unequal quantities of land; the appellants have in their possession 588 bighas, while the plaintiffs have only 286 bighas; two other sets of respondents have respectively 136 and 373 bighas. The Subordinate Judge has further found that there was no partition, as alleged by the present appellants. The view he has taken is that the parties were, by mutual arrangement, in occupation of different portions of the joint property, but that they did not intend that the distribution should be deemed permanent.

In the present appeal, it has been contended that the Subordinate Judge has taken an erroneous view of the evidence, which tends to prove that there was a partition of a permanent character, if not in respect of all the cultivable lands now in the occupation of the parties to the litigation, at least in respect of a considerable portion thereof. It has not been disputed, indeed, it is the common case of the appellants and the respondents, that the jungle lands still constitute joint property; and in any view of the case, they must be divided. The evidence has been placed before us and commented upon at considerable length. We have arrived at the conclusion that the view of the Subordinate Judge that there was no partition at any previous time cannot be supported. As was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Budhu Mal v. Bhagwan Das (1) and by the Bombay High Court in Murari Vithoji v. Mukund Shivaji (2), a partition may be occasionally established by oral evidence which, though not directly proving the factum of partition, may be of such a character as to justify the inference that a partition must have been made between the parties or their predecessors. If, for instance, each of the co-tenants has for a long period of time, occupied a distinct part of the land of the co-tenancy, has apparently exercised the rights of a sole owner and has been recognised by his companions-in-interest as entitled to possession in severalty, these facts may be treated as evidence tending to prove an antecedent partition. To take a concrete illustration, if one co-tenant owns two-thirds and another one-third of three equal parcels of land, the fact that the former was in possession of two of these parcels and transferred them by conveyance purporting to effect a transfer in severalty, may be evidence of partition. Similarly, the circumstance that one of the co-tenants has spent considerable money in improvements of the parcels in his exclusive possession may furnish evidence that the distribution of the land was intended to be permanent. Tested in the light of these principles, the appellants have a strong case. The learned Vakil for the appellants has relied upon the following circumstances in proof of his allegation of a previous partition; first, transfer by one member of the family to another of cultivated lands in his occupation; secondly, long possession of specific parcels and sub-division among members of a particular branch; thirdly, reclamation and improvement of waste lands at considerable cost; fourthly, direct admission of parties that there had been a previous partition: fifthly, separate occupation of land, and collection of rent from the separate tenants and the institution of suits by the superior landlord against the members of the family as if they were separate tenants, and the separate enforcement of decrees so obtained. In our opinion, these circumstances are sufficient to establish the case of the appellants.

Reference was made in this connection to road-cess returns filed by members of the family in 1872 and 1881. These road-cess returns by themselves are not conclusive upon the question raised. In one of them, filed in 1872, the area of the land in occupation of the persons who made the return is stated to be one-fourth, which would seem to indicate that the entire interest was deemed by the maker to be still joint and undivided. In subsequent returns, however, filed in 1881, the areas in the occupation of the different co-sharers are explicitly stated. These returns would seem to indicate that, at that time, at any rate, the parties assumed that each of them was in occupation of a separate interest. But one of the strongest pieces of evidence in favour of the appellants is furnished by the litigation of 1883 commenced by Watson and Company, the superior landlords, against the members of the family. To recover arrears of cesses, the Watsons brought a suit in which the representatives of the four branches of the family were joined as defendants. They took exception to the frame of the suit on the ground that they ought to have been separately sued, because they held distinct interests in the property for which cesses were claimed. Effect was given to this objection and the decree made in favour of the Watsons was, though drawn up as one decree, really a distinct and separate decree against the representatives of each branch of the family. This was followed in the same year by other suits for recovery of cesses, which were commenced against the representatives of the different branches separately and decreed accordingly. There are also road-cess returns of 1893 which indicate that the parties were in separate possession of different parcels of land in their own right and had different sets of tenants in occupation of the parcels allotted to each of them. In addition to evidence of this class, we have important evidence to show that there were separate transactions by the representatives of each branch of the family. Our attention has been drawn to a decree for rent obtained by the appellants against their own tenants on the 11th September 1890. We also find on the record a conveyance executed on the 7th February 1910 in favour of the plaintiffs by their tenants. The most striking piece of evidence under this head, however, is a mortgage executed on the 8th August 1868 by the defendants first party in favour of the defendants third party. This was followed by a conveyance executed on the 8th July 1879, apparently in satisfaction of the mortgage. The Subordinate Judge has held that effect must be given to this transaction, in other words that the purchaser under this conveyance would be entitled under the decree in this suit to exclusive possession of the property acquired by him. The Subordinate Judge has failed, however, to appreciate the bearing of this piece of evidence upon the question in controversy. Here is a transaction in which there is an implied assertion accepted by the opposite party, that the property transferred belonged exclusively to the mortgagor-vendor. This is not consistent with the case of the respondents that there was at no time previously a partition between the parties. We have next a conveyance by the defendants first party in favour of the defendants third party on the 13th December 1892, in which there is a recital of a partition of some of the lands owned by the parties. There is also a provision in the conveyance that, after the trees had been cut, the lands would be divided; this fits in with the case of the appellants; the parties contemplated that this decision would take place in continuation of the previous partition. We have also a sale certificate, dated the 1st July 1907, of a purchase made by the plaintiffs at a sale in execution of a decree against two of the defendants. This also would support the contention of the appellants that there had been a previous partition and that what the plaintiffs purchased was really the exclusive property of the judgment-debtors. Our attention was also invited to the plaint and written statement in a suit commenced by the third party defendants against the first party defendants on the 9th February 1897. The judgment in this case, which was not produced in the Court below, has been placed before us, and reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellants upon a recital therein that the entire mousah had been admittedly divided and that the co-sharers were in possession of different parcels of land as representing their specific shares. Too much stress, however, need not be placed upon this passage in the judgment even if it be conceded that the judgment is admissible in evidence, because it does not carry the matter further than the admissions in the written statement of the respondents, dated the 5th April 1897. This indicates that there was an admission to the effect that the cultivated lands had been divided, but the statement was qualified to this extent that the division was only approximate. We next come to the litigation of 1903 commenced by the first party defendants for partition of the disputed property. The second party defendants stated in this itigation that there had been a partition. The present plaintiff also stated that there had been a partition; but he qualified this by adding that the partition was a guess. This plaint was filed on the 4th February 1903, but ultimately the suit was withdrawn.

We have, therefore, a considerable body of evidence indicating that the parties have been in possession of separate parcels of land for many years, that they have effected improvements upon the parcels in their possession at considerable cost and labour, that there have been transfers inter se and that the parties have acted on the assumption that their possession was not liable to be disturbed at the instance of their co-sharers. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the inference may legitimately be drawn that there was a previous partition amongst the predecessors of the parties. It is impossible for us, however, upon the evidence, to ascertain the precise lands in respect of which the partition took place. The learned Vakil for the appellants fully appreciated the difficulty in his way created by the undoubted fact that his clients are in possession of a considerably larger quantity of land than any of the other sets of defendants. He attempted to explain this inequality by a suggestion that at the time of the partition valuable cultivated lands might have been assigned to the other parties, whereas in his share fell a larger quantity of waste lands. But there is no foundation laid in the evidence for such a theory. On the other hand, the learned Vakil for the respondents invited our attention to the road-cess returns of 1881, from which it appears that the predecessors of the parties were in occupation of nearly the same quantity of cultivated land and the remainder also was treated as equally owned by them. This, in our opinion, indicates that the original partition was not unequal. In fact, the road-cess returns must have been prepared in consultation, as indicated by the extraordinary resemblance in the recitals contained therein. We may fairly take it, therefore, that in 1881 the common case of the parties was that there was a previous partition under which they were in occupation of nearly equal quantities of land. But the actual areas given in the road-cess returns cannot be implicitly accepted as accurate; in other words, we cannot assume that the parties at the time were in occupation of the precise quantity, namely, about 55 bighas of cultivated land, stated in these documents. If, therefore, we start with the position that there was an equal partition about 60 years before the commencement of the suit and that for a period of 30 years the parties were in occupation of equal quantities of land, the question arises, how have the present appellants come to occupy a considerably larger quantity of land than the representatives of any of the other branches of the family? The reason is not far to seek. Each branch of the family has re-claimed and brought under cultivation the waste lands left joint at the time of the partition. The members of the branch to which the appellants belong, are more numerous than the members of the other branches, and it is not unfair to presume that they have successfully brought under control and cultivation a much larger quantity of land than the representatives of the other branches. The Subordinate Judge, consequently, directed very properly that each party should retain possession of the cultivated land and of all lands upon which they had spent labour and capital. A difficulty, however, arises as regards the present appellants, because upon the figures placed before us, it seems more than likely that they are now in occupation of a larger quantity of land than could be allotted to their share upon a partition of the entire village. It has been stated to us that the quantity of danga and the jungle lands cover 1384 and 649 bighas, respectively. The total quantity of land in the village, therefore, may be approximately taken as 2033 bighas, out of which the appellants would be entitled to about 508 bighas as representing their share. They are, however, said to be in occupation of 588 bighas. The question consequently arises, whether they are liable to be deprived of the lands they hold in excess of what would represent their share in the entire village. On this part of the case, it has been contended by the appellants that they have acquired a good title to this excess by adverse possession. Now, it is fairly clear that the quantity of cultivated lands in the occupation of the appellants is not in excess of a quarter of the entire land of the village. Consequently no question of adverse possession arises in respect of these lands, and the plaintiffs do not, indeed, desire to deprive the appellants of their possession of these lands. The remaining lands in the occupation of the appellants are stated to be gora and danga lands. The Subordinate Judge has held that the appellants did not spend capital or labour on lands of this description. It has been stated on behalf of the respondents that the Subordinate Judge meant to apply this qualification to lands which at the time of the suit were gora and danga lands. Lands which at one stage fell within this description but had been subsequently brought by the appellants under cultivation, would fall within the description of cultivated lands. In respect of these danga and gora lands, it has been contended on behalf of the appellants that they have acquired a good title by adverse possession. This view has been controverted by the respondents and it has been suggested that as these lands are cultivated once in three or four years and as between two periods of successive cultivation, they are used as grazing land where the cattle of strangers as also of the plaintiffs would graze, there was not such adverse possession on behalf of the defendants as could extinguish the title of the plaintiffs. It has further been contended upon the authority of the decisions in Watson & Co. v. Ramchund Dutt (3) and Jogendra Nath Roy v. Baladeb Das (4) that there could not be adverse possession as between co-tenants in respect of lands of this character, used in the manner just indicated. On behalf of the appellants reliance has been placed in answer to this argument upon the cases of Gangadhar v. Parashram Bhalchandra (5) and Ayennessa Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf (6). In our opinion the contentions of both the appellants and the respondents are unsound. If lands of this character can be used only in the manner indicated, that is, cultivated during one season and left fallow during the two following seasons, when exclusive possession is taken of such lands and the owner is ousted, the mere fact that a stranger grazes his cattle during the period that the land is not under cultivation, would not, in our opinion, interrupt the operation of adverse possession. At the same time we are not able to accept the contention of the appellants that merely because they cultivated a larger area than what would fall to their share upon a distribution of all the lands, they were in adverse possession. In order to constitute adverse possession as against their co-sharers, there must be an assertion of hostile title; but the evidence does not show that there was such an assertion of hostile title for more than a period of 12 years before the commencement of the suit. The appellants are further met by the difficulty that they are not able to identify the particular lands in respect of which they exercised acts of adverse possession. Under these circumstances, we are not in a position to uphold the contention of the appellants that they acquired a good title by adverse possession in respect of danga and gora lands as against the plaintiffs. One direction, however, must be given in modification of the decree of the Subordinate Judge. He has rightly held that each of the parties should be retained in possession of the lands upon which they have spent capital and labour. In so far, however, as the appellants are concerned, it must be ascertained in the first instance whether they are really in occupation of more lands than they would be entitled to occupy upon a partition. We, therefore, direct the Subordinate Judge to appoint a Commissioner to make a survey of all the gora lands of the village and to ascertain the area thereof. The appellants will be entitled to one-fourth share of the total area. If the area thus determined falls short of the area now in their possession they must surrender the excess; and to determine the lands which they should be called upon to surrender in favour of their co-sharers, such lands only will be taken away from them as they have occupied last. In other words, the Court must take evidence to determine on this part of the case what lands have been recently occupied by the appellants, and they will be deprived of such lands to the extent necessary. If in the process it is found necessary to divide a compact block, the Subordinate Judge will be at liberty to adjust matters by a suitable order for the payment of owelty money. It is to be distinctly understood, however, that this last direction relates only to gora and danga lands. In so far as cultivated lands are concerned, none of the parties will be deprived of the lands already in their possession. Subject to this modification the other directions given by the Subordinate Judge will stand confirmed. There will be no order for costs in this Court.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), ss. 115, 117 (2)—Order by Revenue Officer—Partition—Discretion—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11.

When a Revenue Officer is acting, not as a Court under section 117 (2) of Act XVII of 1887, but merely as a Revenue Officer dealing with an application for partition, the proceeding is an administrative adjustment, to which the principle of res judicata, as embodied in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, does not apply. But it does not mean that the orders passed by a Revenue Officer have no legal finality.

Under section 115 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, a Revenue Officer has discretionary authority absolutely to disallow an application for partition, and he ought to use this authority in every instance in which the same question has been previously decided, unless it is shown that the circumstances which made the previous order appropriate have changed.

Petition for revision against the order of the Commissioner of Umbala Division, dated the 14th March 1914.

Mr. Mahabir Pershad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Dwarka Pershad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I have heard Pleaders for the parties. It is admitted that on 14th October 1909, the Assistant Collector of Rupar rejected an application for the partition of the same land which is the subject of the present proceedings. The order against which this application has been lodged is one affirming upon appeal the Collector's order that partition of the land shall proceed, if Nathu (present applicant) fails to sue to establish proprietary right on 2 bighas of it by a stated date. And the issue before me is virtually this, whether, by virtue of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code or by any other principle of law, the order rejecting the partition in 1909 renders illegal the order permitting the partition in 1913.

It is plain enough that a Revenue Officer acting as a Civil Court under section 117 (2) of Act XVII of 1887 is properly described as a Court trying a suit and that if, in this capacity, a Revenue Officer had decided a partition question in issue between the parties to partition proceedings, section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, embodying what is commonly described as the principle of res judicata, would be a bar to the re-decision of the same question between the same parties. The position is, however, an entirely different one when the Revenue Officer is acting, not as a Court under section 117 (2), but merely as a Revenue Officer dealing with an application for partition. In this capacity, he acts as an administrative authority, not as a Court, the proceeding is an administrative adjustment, not a suit, and the decision is embodied in an order, not in a decree. As was held by the Financial Commissioner in Mallik Fateh Sher Khan v. Mallik Sher Bahadoor Khan (1), where the question in issue was the form in which a jagirdar was entitled to collect revenue, and the claim had been disallowed in 1862, I hold that the matter is an administrative one, to which the principle of res judicata as embodied in section 11 of the present Civil Procedure Code has no application.

The Pleader for the applicant has not felt able to argue before me that section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code bars the re-decision in 1913 of the question whether partition should be allowed, but he has urged with very good reason that there must be some finality about the orders of Revenue Officers, and that it would be most inconvenient and improper if every one who had been disappointed over an application for partition were at liberty to start fresh proceedings over the same issue.

There is no doubt that this contention is correct. But the decision that section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to the partition orders of Revenue Officers does not connote a decision that such orders will henceforth have no legal finality Under section 115 of the Land Revenue Act, a Revenue Officer has discretionary authority absolutely to disallow an application for partition: and he ought to use this authority in every instance in which the same question has been previously decided, unless it is shown that the circumstances which made the previous order appropriate have changed.

A very common instance of a change of circumstances affecting the propriety of a partition is the introduction into a village of a new means of irrigation, converting uncultivable land into cultivable land. But changes in methods of cultivation, whatever the cause, must always tend to carry with them changes in the manner in which land is held: and the recent discovery in the north-west of the Punjab that barani cultivation with profit is possible over extensive areas where it was formerly regarded as hopeless, is another instance of a change which may make it reasonable, and even necessary to allow partition of areas where partition has formerly been disallowed.

In the present case, I find that the refusal of partition in 1909 was based upon the belief that the point in dispute between the parties could, and would, be appropriately dealt with by action under section 150 of the Land Revenue Act. It was supposed that Nathu, the present applicant, was prepared to surrender certain land which was in his possession. His subsequent proceedings showed that this was not the case, for he obtained from a Civil Court a decree that he was entitled to retain possession of that land until partition should take place.

In the circumstances I hold that the Officers who dealt with the application in 1913 were justified in declining to exercise their discretionary authority to disallow partition. notwithstanding the opposite decision in 1907. I reject the application for revision.

Revision rejected.

Pre-emption decree—Jurisdiction of Court to extend period fixed for payment—Application for extension of time—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 148.

A Court has no jurisdiction to extend the period fixed for payment in a pre-emption decree, whether the application for extension is made before or after the expiration of the period permitted:

Narendra Bahadur Singh v. Ajudhya Prasad, 5 Ind. Cas. 443; 13 O. C. 28 and Bachchu Lal v. Raja Ram, 19 Ind. Cas. 347; 16 O. C. 5, referred to.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated 15th October 1914.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. Wasir Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki has, by his order of the 15th October 1914, extended the time allowed by Decree No. 82, passed in favour of Musammat Mahmud-un-nissa, plaintiff, within which she was permitted to exercise a right of pre-emption over certain landed property. The period permitted by the decree expired on Sunday, the 21st June 1914. On the 23rd June 1914, the plaintiff presented an application in which she requested that a period of two months' further grace should be allowed to her. That application was accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge and permission was given in the order of the 15th October. Musammat Hasib-un-nissa, a party to the decree, has applied to this Court under the provisions of section 115, Act V of 1908, asking that the order should be set aside as being without jurisdiction. A Bench of this Court decided in Narendra Bahadur Singh v. Ajudhya Prasad (1) that the general provisions of section 148 of Act V of 1908, this being the section under which the learned Subordinate Judge considered that he had jurisdiction to extend the time, related only to proceedings antecedent to the passing of a final decree, and laid down that when once such decree has been passed the power of the Courts is limited by the general principle that once a judgment has been pronounced and the decree signed such final decree cannot be altered except under the provisions of section 152 or Order XX, rule 3, or those relating to review of judgment, except in cases in which power to grant further extension of time has been expressly reserved to the Court. In that decision the question of jurisdiction to extend the period given in a decree in a pre-emption suit was considered, and the Bench arrived at a finding that no power to grant further extension of time had been given in connection with decrees in pre-emption suits. The same principle was enunciated by a single Judge in Bachchu Lal v. Raja Ram (2). According to the principles accepted in both these decisions, the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to extend the period. He did not apprehend the principle underlying these decisions. He considered that, if the applicant had applied before the period allowed by the decree had expired, he would have jurisdiction to extend the time. On the facts it does not appear that the application in question was made before the period expired. But even had it been so made, the Court had no jurisdiction to extend the period, for the principle laid down in these rulings is that the provisions of section 148 apply to acts prescribed by the Code, and not to acts prescribed by decrees which have become final. Such being the case, it is immaterial whether the application is made before or after the expiration of the period permitted. We have been asked by the learned Counsel for Musammat Mahmud-un-nissa to re-consider the question and to arrive at a conclusion different from that at which the Courts have previously arrived. We should not be disposed to act in contravention of the doctrine of stare decisis except for very special reasons. No such reasons are present in this case.

We, therefore, find that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to pass the order in question, and as such it is set aside accordingly. Musammat Mahmud-un nissa will pay her own costs and those of the applicant in both Courts.

Order set aside.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 180—Sale in execution—Application for delivery of possession.

Where an auction sale was confirmed before the Limitation Act of 1908 came into force but the application for possession of purchased property was made after the operation of the Act, it is governed by Article 180 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act of 1908 and is barred, if not brought within three years from the date when the sale became absolute Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Bhagalpore, dated the 6th May 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court of that place, dated the 25th of February 1911.

Moulvi Syed Mahomed Tahir, for the Appellant.

Moulvi Khurshed Hossain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of application by a decree-holder, auction purchaser, to be placed in possession of the purchased property. The sale was confirmed in 1902. He applied for a sale-certificate in December 1908 and obtained a certificate on the 2nd January 1909. This application was presented on the 29th August 1910. The Court of Appeal below has held that the case is governed by the Limitation Act of 1877, but that the application is barred by time on the strength of the decision in Ranjit Singh v. Baldeo Singh (1). The auction-purchaser appeals. It appears to us that the order of the lower Appellate Court must be affirmed, on the ground that the application is really governed by the Limitation Act, 1908, and not, as the Court below has held, by the Limitation Act, 1877. Under the later Act a purchaser can apply within three years from the date when the sale became absolute, and in this case that period has long expired.

Under the circumstances of the case, it appears to us that the District Judge was wrong in holding that the application was governed by the Limitation Act of 1877, but that the actual order passed by him rejecting the application was right. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Pre-emption—Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), s. 10—Decree for foreclosure in respect of under-proprietary lands—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 152 and 154—Statutory liability to pay arrears of rent cast upon transferee and land that came into his possession—Pre-emptor's liabilities to pay arrears of rent recovered from vendee.

One M, a mortgagee, obtained a decree for foreclosure in respect of certain under-proprietary lands on the basis of his mortgage, but he failed to give the notice required by section 10, Oudh Laws Act. At the time of foreclosure there were outstanding certain arrears of rent, which inspite of his objections were realized from M by the Talukdar. Subsequently the appellants instituted a suit for pre-emption and claimed a decree on payment merely of the sum which was found to be due under the foreclosure decree.

Held, that after M had obtained the under-proprietary tenure by foreclosure, it was impossible for him to escape the statutory liability cast by sections 152 and 154 of the Oudh Rent Act both upon the transferee and upon the land which came into his possession.

Held, further, that plaintiffs who were seeking to have themselves placed in the situation in which M had stood at the time he obtained foreclosure, could not avoid any liability to which M was then subject.

Held, also, that the payments made by M were in the nature of salvage made to save the property from sale, and on that principle also the plaintiffs were bound to pay the amount.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. Wasim and Sami Ullah Beg, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These cross-appeals have arisen out of a pre-emption suit brought by

Hazari Lal and another, the appellants in Appeal No. 229, against Ram Narain and others, respondents. The facts of the case are as follows: Two persons, Paijnath and Jagannath, who were the owners of an under-proprietary tenure, executed two deeds of mortgage in favour of one Manni Ram, who is now represented by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in the suit. One of these mortgages was dated 21st of November 1893, the other was dated the 10th of September 1895. The mortgages were by way of conditional sale and on the 8th of February 1907, the mortgagee having brought a suit for foreclosure got a decree, which was made absolute on the 9th of September 1907. The amount which was found to be due in respect of the mortgage at the time the decree was made absolute was Rs. 1,883-11-3. This sum included interest, which was awarded under the preliminary decree. At the time when Manni Ram brought his suit for foreclosure, he failed to give the notice which is required by section 10 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876). The present suit for pre-emption was brought on the 25th of October 1912 and was within limitation, it being admitted that the period of limitation in cases of this kind is six years from the date on which the mortgage is finally foreclosed. The defendants who represent the mortgagee did not deny the right of the plaintiffs to have pre-emption, but they denied that they were entitled to have pre-emption upon payment only of the sum of Rs. 1,883-11-3. In addition to this money they claimed two other items which are in dispute in Appeal No. 229 of 1913. One of these was a sum of Rs. 958-11-3, the other was a sum of Rs. 268-1-1½. The first-named sum represented a payment which Manni Ram had to make to the superior proprietor after he foreclosed the mortgage, on account of arrears of rent which were due to the superior proprietor in respect of the under-proprietary tenure. The sum was due in respect of rent accruing prior to the year 1314 Fasli for which the superior proprietor, Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh, obtained a decree on the 5th September 1905 against Musammat Lachmin, the widow of Jagannath, one of the mortgagors. The Talukdar took out execution of this decree after Manni Ram had obtained foreclosure. He applied to have the under-proprietary holding sold in execution of his decree. Manni Ram objected that he was not liable to pay the decretal amount, inasmuch as he had not been in possession of the share during the period for which the arrears were payable. His objections were disallowed. It was held that the Talukdar was entitled to bring the property to sale in execution of his decree. The consequence was that in order to avoid the sale of the property Manni Ram was obliged to pay Rs. 958-11-3 to the Talukdar. Similarly it is said that Manni Ram was further obliged to pay to the superior proprietor a sum of Rs. 268 odd on account of arrears of rent for the years 1314-15 Fasli. The defendants in this suit claimed, therefore, that the pre-emptors were not entitled to get possession of the property without paying these two sums, which had been properly spent by Manni Ram in saving the property. It was argued that as these payments had preserved the property from sale, the plaintiffs were bound to re-imburse Manni Ram's representatives for the sums which were thus applied. The contention in appeal is that the pre-emptors were entitled to have pre-emption on payment merely of the sum which was found to be due under the foreclosure decree. The lower Appellate Court found against the plaintiffs on this point. The learned Judge relied upon the terms of section 12 of the Oudh Laws Act, the second clause of which provides that on completion of the purchase the person exercising the right of pre-emption shall be bound to pay to the mortgagee or his successor-in-title the amount specified in the notice, together with interest on the principal sum secured by the mortgage at the rate specified by the instrument of mortgage, for any time which has elapsed since the date of the notice, and any additional costs which may have been properly incurred by the mortgagee or his successor-in-title. The learned Judge was of opinion that these two items which have been referred to above were "additional costs" within the meaning of the expression as used in this section. It would, I think, be difficult to support the reasoning of the learned Judge in this matter, but apart from the language of section 12 it appears to me clear that these pre-emptors were under an obligation to re-imburse to Manni Ram's representatives any sums paid by Manni Ram on account of arrears of rent accruing for any period prior to the time of his getting possession after foreclosure. In this connection I would refer first to the provisions of sections 152 and 154 of the Oudh Rent Act. Section 152 lays down, if there is a decree for an arrear of rent due in respect of an under-proprietary right, the interest of the judgment-debtor in that right may, subject to the provisions of the Act, be sold in execution of the decree. Section 154, sub-section (2), declares that where after the passing of the Act an under-proprietor transfers his rights or any part thereof in land, and the transferee enters into possession, the transferee shall, subject to any agreement in writing with the proprietor to the contrary, be liable to pay to the proprietor any arrears of rent due in respect of the land at the date of the transfer. It seems to me from a consideration of the language of these two sections that after Manni Ram had obtained this under-proprietary tenure by foreclosure, it was possible for him to escape the statutory liability which these sections cast both upon the transferee and upon the land which has come into his possession. It follows that at the time Manni Ram foreclosed the mortgage he became, by virtue of section 154, sub-section (2), liable for any arrears of rent which were due on the transfer. The sum of Rs. 958-11-3 was due in respect of arrears for the years 1309-1312 Fasli, which expired long before he obtained possession by foreclosure. The other sum of Rs. 268 odd is said to have been paid on account of arrears due for the years 1314 and 1315 Fasli. The proof of payment of this sum is to be found in Exhibit A2, a receipt for Rs. 730-13-6 paid on the 22nd December 1909, in which sum this amount of Rs. 268 odd is said to be included. Details of the items which go to make up this aggregate of Rs. 730-13-6 are to be found endorsed upon the receipt. From the endorsement it appears that only Rs. 152-6-6 was paid for arrears of the year 1314 Fasli. The balance was paid on account of subsequent years. The year 1314 Fasli closed on the 21st of September 1907, just about the time Manni Ram got possession. The result, therefore, is to show that when Manni Ram acquired the property by foreclosure, the amount outstanding for arrears of rent was Rs. 958-11-3 plus Rs. 152-6-6, total 1,111-1-9. The law as laid down in section 154, sub section (2), of the Oudh Rent Act declares that Manni Ram was liable to pay this amount to the superior proprietor. In default of his making payment, the Talukdar could have brought the under-proprietary tenure to sale. Is there then any reason why these plaintiffs who have brought their suit for pre-emption some five years after the date of foreclosure should escape the liability to pay the above amount? The argument is that Manni Ram was under a secondary liability only—the person responsible primarily being the owner of the tenure who was Manni Ram's mortgagor, that Manni Ram's remedy after payment was by way of suit against his mortgagor and that as this remedy has become time-barred and can no longer be made available to the plaintiffs, they are not under any obligation to re-imburse the mortgagee or his successors-in-interest. But according to the language of section 154, sub-section (2), of the Oudh Rent Act above referred, to it would seem that the transferee of the under-proprietary tenure becomes directly liable to the superior proprietor. And it appears to me that the plaintiffs-pre-emptors who are seeking by this suit to have themselves placed in the situation in which Manni Ram stood at the time he obtained foreclosure, cannot avoid any liability to which Manni Ram was then subject.

Lastly, it is not to be denied that Manni Ram's failure to discharge this liability would have resulted in the loss to him of the under-proprietary holding against which the Talukdar had applied for execution. The payments made by Manni Ram were made to save the property from sale and on the principle laid down in the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Dakhina Mohan Roy v. Saroda Mohan Roy (1), the plaintiffs-pre-emptors are bound to pay. The payments were in the nature of salvage. Manni Ram was in possession under a good title by foreclosure (even if it was liable to be defeated by a suit for pre-emption) and the obligation of the pre-emptors to pay is based upon considerations of justice, equity and good conscience.

I hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs were liable to pay Rs. 1,111-1-9, the sum paid by Manni Ram on account of arrears due for the period previous to his getting possession by foreclosure. Of course, it cannot be claimed that the plaintiffs are liable to recoup Manni Ram or his representatives for any rent paid by them while actually in possession. They had the estate in return for the suit. The decree of the Court below must be corrected, for out of the sum of Rs. 268-1-1½ allowed by it to the defendants on account of rents for 1314 and 1315 Fasli, only Rs. 152-6-6 was due for any period previous to the date of the mortgagees getting possession by foreclosure. It is necessary, therefore, to reduce the pre-emption price by Rs. 115-10-7½. With this modification in the decree of the lower Appellate Court the plaintiffs' Appeal No. 229 is dismissed.

The Cross Appeal No 378 of 1913 can be disposed of shortly. It relates to two items, one of interest and one of costs. The claim relating to interest has been abandoned. As regards costs, it was conceded by the learned Counsel who supported the appeal after an examination of the decree that he was unable to press his claim in this respect and that the decree is correct. The cross-appeal, therefore, fails. The parties will in each of these appeals pay their own costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 20—Parties to suit, struck off before decree was passed—Power of Appellate Court to implead persons interested.

Order XLI, rule 20, of the Civil Procedure Code applies to persons who were parties to a suit; and persons are nonetheless parties because they ceased to be so before the passing of a decree. An Appellate Court is, therefore, authorised to consider whether they are interested in the result of the appeal, and to implead them if it thinks that they are so.

Mr. N. A. Vaidyanatha Aiyar, for Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

IN S. A. No. 680 OF 1913.—The learned Subordinate Judge observed that he had nothing to do with the question whether certain respondents were necessary parties to the appeal before him, because no appeal would lie against the order of the District Munsif striking off their names and there was no decree in their favour to be appealed against. He, therefore, dismissed the appeal.

We dissent from this decision. The Subordinate Judge's first reason for it is met by reference to Raja Dhamara Kumara Thimmanayanim Bahadur Varu v. Bukkapatnam Venkatacharlu (1). His second is unsound, because though there was no decree in favour of the defendants in question, the plaintiff had been refused a decree against them in his suit and had obtained no relief in respect of a part of the claim put forward in his plaint. We think that Order XLI, rule 20, of the Code of Civil Procedure clearly authorised the Subordinate Judge to consider whether these defendants were interested in the result of the appeal and to implead them, if he thought that they were so. For that rule applies to persons who were parties to the suit; and the defendants were nonetheless parties to the suit, because they ceased to be so before the passing of a decree.

The second appeal is allowed, the lower Appellate Court's decision being set aside and the appeal being remanded for re-admission and disposal in the light of the foregoing. Costs to date in the lower Appellate Court and here will be costs in the cause.

C. R. P. No. 382 OF 1913.—Second appeal No. 680 of 1913 having been allowed, this civil revision petition is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs of this petition.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 170 (3)—Decree, satisfaction of—Purchaser of part of occupancy-holding, whether entitled to make deposit.

The purchaser of a part of an occupancy-holding, which is not transferable by local custom or usage, is entitled to make a deposit under section 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Sreemutty Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhry, 27 Ind. Cas. 61; 18 C. W. N. 971; 20 C. L. J. 52, referred to.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 5th July 1913, affirming that of the Munsif, Darbhanga, dated the 15th of May 1913.

Babu Akhoy Kumar Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Rajendra Prosad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the question for consideration is whether the purchaser of a portion of an occupancy-holding, which is not transferable without the consent of the landlord, can make a deposit under section 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act against the wishes of the landlord. The purchaser made the deposit and it was accepted by the learned Munsif. The landlord then objected, but his objection was disallowed. He appealed to the District Judge, who thought the appeal was incompetent. He has now appealed to us and there is an application for the revision of the order of the Munsif. The Full Bench has decided in the case of Sreemutty Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhry (1) that the sale of a part of an occupancy-holding which is not transferable by local custom or usage, does confer an interest on the purchaser, and the landlord is not ordinarily entitled to enter on the part sold. The case of a part-purchaser, therefore, is more secure than that of a purchaser of the entire holding, in regard to whom we have just now held that he is competent to make a deposit under section 170(3), Bengal Tenancy Act. [Ahammadullah v. Harkaru Sahu (2).] Reliance is placed on behalf of the landlord on the case of Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Durga Dabe (3). That case, however, was considered by Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ., in Jugal Mohini Dasi v. Sri Nath Chatterjee (4) which supports the contention of the purchaser. The same view was held by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Mukerjee, J., in the case of Radhika Nath Sarkar v. Rakhal Raj Gayen (5). It is, therefore, quite in accordance with the latest authorities to hold that the purchaser of a part of a holding of an occupancy raiyat is entitled to make a deposit under section 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In this view of the case we uphold the order of the learned Munsif. We dismiss the appeal as incompetent with costs, one gold mohur.

Arbitration—Reference to arbitration, resiling from—Appeal against decree passed on award, grounds for.

A party cannot resile from a reference to arbitration at his sweet will and pleasure, and it cannot avail him to show that having once agreed to the reference he afterwards repented of his action.

Where the parties to a suit referred the case to arbitration and a decree was made in accordance with the award of the arbitrators:

Held, that no appeal lies from such a decree, except where the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated 10th July 1913.

Mr. Syed Ali Muhammad, for the Appellant.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is raised by the respondent to the effect that this appeal is not maintainable, on the ground that no appeal lies.

The appeal is against a decree passed upon an award made by arbitrators, and the learned Counsel for the respondent relies upon the provisions of paragrah 16 (2) of the second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, according to which no appeal lies from such a decree except where the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award.

No such ground is set out in the memorandum of appeal. On the contrary the case set up by the appellant is that the award and the decree based upon it are of no effect, because the appellant did not give her free consent to the reference to arbitration. The facts are clear and may be shortly stated as follows. The appellant was the defendant in a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent, Puttu Singh. After issues had been struck in the case, an application was made by both parties for a reference to arbitration. This was on the 29th January 1913. The arbitrator nominated by the defendant-appellant declined to act and under paragraph 5 of Schedule II a notice issued to the defendant to nominate another arbitrator in his place. She was duly served with the notice and appeared in Court and declared her refusal to nominate another arbitrator. She asked for an order superseding the reference to arbitration. This application was refused and the Court, acting under paragraph 16 (2), nominated another arbitrator to act. Another application was presented to the Court thereafter asking again for the supersession of the arbitration proceedings. This was refused in the light of the order previously passed. The appellant also took the step of presenting an application to the arbitrators in which she intimated that she declined to prosecute her case before them. An award was eventually prepared and presented to the Court. The appellant put forward certain objections, but these were withdrawn on an agreement having been made between the parties that the case might be remitted to the arbitrators for a fresh hearing at which the appellant here undertook to present her case and call her evidence. The case was sent back. Chet Kunwar's witnesses were heard and an award was returned unfavourable to her. The award was eventually accepted and a decree was passed upon it. That is the decree now appealed against.

There is no foundation whatever for any argument that the award or the decree is a nullity because the appellant did not give her consent to the reference. On the contrary it is perfectly plain that she did consent to the reference. She signed the petition for reference with her own hand. It is no doubt the fact that for certain reasons she subsequently desired to back out of the reference and to have the case tried out in Court. But a party cannot resile from a reference to arbitration at his sweet will and pleasure, and it avails the appellant nothing here to show that having once agreed to the reference she afterwards repented of her action.

The proceedings in the Court below have been strictly in accordance with law and as the appellant is unable to assert that the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award, it follows from the language of paragraph 16 (2) of Schedule II that this appeal is not competent.

The preliminary objection must prevail. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

In a mortgage suit the interest of an infant of whose existence the mortgagee had no knowledge, is represented by his father and passes to the purchaser at an auction-sale.

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Mozaffarpur, dated the 17th February 1911.

Babu Soroshi Charan Mitra, for the Appellants.

Babus Umakali Mukerjee and Baldeo Narain Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the third, fourth and fifth defendants in a suit for recovery of possession of immoveable properties purchased by the plaintiffs at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree. The mortgage was created on the 13th November 1896 by the representatives of different branches of a joint Mitakshara family. On the 20th June 1913, the mortgagee sued to enforce his security. He joined as defendants the mortgagors as also the infant sons of one of them, namely, Halli Jha and Magnu Jha, who are the third and fourth defendants in this litigation. The fifth defendant (the brother of the two defendants just mentioned) was not a party to that suit; and one of the points in controversy is, whether he was born before the mortgage suit was commenced. The suit was decreed in due course, the mortgaged properties were brought to sale and were purchased by the decree-holder himself. The purchaser has not been able to obtain possession and he has instituted this suit for declaration of title and for recovery of possession and mesne profits. His claim is resisted by the three defendants-appellants, on the ground that they are not bound by the mortgage decree and the proceedings consequent thereon.

In so far as the third and fourth defendants are concerned, their contention is that although they were joined as parties defendants, no guardian ad litem was ever appointed for their benefit, and that, consequently, they were essentially strangers to the suit and are not affected by the decree made therein. It appears from an examination of the order-sheet in the suit, that on the 20th January 1903 the mortgagee applied for the appointment of a guardian of the two minor defendants. His prayer was that their father, who was also a defendant to the suit, should be appointed guardian. Notice was served, but there was no appearance on behalf of the proposed guardian and yet the Court proceeded to appoint him as guardian ad litem. Subsequently, on the 17th March 1903, the father entered appearance and intimated to the Court that he had not received the notice issued to him. At the same time, he declined to act as guardian on behalf of his infant sons, on the allegation that there might be a conflict of interest between him and them. He, therefore, suggested that Babulal, who was related to the infants, might be appointed guardian. Notice was issued to Babulal, but we cannot trace any order by which he was appointed to act as guardian on behalf of the infants. It is also plain that he did not enter appearance at any stage of the suit to look after the interest of the infants. The result was that, in so far as the infant defendants were concerned, the suit was decreed ex parte. The decree shows, however, on the face of it, that the father of the infants was their guardian ad litem. This was clearly an error, traceable possibly to the fact that no formal order was passed by the Court to discharge the order of the 12th February 1903, by which the father had been, without his consent, appointed to act as guardian ad litem of his minor sons. Subsequently, on the 9th August 1906, the decree-holder applied to have the decree amended. The order made on this application is not on the record, but as the decree has not been altered, we may take it that the application for amendment was rejected. It is clear, upon this statement of the facts, that no guardian ad litem was ever appointed in respect of the two infants, and they are consequently in the same position as if they had never been made parties to the suit: Narsingh Narain v. Sheikh Jahi Mistry (1). It follows accordingly that the decree-holder-purchaser has not acquired the right, title and interest of the infants in the mortgaged properties. This position, indeed, has not been seriously contested on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent. But it has been strenuously contended that the Court should investigate in the present suit, whether the mortgage was executed under circumstances which might make it binding upon these two infants, and if the Court should decide in favour of the mortgagee, a decree for possession might be made in his favour, with liberty to the infants to redeem. We are of opinion that this matter should not be determined in the present litigation. The question of the true character of the mortgage was not raised in the Court below and there has been no investigation by the Subordinate Judge as to the circumstances under which the mortgage was executed. The result, therefore, is that, in so far as these two infants are concerned, it must be declared that the plaintiff has not acquired their shares in the disputed property.

In so far as the fifth defendant is concerned, his case stands on a different footing. The Subordinate Judge has held that he was born after the institution of the mortgage suit and before the mortgage sale took place. From the evidence as to the time of his birth placed before us, it is clear that neither party has correctly stated the age of the fifth defendant. We are not prepared, however, to dissent from the finding of the Subordinate Judge upon this part of the case. But it is plain that even if it be assumed that he was born before the mortgage suit was instituted, the omission to make him a party will not give him the advantage which he claims. There is nothing to show that the mortgagee was aware of his existence. On the other hand, the very fact that the mortgagee joined his two brothers as parties to the suit, indicates that if the mortgagee had been aware of his existence, he would have equally made him a party to the suit. We must take it, then, that the mortgagee had no knowledge of the existence of the fifth defendant. In these circumstances, on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in the cases of Kishen Parshad v. Har Narain Singh (2) and Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (3), it must be held that his interest was sufficiently represented by his father and has passed to the purchaser at the auction-sale (Raghoram v. Rajani Kanta, A. O. D. No. 231 of 1911, decided on the 17th August 1914).

The result is that this appeal is allowed in so far as the third and fourth defendants are concerned and dismissed in respect of the fifth defendant. The share decreed to the plaintiff will be reduced by 1/12th in respect of estate No. 18423 and by 1/18th in respect of estates No. 8398 and 8559 each. The fractions mentioned have reference to the entire sixteen annas of the estate taken as the unit.

The third and fourth defendants are entitled to their costs of this appeal. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs. They are also entitled to their costs in the Court below. As the costs of the third, fourth and fifth defendants were assessed in a lump sum, the successful defendants will be entitled to two-thirds of the amount stated in the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

Appeal partly allowed.

Mortgage—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 60, 62—Redemption of mortgage without payment of deeds of further charge—Deeds of further charge, payment of.

Section 62 of the Transfer of Property Act is a special section supplementary to the general provisions of section 60. It provides a summary remedy which is available to a mortgagor in two special cases of usufructuary mortgage (a) where the mortgagee is authorised to pay himself the mortgage-money from the rents and profits of the mortgaged property, (b) where the mortgagee is authorised to pay himself from such rents and profits the interest or the principal money. It cannot apply to cases where from the conditions contained in the mortgage, accounts have to be made up between the parties.

It contemplates the existence of only one transaction and does not at all touch the case where a usufructuary mortgage having been executed, other mortgages by way of further charge have been executed by the same mortgagor.

ZAHID ALI v. KEDAR NATH.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Tahsil Biswan, District Sitapur, dated the 24th July 1913.

Mr. Sami Ullah Beg, for the Appellant.
Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows. On the 3rd of April 1897, two persons, Zille Husain and his wife Aulia Begam, who between them owned a 4½-biswas share in Mauza Daryabad, made a mortgage of this share to Misri Lal and Manni Lal to secure a loan of Rs. 3,000. The mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage. The mortgagees were to be put in possession and to appropriate the profits of the land in lieu of interest. There was also a covenant by the mortgagors by which they made themselves liable to pay to the mortgagees any sums which they might be called upon to pay by way of enhancement of land revenue. There was also another stipulation by which the mortgagors made themselves liable for any extra sum which the mortgagees might be obliged to pay in the way of lambardari dues. In the years 1897-98 the mortgagors just mentioned sold their equity of redemption by two deeds to one Raghubar Dayal. In the year 1901 one Karam Husain brought a suit for pre-emption in respect of these sales to Raghubar Dayal and he got a decree by which he became the owner of 3. out of the 4½ biswas. In the year 1907 Karam Husain mortgaged these 3 biswas share to Hafiz Ali who was the father of the present plaintiff, Saiyed Zahid Ali. This suit, therefore, has been brought by Zahid Ali as a suit for possession by redemption. The first six defendants are the representatives of Misri Lal, one of the mortgagees, the 7th and 8th defendants are the representatives of Manni Lal and the 9th and 10th defendants represent Karam Husain from whom the present plaintiff holds as a mortgagee. The mortgagees claimed that redemption could not be had without payments which were due in respect of two deeds of further charge, one of them executed on the 10th of July 1897, to secure a sum of Rs. 200, the other dated the 6th November 1897 for a sum of Rs. 300 and the first point which arises for decision in this appeal is whether the lower Court was right in holding that in no case could the plaintiff here get redemption without paying off what was due on these deeds of further charge. As to the fact that these deeds were executed and that consideration was paid upon them there is now no dispute. The case of the plaintiff in the Court below and his case here is that he was in law entitled to recover possession of the mortgaged property without paying off the sums owing on these two deeds of further charge and for this purpose he has relied upon the provisions of section 62 of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Subordinate Judge held that that was a particular section and had no application to the facts of this case, and with that view I agree. In my opinion the contention that the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of this land without paying off the sums due on the two documents above-mentioned is untenable. Section 62 is, in my opinion, a special section which is supplementary to the general provisions of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. It provides a summary remedy which is available to a mortgagor in two special cases of usufructuary mortgage: (a) where the mortgagee is authorised to pay himself the mortgage money from the rents and profits of the property (b) where the mortgagee is authorised to pay himself from such rents and profits the interest of the principal money. It is claimed that this case falls under clause (b). The learned Subordinate Judge refused to accept this argument for he pointed out that there were other conditions in the mortgage as well, namely, one by which the mortgagors were bound to re-imburse the mortgagees for payments on account of enhanced land revenue and also another by which the mortgagors were liable to idemnify the mortgagees for sums paid by them on account of lambardari dues. That section 62 provides a special and summary remedy seems to be clear from the language employed and from the description of the cases for which the remedy is provided. The section allows the mortgagor to recover possession once the mortgagee has received satisfaction of the debt by the appropriation of the rents and profits, or in cases where the profits are applied to the payment of interest, when the period of the mortgage has expired and the mortgagor comes forward with the principal money. Obviously in cases of this kind there is no accounting to be done. From the conditions contained in the mortgage and from the time which has elapsed between the date of the execution of the deed and the date on which the suit is brought, the Court is enabled at once to decide whether, the mortgagor is entitled to possession. Further it seems to me that section 62 contemplates the existence of only one transaction and does not at all touch the case where a usufructuary mortgage having been executed, other mortgages by way of further charge have been executed by the same mortgagor. It cannot now be argued that a mortgagor who has executed deeds of further charge on the same property which was first mortgaged, may not be bound, if the deeds so lay down, to redeem all the mortgages together, and it has not been argued that in the present case the deeds of further charge do not render it obligatory on the mortgagor to redeem all the mortgages at one and the same time. I hold, therefore, in agreement with the Judge of the lower Court that section 62 has no application to this case and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession of the mortgaged property merely upon payment of the principal sum due on the first mortgage of the 3rd April 1897. This point, therefore, is decided against the appellant.

Another point raised on his behalf is that the Court below was wrong in not allowing him to redeem the entire 4½-biswas share. In order to estimate the merits of this contention it is necessary to refer to the frame of the plaint. In paragraph 8 of the plaint it was stated that under section 62 of the Transfer of Property Act the plaintiff became entitled to recover possession of the mortgaged property from the 18th of May 1912 on payment of the principal money. In paragraph 9 it was said that if for any reason the plaintiff should not be held entitled to restoration of possession, he was ready to redeem three biswas out of the four and a half biswas or, if the defendants-mortgagees insisted, the whole 4½ biswas on payment of such additional amount in respect of other mortgage-deeds as the Court might adjudge. Similarly in the last paragraph of the plaint in which the relief is set out, the plaintiff asked for possession of 4½ biswas on payment of the principal sum or of 3 biswas on payment of a proportionate amount, and that if for any reason neither of these reliefs could be granted he asked for a decree for redemption of a 3-biswas share or of a 4½-biswas share if the defendants insisted on his redeeming the entire property. The defendants did not insist on their right to compel the plaintiff to redeem the entire property. They were willing to allow redemption of a 3-biswas share only, that is to say, they accepted the offer made by the plaintiff in his plaint and that acceptance having taken place, I think the plaintiff is bound and cannot be allowed to argue here that in these circumstances the Court should have allowed him a decree for redemption of the 4½-biswas share. I find this point also against the appellant.

There remains only one other point which has been argued by the plaintiff's learned Counsel, with respect to the rate of interest in one of the deeds of further charge. I have already mentioned that the first deed of further charge bears date of the 10th July 1897. The principal sum secured was Rs. 200 and the agreement was for interest at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum, i.e., Rs. 48 a year for the Rs. 200 loan. The second deed of 6th November, 1897, was for Rs. 300 and the total interest payable in respect of this deed was Rs. 32 a year. With regard to this second deed a plea was taken in the Court below that the rate of interest provided by it was penal. This plea was accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge and I think rightly so, for there can be no question that there is a provision for enhanced interest to run from the date of the execution of the deed in, case default were made in payment of the interest provided by the bond. The learned Judge gave effect to this plea and awarded compensation at the rate of Rs. 32 per annum, simple, on the entire amount. With regard to the other deed, that is to say the deed of the 10th July 1897, the plaintiff was not in a position to raise the plea that the rate of interest was penal but he complained that it was extortionate and unconscionable. The learned Subordinate Judge refused to give the plaintiff any relief with respect to this bond and I agree with what he says in his judgment. It was not made to appear that there was any case of undue influence or oppressive dealing with the mortgagor, and there was no ground upon which the plaintiff was entitled to ask for any mitigation of the terms relating to interest. It is no argument to say, as has been said here, that because the sum which was advanced in 1897, namely, Rs. 200, has now swollen to over Rs. 6,000 by the accrual of interest, this is any reason for affording relief particularly to a person who is in the position of the plaintiff here. Since the execution of these three deeds of mortgage the equity of redemption has passed through several hands and the plaintiff now holds it as a mortgagee, and it does not lie in his mouth to challenge the rate of interest which was agreed to by the mortgagors many years before he (the plaintiff) had acquired any estate in the mortgaged property. This is the last point which was raised in support of the appeal. The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A cross-objection has been filed by the mortgagees with respect to the lower Court's order regarding the deed of further charge dated the 6th November 1897. It is not complained that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the interest provided by this bond was penal, but the objection is that the compensation which the Court awarded was not in the circumstances reasonable compensation. I have already mentioned that the Court has allowed simple interest at the rate of Rs. 32 a year on the sum of Rs. 300. I am not disposed in appeal to interfere with the discretion of the Judge of the lower Court. It cannot, I think, be said that he has failed to exercise his discretion and having regard to all the other circumstances of the case, I am satisfied that what he has allowed is sufficient. I, therefore, dismiss the cross-objection with costs.

Appeal and Cross-objection dismissed.

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17—Simple mortgage converted into usufructuary mortgage by subsequent arrangement—Mortgagee put in possession—Registration—Mortgagee, right of, to sue on original mortgage.

A simple mortgage of three groves and a house was made in favour of the plaintiff in 1874. In 1877 a part of the mortgage-money was paid by the sale of one of the groves, and it was mutually arranged that the mortgagees should be put in possession of the other two groves for 10 years and receive the profits thereof in lieu of interest upon the amount remaining due and should be entitled to foreclose if the mortgagors should fail to redeem within one year after the expiry of the ten years. The mortgagee sued for recovery of the amount on the basis of an original simple mortgage.

Held, that in order to effect a usufructuary mortgage the proceedings of 1877 ought to have been registered, but not having been registered, they took effect only as an arrangement for the payment of interest and the mortgagee was entitled to sue upon the original simple mortgage.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri.

Mr. Jogendro Nath Mukerji, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In November 1874 the predecessors-in-title of the respondents made a simple mortgage of three groves and a house in favour of a joint family of which the appellant is now sole survivor. In November 1877 there was due upon the mortgage a sum of Rs. 571. One of the mortgagors then sold one of the groves to the mortgagees for Rs. 130, and on the same date the mortgagors and mortgagees appeared before a Revenue Court and presented petitions setting out that it had been arranged that the mortgagees should be placed in possession of the other two groves for ten years and receive the profit thereof in lieu of interest upon Rs. 441, the amount then remaining due, and that if within one year after the expiry of the ten years the mortgagors failed to redeem the property, the mortgagees should be entitled to foreclose in lieu of the sum of Rs. 441 (bazarie arzi hasa baibat Kamil bad mead kara leve). Possession was delivered to the mortgagees accordingly and they have remained in possession ever since. The present suit is for recovery of Rs. 441 by sale of the two groves, on the basis of the original simple mortgage.

The first Court decreed the claim holding that the petitions of 1877 and the delivery of possession effected in pursuance thereof were not intended to supersede the simple mortgage, but were merely intended to provide for the payment of the interest.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the original mortgage had been superseded by the proceedings taken in 1877, which amounted to an usufructuary mortgage of the two groves, or rather of the trees in the groves, and, therefore, no suit could be maintained upon the original mortgage. In my opinion it is clear that the proceedings of 1877 were intended to supersede the simple mortgage. In the first place, it was obviously intended that the house should thenceforth be released from the mortgage, next, the passage quoted above from the petitions shows that the parties intended that in the event of the morgagors failing to redeem, the mortgagees might claim foreclosure on the basis of the petitions, and lastly, on any construction of the petitions the right to sue on the simple mortgage was suspended for a time at all events.

The Transfer of Property Act had not been passed when the proceedings of 1887 were taken, but the Registration Act of 1871 was in force and the question arises whether the petitions which were intended to effect the usufructuary mortgage, ought to have been registered.

For the reasons which I gave in Bharosa v. Sikdar (1), I am of opinion that they ought to have been registered and cannot be held to have effected an usufructuary mortgage if the property mortgaged was immoveable property, within the meaning of the Registration Act, and the value of the interest exceeded Rs. 100.

The Subordinate Judge held that the parties intended to mortgage the trees only, and not the land on which they stood. If this view is correct, a question would arise whether the nim, mahua and mango trees could be regarded as standing timber but, in my opinion, the intention was to mortgage the rights and interests of the mortgagors as grove-holders. The mortgagees were to take possession of the land and enjoy the income of the groves as grove-holders. According to the decision of Richards, C. J., and Banerji, J., in Sheo Nath Ram v. Sheo Ram (2) what was mortgaged was immoveable property and not merely rights in standing timber, even if all the trees in the groves could be regarded as timber trees. The interest intended to be created admittedly exceeded Rs. 100 in value.

(1) 27 Ind. Cas. 97; 12 A. L. J. 996.
(2) 23 Ind Cas. 963.

For these reasons I hold that the proceedings of 1877 did not operate to create an usufructuary mortgage of the groves, and consequently took effect only as an arrangement for the payment of the interest. The result is that the appellant is entitled to sue, as he did, upon the original simple mortgage.

I allow the appeal, reverse the decision of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court to be restored to the pending file and disposed of on the merits according to law. Costs of this appeal to be costs in the cause.

Appeal allowed; Cause remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244—Non-transferable occupancy-holding sold in execution of rent-decree—Application by purchaser to set aside sale—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 173—Fraud—Appeal.

A purchaser of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy-holding sold in execution of a decree for rent is a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and therefore, the question whether the sale should be set aside on application of the purchaser on the ground of fraud or under the provisions of section 173, Bengal Tenancy Act, is a question between the parties to the suit or their representatives, and against the decision of such question there is both an appeal and a second appeal.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 28th of November 1908, affirming that of the Munsif, first Court of that place, dated the 3rd of September 1908.

Babu Surendra Nath Ghoshal, for the Appellant.

Moulvi Muhammad Mustafa Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is the purchaser of a portion of an occupancy-holding. The lower Appellate Court appears to have taken it for granted that the holding is not one transferable by custom, and we conclude that he has come to a finding of fact upon this point with which we cannot interfere in second appeal.

It appears that the holding was sold in execution of a decree for rent on the 20th March 1908 and purchased by one Gouri Sankar Singh. On the 31st March 1908 the appellant made an application to have the sale set aside. The Munsif, who heard the application in the first instance, came to the conclusion that the auction-purchaser was not a benamidar for the judgment-debtor and that, therefore, section 173, Bengal Tenancy Act, did not apply. He accordingly dismissed the application. The District Judge, to whom the applicant appealed, held that there was no appeal against an order under section 173 and declined to interfere.

It is brought to our notice by the learned Pleader for the appellant that in his application of the 31st March 1908, the appellant sought relief not only under section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but also under section 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, and sections 310A, 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Now it is clear that section 174 does not apply, because the application has not been made by the judgment-debtor. As regards section 173, the Munsif has found that the auction-purchaser is not a benamidar for the judgment-debtor. This being so, section 173 does not apply unless section 244, Civil Procedure Code, can be called to its assistance.

Section 310A, Civil Procedure Code, is no longer applicable to execution proceedings under the Tenancy Act by virtue of section 170, Bengal Tenancy Act, as amended by Bengal Act I of 1907.

There remains, therefore, only section 244 of the Code of 1882, which is the Code applicable to the case. Now the applicant as a purchaser of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy-holding is a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 244 [Sreemutty Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhry (1)]. This being so, the question whether the sale should be set aside on the ground of fraud or under the provisions of section 173, Bengal Tenancy Act, is a question between the parties to the suit or their representatives. Therefore, there is both an appeal and a second appeal. The case, therefore, must be remanded to the Court of first instance for an investigation into the charges of fraud. The result is that the appeal is decreed with costs which are assessed at Rs. 16, and the order of the lower Appellate Court set aside with the direction that he will remit the case to the Court of first instance for disposal in accordance with the directions herein contained.

The Rule is consequently discharged without costs.

Rule discharged.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s 5 (1), (5)—Tenure-holder—Presumption—Lease—Construction of lease.

A lease provided:

(1) that the grant was made in order that the grantee might cultivate the land after making it fit for cultivation at his own expense by his own efforts,

(2) that the grantee might enjoy the land by cultivating it or having it cultivated, and that it would be competent to the grantee to make such other arrangements or adopt such other means as he might consider necessary for cultivating the same and that the grantor would not raise any objection thereto.

There was a period of remission fixed, during which no rent was to be paid for the land itself. The rate of rent itself was fixed in perpetuity and a premium was paid by the grantee to the grantor. The area covered by the lease exceeded one hundred bighas

Held, (1) that under section 5 (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act it was obligatory upon the Court to presume that the grantee was a tenure-holder;

(2) that the terms of the lease read together with the definition of tenure-holder given in section 5 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act instead of rebutting supported the statutory presumption; and

(3) that the definition given in the section was not exhaustive.

BIBHUDENDRA MANSINGH v. DEBENDA NATH DAS.

Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Richardson, dated the 16th July 1912, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1960 of 1909, against that of the Special Judge of Cuttack, dated the 16th August 1909, affirming that of the Assistant Settlement Officer of Cuttack, dated the 20th December 1907.

FACTS of the case appear from the following judgment of Mr. Justice Richardson appealed against.

RICHARDSON, J.—This appeal is preferred by the defendant from the decree of the Court of Appeal below, which upheld the decree of the first Court in the plaintiff's favour. The suit was brought by the plaintiff under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for a declaration that the defendant is a tenure-holder under him in respect of the land to which the suit relates and for an order directing that an entry in a Record of Rights published on the 6th July 1907, to the effect that the defendant holds the land as a raiyat, be corrected accordingly.

The plaintiff is a minor whose estate is under the charge of the Court of Wards. The genesis of the suit appears from the judgment of the first Court, the Court of the Assistant Settlement Officer of Cuttack, in which an order passed by the Director of Land Records upon an inspection of the Record of Rights after its publication is cited at length.

The facts briefly are as follows. The defendant holds under a lease granted on the 7th June 1901 by the plaintiff's predecessor to Babu Gokulananda Chowdhury, who relinquished his rights in favour of the defendant by an instrument dated the 17th January 1907. The lease covers an area of about 259 acres or considerably more than 100 standard bighas. A translation of it is included in the paper-book. In the preamble the lease is described as a mukarari lease and paragraphs 1, 5 and 9 contain directions addressed to the lessee to the following effect:—Paragraph 1, "you shall cultivate the same after making it fit for cultivation at your own expense and by your own efforts."

Paragraph 5, "You shall cultivate the lands mentioned in the lease and pay rents." . . . . Paragraph 9, "You shall, by reserving water and raising bandhs . . . make it (i.e., the land) fit for cultivation according to your will and shall enjoy the same by cultivating or having it cultivated, and you shall be competent to make such other arrangement or adopt such other means as you consider necessary for cultivating the same and I shall not raise any objection thereto."

I pause to remark that it is not disputed on the plaintiff's side that the lease was granted for the reclamation of lands then waste or that apart from the presumption arising from the extent of the area, its terms are consistent with the creation of a raiyati interest. It is contended, however, that so far as the question depends on the construction of the lease, the defendant may at the least be equally well a tenure-holder or a raiyat.

In the preliminary proceedings under Chapter X of the Tenancy Act, the defendant was first recorded as a tenure-holder. The defendant lodged an objection which was summarily decided by the Settlement Officer on the basis of a petition of compromise, dated 30th January 1907, filed before him by the defendant and his sub-tenants. In that petition it is stated that the defendant had "reclaimed and made fit for cultivation" about 106 acres of the entire area and that about 48 acres of the 106 were "left in the nijchas of the said Babu" and the balance, about 58 acres, were cultivated by "Jagu Singh and others, raiyats . . . . on tenure of division of crops." So long as they "gave bhag properly" the tenants were not to be ejected, but the defendant was to be competent to eject any one of the tenants "who does not properly cultivate the land and fails to give the bhag properly or allows the land to remain waste."

This compromise, it is argued for the defendant, is in no way conclusive as to his status being that of a tenure-holder. The tenants under him might be raiyats or under-raiyats. As to the description of them as raiyats, it is argued that the petition is not of a very formal character and that the word "raiyat" is often used popularly to cover various classes of tenants. Moreover, it is said, having the petition before him, the Settlement Officer entered the defendant in the Record as a raiyat, the entry was included in the Record of Rights as finally published and its correctness has not been disputed by the persons more immediately concerned, the defendant's sub-tenants.

No witnesses were called by either party and the only documents, other than those to which I have already referred, which the Courts below appear to have had before them were, firstly, a lease dated the 4th October 1903, granted by the plaintiff's predecessor to the defendant of some land in the same village, and secondly, two petitions filed by the defendant's sub-tenants before the Settlement Officer of date prior to the petition of compromise. The lease of 1903 is expressed to have been granted for the purpose of building a house required for cultivating the land referred to in the lease of 1901, which again is referred to as an istimrari lease for cultivating that land.

As to the two petitions, the learned District Judge observes that they "show that after the first two or three years, the tenants have been cultivating the lands on half produce rents." "The defendant," he says, "was at liberty to cultivate himself or to cultivate by others, and it appears that the defendant first took one course and then the other."

On the materials I have indicated, the lower Courts have held that the defendant ought to have been entered in the Record of Rights as a tenure-holder and not as raiyat. They refer to the fact that at the present time something more than a half of the cultivated area is in the occupation of tenants. They also refer to the area of the land and the presumption that a tenant holding more than one hundred standard bighas is a tenure-holder [Tenancy Act, section 5 (5)]. They further refer to the circumstances and position of the defendant who does not belong to the cultivating classes, and reading the lease and the petition of compromise in the light of considerations of this kind, they arrive at the conclusion that the presumption created by section 103B, that an entry in a Record of Rights shall be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect, has been rebutted. For the defendant reliance appears to have been placed throughout on the terms of the lease and on the quantity of land still to be reclaimed, and it has been contended that the considerations by which the lower Courts were influenced were in the circumstances inconclusive and that there was in effect no evidence to prove that the controverted entry was wrong.

In this Court a preliminary objection was taken that the suit was incompetent because, the real dispute being as to the relations between the defendant and his sub-tenants and the latter not having been made parties, the plaintiff has no locus standi. But the objection was not taken below and I will assume that the plaintiff has an interest, pecuniary or other, sufficient to support the suit.

But the plaintiff cannot have it both ways. The suit cannot be treated as in point of form a suit between the plaintiff and the defendant and in point of substance a suit between the defendant and his sub-tenants. As the suit is constituted, the proper subject for inquiry is the contractual relations which exist between the plaintiff and the defendant, and not those which exist between the defendant and his sub-tenants. That being so, the issue to be determined is narrowed to this, whether as between the plaintiff and the defendant, the latter is a tenure-holder or a raiyat, holding in either case at a rate of rent fixed in perpetuity. The determination of that question depends primarily on the lease of 1901. If the intention of the parties can be sufficiently gathered from the terms of that document and the condition of things which existed at the time of its execution, there is no need for the present purpose to seek further and the plaintiff can derive no advantage from the compromise between the defendant and his tenants, to which he was not a party, and no advantage from such decisions as that in the case of Mohesh v. Manbharan (1), which was cited on his behalf. Now in order to ascertain the meaning of the lease, it must be read as a whole and if it be so read and if due regard be had to the state of things to which it applied, in my opinion the primary purpose it discloses was that the defendant should bring the land under cultivation by his own efforts and he is fairly entitled as against the plaintiff to claim the status of raiyat. In that view, which I conceive is consistent with the series of decisions to which I was referred, beginning with the case of Durga v. Kalidas (2), and ending with the case of Raja Promoda Nath Roy v. Asiruddin Mandal (3), the suit ought to have been dismissed.

I wish to emphasize the fact that in arriving at that conclusion I decide nothing as to the relations between the defendant and his sub-tenants, which remain precisely as they were before this ligitation was commenced.

No decision binding upon the sub-tenants can be pronounced in a suit to which they are not parties.

The result is that the appeal succeeds. The suit is dismissed and the defendant is entitled to his costs throughout.

I may add that this judgment has been delayed because I suggested a certain course to the learned Government Pleader which he subsequently found himself unable to adopt.

Babus Ram Churn Mitra and Sris Chunder Chowdhury, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent against a judgment of Mr. Justice Richardson by which he has reversed a judgment of the Special Judge who had confirmed the decision of the Settlement Officer in a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The plaintiff-appellant instituted this suit for declaration that the defendant was a tenure-holder and not a raiyat as determined in the Settlement proceedings. The defendant holds under a lease granted to him on the 7th of June, 1901. The Settlement Officer as also the Special Judge have held that the defendant is a tenure-holder but Mr. Justice Richardson has come to a contrary conclusion.

The area covered by the lease exceeds one hundred bighas. Consequently the presumption mentioned in sub-section (5) of section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is applicable. That sub-section provides that "where" as here "the area held by a tenant exceeds one hundred standard bighas, the tenant shall be presumed to be a tenure-holder until the contrary is shown." It is consequently obligatory upon the Court to presume that the defendant is a tenure-holder. The only question for determination is whether the contrary has been shown. The defendant in support of the contrary view relies upon the terms of the lease of the 7th June 1901. He lays special stress upon the first clause of the lease which shows that the grant was made to the defendant in order that he might cultivate the land after making it fit for cultivation at his own expense by his own efforts. It has been argued that the intention of the grantor was that the land should be rendered fit for cultivation and subsequently be cultivated by the grantee himself. This contention, however, is negatived by the 9th clause of the lease which provides that "the grantee may enjoy the land by cultivating it or having it cultivated, and that it will be competent to the grantee to make such other arrangements or adopt such other means as he might consider necessary for cultivating the same and that the grantor would not raise any objection thereto." It was, therefore, competent to the grantee to cultivate the land himself or to have the land cultivated by means of under-tenants. Consequently it is impossible to say that the terms of the lease negatived the statutory presumption.

The case for the respondent is not strengthened by reference to the definition of the term "tenure-holder." Sub-section (1) of section 5 provides that "tenure-holder" means primarily a person who has acquired from a proprietor or from another tenure-holder a right to hold land for the purpose of collecting rent or bringing it under cultivation by establishing tenants on it, and includes also the successor-in-interest of persons who have acquired such a right." It is plain from the very terms of this definition that it is not exhaustive. The word "primarily" indicates that this is not an exclusive definition. A person who has acquired from a proprietor a right to hold land for the purpose of collecting rents or bringing it under cultivation by establishing tenants on it, is prima facie within the definition, but there may be other persons who are tenure-holders, although they may not have acquired a right to hold land for the purpose of collecting rents or bringing it under cultivation by establishing tenants on it; in other words, it is possible for a person to be a tenure-holder although a part of the land in his occupation is cultivated by himself, and was intended to be cultivated by himself. In the case before us, it has been found that the land has been cultivated by under-tenants of the defendant. That is perfectly consistent with the inference that the defendant is a tenure-holder, although he has reserved a portion of the land to be cultivated by himself or by his servants. We are, therefore, of opinion that the statutory presumption has not been rebutted. On the other hand, there are indications in the lease itself that the grant could never have been intended to be raiyati grant. In the first place, the grant was for the purpose of reclamation, and the grantee was expected to reclaim the land at his own expense. His position consequently would hardly be intended to be as precarious as that of a non-occupancy raiyat. In the second place, there was a period of remission fixed, during which no rent was to be paid on account of the land itself. This is a term which usually finds place in leases of tenures. In the third place the rate of rent itself was fixed in perpetuity and a premium was paid by the grantee to the grantor. Taken as a whole the lease, in our opinion, makes it reasonably plain that the grant was intended to be that of a tenure: we must hold that a correct view of the status of the defendant was taken by the Assistant Settlement Officer and the Special Judge and the judgment of the Special Judge ought not to have been reversed in second appeal. The view we take is supported by the observation of Lord Davey in the case of Gokul Mandar v. Padmanund Singh (4).

(3) 11 Ind. Cas. 262; 15 C. W. N. 896.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of Mr. Justice Richardson set aside and that of the Special Judge restored.

The appellant is entitled to his costs of both appeals in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

MARUDACHALAM CHETTI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Contemporaneous documents—Sale and agreement to re-convey—Intention to create mortgage.

Where parties execute two documents within an interval of a few days of each other, one purporting to be a sale and another an agreement to re-convey, the intention is rather to create a mortgage than a sale.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 104 of 1912 preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Comibatore in Original Suit No. 453 of 1910.

FACTS of the case appear fully from the judgment.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Appellants:—The question is whether there is a contract of sale or mortgage with condition of re-purchase.

The first thing to be considered is the language of the instrument. Here the language is clear and unambiguous and does not amount to saying that "if you do not pay on a particular date the sale is void."

The words used can only convey a permanent right to purchase.

In Palaniappan v. Subbaraya Gounden (1) it was held that no oral evidence can be admitted to prove that a document is not what it purports to be.

In Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (2) there were two deeds and an agreement showing conditional sale. In Ghose on Mortgages, page 86, it is said that the inadequacy of price is not a good test.

Mr. L. A. Govindaragahva Aiyar, for the Respondent:—In Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (2) it is clear from the terms of that deed that it was an out and out sale and not a mortgage. That which was intended to be a mortgage was allowed to be redeemed after the stipulated time.

Section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act has made the position very clear.

The transaction is not such as the appellant contends. Singaram Chettiar v. Kalyanasundaram Pillai (3).

The agreement to sell, is only a convenient mode of enjoying property. It is called an absolute sale. If you do not pay, the agreement is void. In doubtful cases the presumption must be one of mortgage and not of sale.

In Ramayya v. Krishnamma (4) the agreement of sale is said to be an absolute sale. Challa Venkata Reddy v. Devabaktunni (5).

He relied upon Wajid Ali Khan v. Shafkat Husain (6); Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (7).

In Palaniappan v. Subbaraya Gounden (1) a number of cases are collected. All these cases lay down that one must go to the intention of the parties, and also the terms of the agreement are to be considered. Ayyavayyar v. Rahimansa (8), Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkatachalam (9), Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company v. North Central Waggon Company (10) can be distinguished.

Mr. T. M. Krishnasawmy Aiyar, for the Appellants, in reply:—The point for consideration is the intention of the parties from the common sense point of view.

The cases do not throw sufficient light.

In Wajid Ali Khan v. Shafkat Husain (6) there was a sale.

Section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act requires the sale to be made conditionally.

A mere agreement to convey does not convey an interest.

[AYLING, J.—In not a single case this method of reasoning was adopted. The method of reasoning now adopted was not taken by your senior in any case].

Mr. T. M. Krishnasawmy Aiyar.—The words in Wajid Ali Khan v. Shafkat Husain (6) are not found in the document.

In Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (2) it was a matter of grace.

[AYLING, J.—You say the Allahabad High Court is wrong.]

Mr. T. M. Krishnasawmy Aiyar.—I say that it proceeds on a misconstruction of the document.

With regard to the Law Weekly cases there are words from which it appears that the sale could not take place.

The earlier cases turn upon the terms of the documents.

JUDGMENT.—The question for determination in this case is whether the transaction covered by the documents Exhibits C and D was a mortgage by conditional sale or a sale with a right of re-purchase. Both the lower Courts have held that the transaction was a mortgage and not a sale. The construction of the documents is a matter of considerable difficulty, but we think on the whole that the conclusion at which the lower Courts have arrived is correct.

The two documents, Exhibits C and D, were executed on the same day and must, in our opinion, be taken together as constituting one and the same transaction in view of this circumstance. It was contended for the appellants that because Exhibit D is described as a deed of agreement and not as a counter part [as was the case in the decision in Palaniappan v. Subbaraya Gounden (1)] it is to be inferred that the parties intended the two documents to be separate and independent of each other. We think, however, that it is more reasonable to infer from the fact of execution of the two documents on the same date that the parties intended the documents to constitute a single transaction than to infer an opposite intention from the verbal distinction above referred to. Taking it, then, that the two documents represent a single transaction, we have to ascertain (to use the words of Lord Chancellor Cranworth in the case of Alderson v. White (11)] "what, upon a fair construction, is the meaning of the instruments?" And for that purpose we must endeavour to find out what was the intention of the parties in so far as it can be gathered (1) from the documents themselves and (2) the surrounding circumstances. We may for convenience briefly refer here to the previous transactions relating to the land. The first transaction is evidenced by Exhibit E. This document was executed by the two brothers, Rangasawmy and Ramasawmi Naickar, (through whom the plaintiff claims) on 13th December 1875 in favour of one Palaniyandi Udayan for a sum of Rs. 875. The document is described as a deed of conditional sale and it relates to the same land as that dealt with by the subsequent documents, Exhibits A, B, C and E. It contained a stipulation that the brothers were to have a right to re-purchase the land on re-payment of the sum of Rs. 875 within seven years from the date of Exhibit E, and in default of payment the sale-deed was "to become permanent." It is conceded for the appellants that Exhibit E was a mortgage by conditional sale. The circumstance that Exhibit E was discharged (so the lower Courts find), not within the time fixed in Exhibit E but two days later, is significant in that connection.

The next transaction is that covered by Exhibits A and B. These documents were both executed on 13th December 1882. The former is described as a deed of sale and the latter as an agreement. By Exhibit A, the brothers Rangasawmi and Ramasawmi sold the land referred to in Exhibit E to one Jagannadha Aiyangar for Rs. 1,100 and it is recited that out of that sum, Rs. 875 were to be paid to Palaniyandi Udayan with reference to Exhibit E and the balance was taken for family expenses. Exhibit B was executed by Jagannadha Aiyangar to the two brothers and it provided that on the latter paying the sale price of Rs. 1,100 "on 30th April 1893," the sale-deed was to be returned and the land delivered back. There was a provision also that if sugarcane or plantation crop was on the land on the date fixed, the amount would be received and possession delivered after harvest. Finally in default of payment at the said stipulated time, the agreement was to become null and void.

Thus under Exhibit B the two brothers had a right of re-purchase on a fixed date, namely, 30th April 1893, or after the harvest of that year. Notwithstanding, however, that Exhibit B fixed a period of about 11 years for re-purchase, we find from the next set of documents (namely, Exhibits C and D) that Jagannadha Aiyangar was paid off and the land recovered back in 1886, nearly seven years before the date fixed in Exhibit B as the date for re-purchase.

In the same way as Exhibits A and B came into existence to pay off Palaniyandi Udayam and recover the land back from him, so Exhibits C and D were executed to pay off and recover possession from Jagannadha Aiyangar. Exhibit C, like Exhibit A, is described as a sale-deed and on the face of it purports to be an out and out sale. The terms of Exhibit C are practically identical with those of Exhibit A. The points to be noted about Exhibit C as compared with Exhibit A are, (1) that the money raised under Exhibit C was only Rs. 1,000, whereas the sum paid under the earlier document was Rs. 1,100 and (2) that the recital in Exhibit C shows that the object of the transaction was to redeem the land from Jagannadha Aiyangar.

The Tamil word "* * * *" there used is the word generally employed in connection with the redemption of mortgages.

Exhibit D is in terms similar to Exhibit B, except that there is no provision for the postponement of re-purchase until after harvest.

The points which appear to us most strongly to support the view that the parties intended Exhibits C and D to represent a mortgage are these, Exhibits C and D correspond closely in terms to Exhibits A and B, and it is reasonable to suppose that both sets of documents were intended to effect transactions of similar nature. The express reference to redemption in Exhibit C in connection with Exhibits A and B indicates that by those documents a mortgage was intended. It may perhaps here be noted that Jagannadha Aiyangar, the executant of Exhibit B and vendee under Exhibit A, attested Exhibit C. The view that a mortgage was intended by Exhibits A and B is further supported by the fact that though Exhibit B provided for re-purchase on a fixed date, 11 years after the sale, Jagannadha Aiyangar accepted re-payment seven years before the due date. This fact serves as an indication that Jagannadha Aiyangar regarded the land as security for his money and was more anxious to recover that than to retain the property. Again, although disparity between the value of the land and the sum mentioned in Exhibit C may not be a strong indication one way or the other, still the fact that a sum of Rs. 1,000 only was raised thereunder, whereas a sum of Rs. 1,100 was raised by Exhibit A, tends somewhat to show that a mortgage and not a sale was intended. Otherwise, it is difficult to see why when the land was worth Rs. 1,500 (as found by the lower Courts) and a mortgage thereon had been effected only five years earlier for Rs. 1,100, the owners should have sold the land for Rs. 100 less than they were able to secure by Exhibit A.

(11) (1858) 2 De G. & J. 97 at p. 105, 4 Jur. (N S.) 125, 6 W. R. 242; 45 E R 924, 119 R. R. 38

For the appellants the cases of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (2), Ayyavayyar v. Rahimansa (8), Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkatachalam (9) and Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company v. North Central Waggon Company (10) are relied upon. The first three cases are cited as instances of transactions similar to the present where the documents were construed to be sales and not mortgages. They are illustrations of the rule of law laid down by Lord Chancellor Cranworth in Alderson v. White (11) that an absolute conveyance, containing nothing to show that the relationship of debtor and creditor is to exist between the parties, does not cease to be an absolute conveyance and become a mortgage merely because the vendor stipulates that he shall have a right of re-purchase. But they are not of much assistance in construing the present documents, inasmuch as in each case there was some indication that nothing more than a sale was intended or else there was no sufficient indication that a mortgage was intended. We think, therefore, it is unnecessary to consider these cases in detail. The case in Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company v. North Central Waggon Company (10) was cited in support of the contention that as there was no loan, there was no debt, and, therefore, no mortgage. As to this the learned Vakil for the respondent referred us to a passage in Dr. Ghose's book on Mortgages at page 85 (4th Edition). There the author in the course of discussion of mortgages by conditional sale observes: "The test, therefore, whether the apparent vendee can exercise the rights of a creditor, cannot with propriety be applied in this country and the broad rule laid down in Alderson v. White (11) 'no debt no mortgage' may perplex, but cannot guide, our Courts." This passage has been quoted with approval in a recent case in this Court [Palaniappan v. Subbaraya Gounden (1)]. Seeing that mortgages by conditional sale begin with an ostensible sale and that it is not necessary that the mortgagor should make himself personally responsible for re-payment of the money [Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (7)], the absence of clear indication of the relationship of debtor and creditor is to be accounted for by the peculiar nature of the transaction itself and cannot of itself show that there is no mortgage.

The cases upon which the respondents relied were Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (7), Wajid Ali Khan v. Shafkat Husain (6), Palaniapan v. Subbaraya Gounden (1) Singaram Chettiar v. Kalyanasundram Pillai (3). The secondand fourth of these cases seem to us to approximate somewhat closely to the present. In the case of Wajid Ali Khan v. Shafkat Husain (6) the only difference appears to be that in the sale-deed in that case there was a term that the sale was to be subject to the contemporaneous agreement to re-sell, thus incorporating the agreement in the sale. This, we think, is not a material difference In the case of Singaram Chettiar v. Kalyanasundaram Pillai (3) the facts were very similar to the present. As in this case, there was a series of prior transactions in similar terms and the terms of the agreement for re-purchase in that case were very analogous to the terms of Exhibit D.

In both these cases the documents were construed to be mortgages by conditional sale, and not sales.

The respondent also relies upon the observation in the latter case that in cases of this kind the presumption is in favour of a mortgage being intended rather than a sale. The same view is taken by Dr. Ghose at page 87 of his work on Mortgages, where he states that in doubtful cases the Court leans strongly to the construction most favourable to the person claiming the right to redeem. This view may fairly be applied in the circumstances of this case.

On careful consideration of the instruments in question, we accept the contention of the respondent and hold that the lower Courts have rightly construed them as constituting a mortgage rather than a sale with a right of re-purchase. The time for redemption is extended by three months from this date.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 122 of 1912, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Madura, in Original Suit No. 33 of 1911.

FACTS.—The suit was by the plaintiffs to establish the right of the 1st plaintiff to succeed to her deceased husband's six months' turn to the office of pujari in the Mottagopuram Mahamuneswarar temple in Madura and the right of the 2nd plaintiff to do the duties of such pujari as the proxy appointed by the 1st plaintiff. The contention of the defendant was that the 1st plaintiff, by the custom of the Temple, was disentitled by reason of her sex to succeed to the religious office and that the 2nd plaintiff, the proxy appointed, had no right to perform the duties thereof and that in any event, the 1st plaintiff's right to nominate a proxy was restricted to the family of her husband. Both the lower Courts held against the defendant and decreed the suit. The defendant thereupon preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Mr K. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Appellant:—The respondent being a woman could not inherit the office of pujari. Even if there is such a custom it is illegal. See Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (1). A woman cannot succeed to offices involving spiritual ministrations. See also Janokee Dabea v. Gopaul Acharjea (2), Mujavar Ibrambibi v. Mujavar Hussain Sheriff (3). It is not a new principle, but only the logical result of the previous decisions. The cases where woman have been allowed to succeed are cases of succession to property burdened with the service and where the remuneration for the office does not exhaust the income. But where, as in this case, the remuneration is made up solely of voluntary offerings or where the entire income of the property forms the remuneration for the office, a woman cannot succeed thereto and cannot claim to have the services performed by proxy.

Mr. T. Narasimha Iyengar, for the Respondents:—The principle enunciated for the first time in Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (1) is against the current of previous decisions and ought not to be followed. See Subraya Kakramaya v. Subraya Padyayya(4), Mutteri Pattabhi Ramanujacharyulu v. Peduti Alagasingaracharyulu (5), Bhaiaji Thakur v. Jharula Das (6) and Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Halder (7). In every one of the above cases a woman was allowed to succeed to a religious office and to get the services performed by proxy. Even in the case of Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (1), the other learned Judge, Tyabji, J., does not agree to the principle contended for.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Iyengar in reply:—The cases cited do not lay down that a woman can succeed. The right was not questioned but was taken for granted as existing In Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (1), the right was challenged and decided against JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was instituted to establish the right of the 1st plaintiff to conduct the puja of the Mottagopuram Mahamuneswarar Temple in Madura by deputy, and to enjoy the emoluments attached to the office of pujari. There were other subsidiary reliefs asked for in the plaint, but this was the chief one. Both the lower Courts have held, against the contentions of the appellant-defendant (1), that the plaintiff was not disqualified by her sex from holding the office and (2) that in selecting a deputy to perform the duties she was not restricted to members of the family of her husband and appellant. In other words she was entitled to appoint the 2nd plaintiff. They have, therefore, decreed in her favour.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Iyengar, who argued the case for the appellant, admits that as regards the second point there are concurrent findings of fact which he is not entitled to question, but as regards the first point he relies on a very recent judgment of this Court reported as Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavana Gurukkal (1), and argues that the finding of the lower Courts must be set aside as illegal.

The question whether the 1st plaintiff is debarred by reason of her sex from holding the pujari office and (as would follow) from succeeding in the present suit is embodied in the first issue, which runs thus:—

Is it the usage of the institution that a woman cannot inherit to the office, and is the 1st plaintiff not entitled to the interest of her late husband?

The first portion is the material portion, the second being a mere corollary.

The District Munsif on a consideration of the evidence decided in plaintiff's favour, basing his decision very largely on previous admissions by defendant himself of the 1st plaintiff's right to the office.

The District Judge says at the outset of his judgment: "The first contention of the appellant as defendant in the lower Court was that the 1st plaintiff could not inherit the office entitling her to the rights which her husband had to a six months' turn of puja in the temple referred to in the plaint. This contention has now been given up. It is conceded that the office has passed to the 1st plaintiff, and the appeal is limited to the question of the extent of her rights of appointment of a deputy, as she, being a woman, is admittedly incompetent to perform the functions of the office herself".

It must, therefore, be taken that there are concurrent findings of both Courts on this issue, which is on the face of it one of fact, and in the District Court the finding was acquiesced in by the appellant who now seeks to attack it. We are asked to set these findings aside, on the ground that they are counter to an absolute rule of law enunciated in the case above quoted by Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, i. e., that where a woman is disqualified by sex from performing the duties of a religious office, she is equally disqualified from holding the office and performing the duties by proxy. It is only if we accept this as an absolute rule of law that we think we should be justified in interfering.

We have carefully considered the judgment of the learned Judge and are satisfied that he does in effect lay this down as an absolute rule of law; but while appreciating the cogency of much of the reasoning by which he supports it, we regret that we do not feel prepared to follow him to that extent, any more than did the learned Judge who sat with him in hearing that case. The rule may be salutary, but it seems to us to run counter to ideas which have been commonly accepted by parties concerned and given effect to by the Courts for many years. If we are not mistaken, the most recent authority quoted by the learned Judge in support of his view is Mujavar Ibrambibi v. Majavar Hussain Sheriff (3), which dates back to 1880; and it is undeniable that since then, this and other High Courts have in numerous cases acted on the assumption (which was not questioned) that women could hold religious offices and get the duties performed by proxy.

Subraya Kakramaya v. Subraya Padyayya (4), Muttevi Pattabhi Ramanujacharyulu v. Alagasingaracharyulu (5), Bhaiaji Thakur v. Jharula Das (6), Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Halder (7) are all instances of this; and the list might, no doubt, be indefinitely extended. It may be that the parties concerned are so accustomed to the idea of female office-holders with proxies that it has usually not occurred to them to question the legality of such a state of affairs and that in the absence of contest, the Courts have somewhat too readily assumed it to be legal without requiring proof of a valid custom in support of it. But in the present case such a custom is found to exist and with all deference, we are not prepared to follow the learned Judge in pronouncing such a custom illegal.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RAM CHURN LAW—PLAINTIFF

versus

Sahibzadi FATIMA BEGUM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS.

Muhammadan Law—Waqf—Dedication for religious purposes—Muharram, observance of, dedication for, whether valid

Where a Sunni Muhammadan conveyed certain properties of his to his grand-daughter and grandson under a deed of waqf for the "service of Imam Hossain and Hassan and for religious purposes".

Held, that the deed was valid and operative as a deed of waqf and that the trustee under the deed could not alienate the property by sale or mortgage.

A dedication of property for the observance of the Muharram constitutes the service of man and the good of humanity, though to a limited section, as it entails the feeding of the poor and distribution of alms to the needy.

Mr. B. Chakravarti (with him Messrs. J. E. Bagram and Ghatak), for the Plaintiff.

Mr. A. Rasul (with him Messrs. Zakir Ali and Ashraf Ali), for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiff seeks declaration of his title to and possession over a half share in premises No. 63, Dhurrumtola street, in the town of Calcutta and a consequent partition of the said premises. The facts material to this case are shortly these: One Prince Syeduddin, a Muhammadan of the Sunni sect, owned and possessed several valuable properties in Calcutta, one amongst them being the premises of which a half share is in suit. He conveyed the said premises to his grand-daughter, Sahibzadi Fatima Begum, and his grandson, Faizuddin, under a deed of waqf, dated the 15th of July 1864, the purpose of the dedication being stated in the deed to be "service of Imam Hossain and Hassan and for religious purposes" in the manner mentioned in the deed. The direction to Fatima Begum and Faizuddin and to their successors in the trust under the endowment is to apply the rents and profits of the premises, after defraying the cost of collection and repairs, "to the due and proper observance of the annual Muhammadan festival of the Mohurrum."

On the 20th September 1907, Fatima Begum mortgaged a half share of the premises to the plaintiff for the consideration of Rs. 16,000 advanced to her by the latter. The debt not having been repaid, the plaintiff sued Fatima Begum on the mortgage and obtaining a mortgage-decree, purchased the half share of the premises at the execution sale. Before the sale Nurul Huq, a son of Fatima Begum, addressed a letter through his Attorney to the Registrar of this Court requesting him to notify to the intending purchasers at the sale Nurul Huq's protest that the properey was a waqf and that Fatima Begum had not a saleable interest. The plaintiff, having failed to secure possession of the half share purchased by him, has instituted this suit against Fatima Begum, Nurul Huq, her son, and the other defendants who are the descendants of Faizuddin. The suit, however, has been contested by the defendants other than Fatima Begum and Nurul Huq. The plaintiff's contention is that the deed of the 15th August 1864, though on its face purporting to dedicate the property as waqf to religious uses, was in effect a deed of gift, the donor having adopted the device of a waqf in order to preserve the property for the benefit of the donees. The contesting defendants assert the validity of the alleged waqf and deny the plaintiff's title to a moiety of the premises. There is only one issue that is material to the decision of this case, namely, whether the deed of the 15th July 1864 is valid and operative as a deed of waqf. For the plaintiff, two objections are taken to the deed: (1) that the object of the waqf is not valid under the Muhammadan Law, (2) that the conveyance was in reality a gift, dedicating the property "in the way of God" not being the intention of the donor. It is contended for the plaintiff that in the deed there is no indication that a general benefit was intended to be conferred on the Mahomedan public, and a reference has been made to the case of Delroos Banoo Begum v. Ashgur Ally Khan (1) in support of the proposition that the observance of the Mohurrum by a Mahomedan is a matter essentially of a private character. I cannot accede to the proposition in the general way it has been put. If the observance of the Mohurrum entails the feeding of the poor and distribution of alms to the needy, as it undoubtedly does, the dedication of the property to such use constitutes the service of man and the good of humanity, though to a limited section. Apart from the help to the poor and the needy, the commemoration of the historic events of Karbala, keeping alive, as it does, some of the best traditions of Islam, is to my mind as good a purpose as the followers of a faith can have. I see in it the visualization of the grandest examples of courage and endurance and all that is heroic in man from the pages of Islamic history, and I think it would be wrong to exclude it from objects valid for waqf. In the case of Delroos Banoo Begum v. Ashgurally Khan (1), the decision rested on considerations that do not affect the present case. The Imambara in that case was a part of the private dwelling house of the Begum; in the present instance there is not the maintenance of a Imambara attached to a private house that is the purpose of the waqf, but it is the keeping up of the Mohurrum as an institution with all its moral effect on the general Mahomedan public. The contention that Prince Syeduddin adopted the device of a waqf and in effect made a gift is not borne out by any of the circumstances of the case. The value of the premises, half of which is in suit, was admitted to be Rs. 1,43,000 only in 1864. The Prince about that time made certain dispositions of his other properties of the value of more than Rs. 58,000 in favour of Fatima Begum and Faizuddin, and the deeds relating to these properties do not show that he adopted any device to preserve them for his grandchildren for all time. Had it been his intention to tie up the properties for their benefit by a device, we should have had a waqf of all the properties and not merely of the premises in suit. I hold that the deed of the 15th July 1864 is valid and operative as a deed of waqf. In this view Fatima Begum had not a saleable interest in the property and the plaintiff by his purchase obtained no title to it. The suit is, therefore, dismissed with costs on scale No. 2, including reserved costs, if any.

Suit dismissed.

Execution—Validity of decree, whether can be challenged in execution proceedings—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 47—Order in execution proceedings, when appealable.*

In execution proceedings it is not open to a party to challenge the validity of the decree. A Court called upon to execute a decree has no power to go behind it, and cannot entertain any objection as to the legality or correctness of the decree.

A decree, even though it is not according to law, is binding and conclusive between the parties till it has been set aside in appropriate proceedings.

An order in execution proceedings can come under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code only when it determines some question relating to the rights and liabilities of the parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree, not when it determines merely an incidental question as to the mode of conduct of proceedings.

Where a Court has refused to stay execution of a decree on application made, not on the ground that the decree was incapable of execution, but on the ground that as a proceeding to test the validity of the decree was still pending no execution should be allowed till its termination, the order does not in any way determine the rights and liabilities of the parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree and is not appealable.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 23rd March 1914.

Mr. P. N. Dutt and Babu Satis Chandra Ghatak, for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order by which the Subordinate Judge has refused to stay execution of a decree in a suit for partition of joint property. The decree was originally made on the 10th January 1912. One of the parties then applied, on the 18th March 1913, for amendment of the map attached to the decree. The decree was amended on the 13th September 1913. Thereafter the party, at whose instance the amendment had been made applied for execution of the amended decree. One of the other parties thereupon applied to the Court, which had granted the amendment, to set aside the decree, on the ground that the order had been made ex parte, without service of notice upon him. He also applied for a stay of proceedings in execution till his objection had been heard and determined. We are informed that the Court has not yet investigated whether the order was made ex parte, but it has taken up for disposal the question whether the proceedings should be stayed till the determination of that matter. The Subordinate Judge has refused to stay execution of the amended decree; and the propriety of this order we are invited to consider in this appeal.

A preliminary objection has been taken, on behalf of the respondent, to the effect that the order of the Subordinate Judge refusing to stay execution cannot be challenged by way of appeal. In answer to this objection, two points have been urged on behalf of the appellants: first, that it is open to them to contend that the decree has been imporperly amended, and, consequently, should not be executed, and, secondly, that the order refusing to stay execution is an order under section 47 of the Code of 1908 and is appealable as a decree.

In support of the first ground, reliance has been placed on the case of Abdul Hayai Khan v. Chunia Kuar (1), which was considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Fatima (2). It may be conceded that there are expressions in the judgment in the case of Abdul Hayai Khan v. Chunia Kuar (1), which tend to support the contention of the appellants; but we are not prepared to hold that it is open to a party, in proceedings in execution of a decree, to challenge the validity of the decree. It has been repeatedly held that a Court called upon to execute a decree must take the decree as it stands. It has no power to go behind the decree; in other words, it cannot entertain any objection as to the legality or correctness of the decree. The principle on which this view is supported is that a decree, even though it is not according to law, is binding and conclusive between the parties till it has been set aside in appropriate proceedings. If any authority is needed for this elementary proposition, reference may be made to the decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the cases of Sri Rajah Papamma Rao Bahadur v. Sri Vira Pratapa Porkasda (3) and Grish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareshwar Roy (4). The Allahabad High Court, in the two cases mentioned, appear to have proceeded on the theory that, when a decree is sought to be enforced against a person, he is entitled to show that there is no valid decree in existence ; but it was overlooked that the validity of an existing and operative decree cannot be determined by the Court which is called upon to execute it. We hold, consequently, that it is not open to the appellants to go behind the amended decree, and to contend, in the proceedings now before us, that the amendment was improperly allowed. They have taken proceedings to test the propriety of the order for amendment ; but until they obtain a decision in their favour in such proceedings, they must be treated as bound by the decree.

(2) 11 A. 314; A. W. N. (1889) 107.

In support of the second ground, reliance has been placed on the case of Musaji Abdulla v. Damodar Das (5), which was doubted in the case of Ramchandra Kasturchand v. Balmukund Chaturbhuj (6), and on the case of Sivasami Naickar v. Ratnasami Naickar (7), which has been overruled in Madras [Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmania Aiyar (8)] and has been repeatedly doubted in this Court, Deoki Nandan Singh v. Bansi Singh (9).

The question, whether the order of the Subordinate Judge is or is not open to appeal, must be determined with reference to the terms of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. The crucial point is, whether it relates to the execution of the decree and determines a question arising between the parties to the suit on which the decree was passed. Now, the expression "relating to the execution of the decree" is vague and sweeping ; but, as was pointed out in the case of Deoki Nandan Singh v. Bansi Singh (9), where the authorities on this subject will be found reviewed, the definition of the term "decree," as contained in section 2, must be read along with the provisions of section 47. This makes it plain that it is not every order made in execution of a decree that comes within section 47 ; if that were not so, every interlocutory order in execution proceedings, such as an order granting or refusing process for examination of witnesses, or an order on an application for adjournment, would be appealable. It was pointed out by this Court in Srinibash Prosad Singh v. Kesho Prosad Singh (10), upon a full examination of the principles and authorities bearing on this topic, that an order in execution proceedings can come under section 47 only when it determines some question relating to the rights and liabilities of the parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree, not when it determines merely an incidental question as to the mode of conduct of the proceedings: Jogodishury Debea v. Kailash Chundra Lahiry (11), Mukhtar Ahmad v. Muqarrab Hussain (12). Consequently, if the Court allows execution to proceed, overruling the contention of the judgment-debtor that the decree has become inoperative by lapse of time, the order allowing execution to proceed is an order under section 47, because the order in substance decides that the judgment-debtor is still liable to have the decree enforced against him. On the other hand, when the Court has refused to stay execution of a decree on application made, not on the ground that the decree was incapable of execution, but on the ground that as a proceeding to test the validity of the decree was still pending no execution should be allowed till its termination, it cannot be said that the order does, in any way, determine a question relating to the rights and liabilities of the parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree. An order of this nature is of an interlocutory character and does not involve, directly or indirectly, an adjudication of Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Court—Mortgage with possession—Landlord and tenant, relationship of—Second appeal—Finding of fact.

A finding to the effect that a certain person is the mortgagee and has paid consideration of the mortgage cannot be challenged in second appeal.

The mere fact that a land is mortgaged with possession and the mortgagors hold it under the mortgagee, does not create the relationship of landlord and tenant, and consequently a suit for possession of such a land is cognizable by a Civil and not by a Revenue Court.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Attock Division, dated the 15th April 1912, reversing that of the Munsif, first Class, Mianwali, dated the 22nd December 1911, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Qureshi (for Babu A. I. Roy), for the Appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiff paid the consideration for the mortgage-deed, dated the 27th March 1911, that he is the real mortgagee of the land in dispute and that Nota Ram has nothing to do with this mortgage. This is a finding of facts and cannot be attacked in second appeal.

The only ground on which the appeal was admitted to a hearing is whether the suit is excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. The contention of the defendant is that he was holding the land as a tenant under the mortgagee. But this point was not urged either in the Court of first instance or in the lower Appellate Court. The deed clearly shows that the mortgage is with possession and contains no stipulation that the defendant, mortgagor, will hold the land as a tenant under the mortgagee. On the record there is no evidence to prove the relationship of landlord and tenant between the mortgagee and mortgagor. We must, therefore, hold that the suit is not cognizable by the Revenue Courts and has been properly tried by the Civil Court. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 103A, 105, 109A—Entry in Record of Rights, Court not precluded from enquiring into correctness of—Application by landlord for fair rent—Enhancement—Jurisdiction—Appeal.

Section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act precludes a Court from going into the question whether the procedure under the Chapter has been followed and not from inquiring whether the resultant entry in a Record of Rights is correct.

Where on an application by a landlord under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the Special Judge enhanced the rent of a tenant who was described as korfa and the purpose of whose tenancy was residential, on the ground that it was below the prevailing rate:

Held, that the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply to such a tenancy and the Special Judge had no jurisdiction to enhance the rent.

Section 109A is no bar to an appeal in a case of settlement of rent in which a question of jurisdiction is definitely raised.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a case under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Special Judge has enhanced the rent of a tenancy on the ground that it is below the prevailing rate.

The tenant appeals.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the respondent that, having regard to the provisions of section 109A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as the decision of the learned Special Judge was one settling a rent, no appeal lies.

As the appeal has been argued, the question that we have to decide is, not whether the rent was rightly settled, but whether the learned Special Judge had jurisdiction to settle a rent at all. We are of opinion that section 109A is no bar to an appeal in a case of this kind, in which a question of jurisdiction is definitely raised.

The first ground taken in appeal is that the learned Special Judge had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the tenancy was not governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This was the view taken by the Settlement Officer. It is clear that the reasons which the learned Special Judge gives for overruling the decision of the Settlement Officer on this point are based upon a misconception. He proceeds on the assumption that the tenant had been entered in the record as a raiyat. The tenant has not in fact been entered in the record as a raiyat. The entry is korfa, a word which certainly does not mean "raiyat."

We have endeavoured to ascertain what meanings the word korfa can bear. We have only been able to find one, namely, "under-raiyat." Now the tenant was manifestly not an "under-raiyat." The entry was, therefore, clearly wrong in that respect.

Now the entry describes the purpose of the tenancy as residential. This appears to accord also with the facts and with the view of the Settlement Officer. This being so, we hold that the Tenancy Act did not apply. The learned Special Judge had no jurisdiction.

We have had regard to the provision in section 103A of the Act to the effect that the publication of the record shall be conclusive evidence that the record has been duly made under the Chapter. But we understand this provision to mean only that a Court is precluded from going into the question whether the procedure under the Chapter has been followed. It does not preclude a Court from enquiring whether the resultant entry is correct.

The result is that the decree of the Special Judge is set aside and that of the Settlement Officer is restored. The appellant is entitled to his costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 1—Memorandum of appeal unaccompanied by copy of decree, whether effective—Collector, whether a Judge—Acts of Collector presumption as to regularity of.

A memorandum of appeal should be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from and, therefore, no appeal is effective under Order XLI, rule 1, unless it is accompanied by a copy of the decree.

A Collector is a Revenue Officer and although he may at times have to perform judicial functions, he is not a Judge and his acts like the acts of all other Executive Officers are presumed to be regular.

Therefore, where a Collector has certified on his order-sheet that he has duly served certain notices to annul incumbrances, a Judge is not entitled without evidence to conclude otherwise.

Babu Sib Chandra Palit and Jadu Nath Mandal, for the Appellant.

Babu Jogendra Kumar Dey, for the Respondents.

SITIKANTHA ROY v. BIPRA DAS.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Bankura, dated the 29th of June 1912, reversing the decision of the Munsif.

The plaintiff brought this suit in the Court of the Munsif to recover possession of six plots of land, on the ground that he was the purchaser in execution of a rent decree and that notice had been served, under the provision of the Bengal Tenancy Act, annulling incumbrances, including under-tenures that were not protected.

The Court of first instance partially decreed the suit. The decree of the learned Munsif was in favour of the plaintiff with regard to plots Nos. 1 to 4, and in favour of the defendants with regard to plots Nos. 5 and 6.

Both parties appealed to the District Judge, the appeal of the plaintiff against the decision in favour of the defendants with regard to plots Nos. 5 and 6 being numbered 160 and the appeal of the defendants against the decision of the Munsif in favour of the plaintiff with regard to plots Nos. 1 to 4 being numbered 182. The learned District Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif on both appeals. Two decrees were drawn up by the District Judge.

The plaintiff then appealed to this Court, but the only decree he filed was the decree in Appeal No. 160. Therefore, under the provisions of Order XLI, rule1, Civil Procedure Code, the only effective memorandum of appeal that this Court had before it was the one which was accompanied by the copy of the decree appealed from, that is, the memorandum in the appeal from the decree of the District Judge in Appeal No. 160. The point is not open to argument. It is a condition precedent to there being a valid memorandum of appeal that the memorandum should be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from, and the only copy that accompanied the memorandum of appeal in the case was the decree in No. 160. That was the view taken by the Allahabad High Court, and also the view taken by this Court in the case of Binapani Debi v. Shasibhushan Sinha (1). It is obvious that it was a slip, the copy of the decree in Appeal No. 182 was not also annexed to the memorandum of appeal, and the error appearing subsequently, the learned Pleader conducting the case applied for and obtained leave ex parte from a Bench of this Court to file a copy of the decree passed in Appeal No. 182. Of course, that leave given ex parte could not do away with the provision of Order XLI, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, nor could it affect the plaintiff's right as he was not present when the leave was given. The result is that there is no effective appeal from the decision of the District Judge in Appeal No. 182, which has decided that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover plots Nos. 1 to 4.

On the other point on the Appeal No. 160, it is clear that the judgment of the learned District Judge cannot be supported. The District Judge considers that the Collector is a Judge. But the Collector is not a Judge. He is a Revenue Officer, and although in this country he may at times have to perform judicial functions, he is certainly not a Judge. The acts of the Collector, like the acts of all other Executive Officers, are presumed to be regular, and the papers produced from the Collectorate purport to show that proper notices had been served by the Collector in order to annul the encumbrances. The District Judge had no evidence before him which entitled him to come to the conclusion that the Collector had not duly served the notices, he having certified on his order-sheet that he had done so. The view of the District Judge was that the Collector, being a Judge, did not perform his judicial functions in the manner which the District Judge thought satisfactory to himself. It is only sufficient to state that proposition in order to show that there is no foundation for it.

The result is that the decree in Appeal No. 160 must be set aside and the case sent back to the Court of the District Judge for the appeal to be re-heard on the merits. We make no order for the costs of this appeal, nor for the costs of Appeal No. 160 in the Court of the District Judge.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 14—Covenant for title—Impossibility of assessing compensation in money—Contract, whether enforceable.

Where a contract to sell lands is coupled with a security undertaken against a claim to be set up by reversioners in future, it cannot be specifically enforced as the portion of it relating to security, cannot be compensated for in money within the meaning of section 14 of the Specific Relief Act.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suit No. 339 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Tiruvalur, in Original Suit No. 107 of 1910.

FACTS.—This suit is for the specific performance of a contract to sell lands. Plaintiff is the vendee. He agreed to purchase from defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the widow and daughter respectively of a last male owner of certain lands and houses, for Rs. 2,250. That contract was evidenced by a varthanama passed between the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and a sum of Rs. 100 was paid as advance. It was also further agreed between the parties that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 should execute a security against any claim by the reversioners and that the mother-in-law of defendant No. 2 should join in the agreement. On her refusal to execute the same, it was proposed by the defendants that the plaintiff should accept instead, a security for Rs. 600 over the house of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. That was not accepted by the plaintiff. Then defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sold the lands to defendant No. 3. The plaintiff brought the present suit for specific performance. The District Munsif held that as the failure of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to complete the agreement was due to the refusal of the mother-in-law of defendant No 2 to execute the required security bond, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not able to fulfil their part of the contract owing to circumstances beyond their control. He accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal the Sub-Judge confirmed the decree, but modified it to the extent of re-payment of the Rs. 100 advanced. The present appeal is against that decree.

Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. C. Madhavan Nair and V. Purushothama Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant contends that the case falls under section 14 of the Specific Relief Act and that he should have been awarded a decree for the specific performance of the contract (Exhibit A), except as regards the giving of security by Ammalachi for Rs. 600, and compensation in money for the breach of this latter provision. The difficulty is that as far as we can see, it is practically impossible for the Court to assess the compensation. The security is intended to meet the contingency of a claim being set up to the property by reversioners after the death of the vendors, and this is a risk which it is impossible for a Court to estimate in money. We think the unperformable part of the contract is not one which admits of compensation in money, and that the lower Court has adopted the only course open to it in decreeing damages for non-performance of the whole contract. The appeal is dismissed with costs of the third defendant. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 will bear their own.

The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed;
Objections disallowed.

The term 'prosecution' should not be interpreted in the restricted sense in which it is used in the Code of Criminal Procedure. Therefore, a proceeding maliciously taken against a person to compel him to furnish surety to keep the peace may be made the foundation of a suit for damages for malicious prosecution.

If a person maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause sets the machinery of the criminal law in motion, he is responsible for the consequences, and cannot escape liability on the ground that the action by the Court was such as he did not intend or was erroneous in law.

The point of commencement of a prosecution is independant of the result of the prosecution. The prosecution commences when a complaint is made to a Magistrate.

A prosecution exists where a criminal charge is made before a Judicial Officer or Tribunal, and any person who makes or is actively instrumental in the making or prosecuting of such a charge, is deemed to prosecute it and is called a prosecutor.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. The suit has not been tried on the merits. After the first witness for the plaintiffs had been examined, the Subordinate Judge stopped the investigation of the facts and heard arguments on the preliminary objection that the plaint did not disclose any cause of action and that the suit as laid was not tenable. He decided this point against the plaintiffs and dismissed the suit. On the present appeal, the question for consideration, consequently, is whether the plaintiffs have any cause of action, and for this purpose we must assume that the allegations of the plaintiffs are well-founded in fact.

According to the plaintiffs, who are wealthy landlords in the district of Champaran, the first defendant, who was formerly in their employ and had been dismissed for misconduct, preferred a complaint against them before the Magistrate in charge of Motihari on the 9th July 1910. In this petition, he stated that the plaintiffs had ordered their servants to surround and beat the complainant on the 6th July 1910 and not to allow him to go to Motihari. He prayed that security and recognizance bond might be taken from them, as otherwise his life and property would be in danger. The Magistrate examined the complainant on oath, who gave details of the incidents mentioned in his petition and stated additional facts in support thereof. He prayed finally that proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code might be taken against the present plaintiffs and their servants. The Magistrate, thereupon, recorded an order in the order-sheet in the following terms: "To Babu N. G. Basak for inquiry and report by 19th July." The Deputy Magistrate, to whom the matter was made over for inquiry and report, issued notice to the parties on the 14th July 1910, to be ready with their evidence at the Modhubani Police Station on the 17th July. On the date fixed, he examined nine witnesses for the first party (complainant), and ordered that those witnesses be cross-examined and the witnesses for the second party examined and cross-examined at the Motihari Court on the 21st July. The order-sheet, with these orders recorded thereon by the Deputy Magistrate, was put up before the Magistrate in charge on the 19th July (the date fixed for the submission of the report); the latter officer recorded the following order thereon: "Put up on 24th July 1910." On the 21st July, five witnesses for the first party were examined and seven were cross-examined; at the same time, the 23rd July was fixed for the examination of the witnesses of the second party. On that date, the examination of the witnesses was completed. The Government Pleader appeared on behalf of the petitioner, and as he prayed for time to be ready for the argument, the 26th July was fixed for the next hearing. The arguments were heard on that date, and on the 28th July the Deputy Magistrate submitted his report. The report is not on the present record, but we find that the Magistrate in charge considered it on the the 2nd August 1910 and passed his orders. He expressed the opinion that the Deputy Magistrate had held a fuller inquiry than he had intended; his intention had been that the inquiry should be of an executive rather than of a judicial nature. It may be observed, parenthetically, that the order recorded by the Magistrate in charge, when he sent the matter for inquiry and report to the Deputy Magistrate, gives no indication of such intention, and on the 19th July, when the order-sheet was placed before him with the orders recorded thereon by the Deputy Magistrate for the examination of witnesses of both parties, he did not instruct the Deputy Magistrate to make his inquiry of a summary character. However that may be, on the 2nd August, the Magistrate accepted the report and came to the conclusion that even a prima facie case had not been made out. He added that the petitioner on his own showing was an unfaithful and treacherous servant and a thoroughly unprincipled man, whose statements required very strong corroboration, and that he had made a number of mis-statements and an intentional concealment of material facts. In this view, the Magistrate declined to proceed further on the application and directed that it be filed. On the 4th April 1911, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for damages for malicious prosecution, on the allegation that the charges brought against them by the first defendant in his petition and his statement before the Magistrate on the 9th July 1910 were false, and had been made maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause. The Subordinate Judge has held that the action does not lie, as there was no prosecution of the plaintiffs by the defendants. We are clearly of opinion that this view cannot possibly be supported. On behalf of the respondents, a strenuous endeavour has been made to support the decree of the Subordinate Judge from three points of view, namely, first, that an application to the Magistrate to take proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code was not a "prosecution;" secondly, that if it be assumed to be a "prosecution," no prosecution was commenced as no process was issued by the Magistrate against the plaintiffs; and, thirdly, that if it be assumed that a prosecution was commenced, it was not actionable, as the plaintiffs did not suffer any damage therefrom.

In support of the first contention that an application to a Magistrate to take proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not a prosecution, reliance has been placed upon the decision in Kandasami v. Subramania (1), where it was ruled that to sustain an action for damages for malicious prosecution, there must have been a prosecution by the defendants of the plaintiffs for an offence. We are not prepared to accept this view. We adhere to the opinion expressed in Crowdy v. O'Reilly (2) that the term "prosecution" should not be interpreted in the restricted sense in which it is used in the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that a proceeding maliciously taken against a person to compel him to furnish surety to keep the peace may be made the foundation of a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. It is worthy of note that the defendant invited the Magistrate to take action under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and an order under that section may ultimately lead to the detention of the person called upon to furnish security, under the circumstances mentioned in section 123: [Hopcroft v. Emperor (3)]. It is further clear that the defendant stated facts to the Magistrate, which, if true, rendered the plaintiffs liable to prosecution for wrongful restraint and criminal intimidation. We feel no doubt whatever that the action taken by the defendant amounted to prosecution of the plaintiffs, so as to entitle them to claim damages in an action for malicious prosecution. The first ground assigned by the respondents in support of the view of the Subordinate Judge, consequently, fails.

In support of the second contention, that no prosecution was commenced against the plaintiffs, because process was not issued against them by the Magistrate, reference has been made to the decisions in Meeran Saib v. Ratnavelu Mudaly (4), De Rozario v. Gulab Chand (5) and Gulap v. Bhola Nath (6). The first of these cases, Meeran v. Ratnavelu (4), supports the contention of the respondents; but we are not prepared to accept it as well founded on principle. In that case, on receipt of a complaint the Magistrate issued only a notice to the accused that a preliminary inquiry would be held at a certain time in the matter of the complaint. The accused was represented by Counsel at the preliminary inquiry, and the complaint was ultimately dismissed under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The accused then brought a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. Bakewell, J., held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was not authorised by the Code and could not, therefore, be attributed to the defendant so as to render him responsible for any damage caused thereby to the plaintiff. He also added that the prosecution of an accused commences with the issue of process after the complaint has been entertained by the Magistrate, and the prior proceedings constitute at most an attempt by the complainant to prosecute the accused. We are not prepared to agree with either of the reasons assigned in support of the conclusion that a suit for damages for malicious prosecution was not maintainable. As regards the first reason, it is plain that if a person maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause sets the machinery of the criminal law in motion, he is responsible for the consequences, and cannot escape liability on the ground that the action taken by the Court was such as he did not intend or was erroneous in law. As was said in Parli v. Reed (7), where this precise question was raised, a void process, procured through malice and without probable cause, is even more reprehensible, if possible, than a lawful process on a complaint which charges a criminal offence. Similarly, it was ruled in Potter v. Giertsen (8), that if the complainant procures the process to issue, he ought to be responsible for all the consequences even though the facts stated in his complaint do not justify it. In Pippet v. Hearn (9) the Court observed: "Whether the indictment be good or bad, the plaintiff is equally subjected to the disgrace of it, and put to the same expense in defending himself against it." As regards the second reason, it is equally plain that with a view to determine whether a suit for damages for malicious prosecution lay, the prosecution commenced as soon as the complaint was made to the Magistrate. The prosecution might be infructuous, if, for instance, no notice was served upon the accused. In such a contingency, the action for damages for malicious prosecution would fail, not because there was no prosecution commenced but because there was no damage done to the plaintiff. Reliance has also been placed upon the decisions in De Rozario v. Gulab Chand (5) and Golap Jan v. Bholanath (6). These cases are clearly distinguishable. In the former case, a complaint was lodged before the Magistrate, who sent the case to the Police for inquiry and report. The complainant informed the Police Inspector that he would not proceed with the case. The complaint was subsequently dismissed by the Magistrate. A fresh complaint was made through another person and was also dismissed. Fletcher, J., held that as the matter was sent to the Police for inquiry and report and no process was issued by the Magistrate, the prosecution was not commenced. In the present case, notice was issued upon the plaintiffs by the Deputy Magistrate, evidence was taken on both sides, and the Government Pleader appeared in support of the application by the complainant. Obviously, the plaintiffs in the case before us were in a very different position in the Criminal Court from that occupied by the plaintiff in De Rozario v. Gulab Chand (5). The case of Golab Jan v. Bholanath (6) also is distinguishable on the facts. But, it must be conceded that there are observations in both the judgments, which tend to support the contention of the respondents. In Golap Jan v. Bhola Nath (6) Woodroffe, J., is reported to have observed as follows: "If there is a prosecution, the commencement is the laying of the complaint: but it does not follow that that would be the commencement, if the prosecution falls through." With all respect, we are unable to accept the view indicated herein. Surely, the point of commencement of a prosecution is independent of the result of the prosecution. The prosecution—that act of the prosecutor, which renders him liable to be cast in damages, if malicious and not based on reasonable and probable cause – commences when the prosecutor has taken the initial step, namely, has made his complaint to the Magistrate. The prosecution may fail at one or other of various stages, but that cannot affect the time of commencement of the prosecution. The action of damages for malicious "prosecution" is not a creature of any Statute, and it is rather wide of the mark to investigate the precise meaning of the expression 'prosecution,' in the Criminal Procedure Code, or the exact point of time when a prosecution may be said to commence within the meaning of that Code. A prosecution exists where a criminal charge is made before a Judicial Officer or Tribunal, and any person who makes or is actively instrumental in the making or prosecuting of such a charge, is deemed to prosecute it, and is called the prosecutor; thus, a person who lays before a Magistrate an information stating that he suspects and has good reason to suspect another or who prefers a bill against him before a grand jury, is engaged in a prosecution (Laws of England, edited by Halsbury, Volume 19, Article 1433). From this point of view, the rule recognised in Ahmedbhai v. Framji (10), namely, that a prosecution commences when a complaint is made, is reasonable. Fletcher, J., refused to accept this view, because it is based on Clarke v. Postan (11), which, according to him, has been questioned in Yates v. Queen (12), and is supported possibly by a dictum in Gregory v. Derby (13). Neither of these cases is binding as an authority on this Court, and they are of value only in so far as they give reasons for the respective views. Bosanquet, J., ruled in Clarke v. Postan (11) that there is a prosecution if a charge is made to the Magistrate with a view to induce him to entertain it; it is not necessary to show that it was taken down in writing and acted upon by the Magistrate. In Yates v. Queen (12) the question arose under section 3 of the Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881, which enacts that no criminal prosecution shall be commenced against any proprietor, publisher or editor for any libel published in his newspaper, without the written fiat or allowance of the Director of Public Prosecutions in England or Her Majesty's Attorney-General in Ireland being first had and obtained. The Court of Appeal held that the commencement of a prosecution by a criminal information is the filing or exhibiting the information, and that, therefore, the fiat of the Director of Public Prosecutions need not be obtained until the moment before that has been done. Cotton, L. J., considered the question which, he said, was material, though not essentially necessary to determine, namely, when can a criminal prosecution be said to be commenced when it is by way of criminal information. On behalf of the plaintiff in error, it was said that the first application for the rule nisi is such commencement. Cotton, L. J., observed that the application to the Court was merely to direct a criminal information to be exhibited, and many things might have to be done before a prosecution could be instituted, as, for instance, the allowance of the Director of Prosecutions must be obtained. Reference was made to the decision in Clarke v Postan (11), on which reliance had been placed, to show that prosecutions by means of proceedings before a Magistrate commenced when the information was first laid before him. It was pointed out that, in that case, not only had an information been filed, but the plaintiff had been summoned before a Magistrate to answer a charge made against her, so that it was not laying an information or making a charge but the summons before the Magistrate which ought to be considered the commencement of the prosecution. The conclusion, if one may say so without disrespect, does not follow from the premises. It is plain, however, that the actual point required for decision in Yates v. Queen (12) is of no assistance in the determination of the question raised before us. On the other hand, the case of Reg. v. Wallace (14), decided in 1797 and mentioned by East in his Treatise on Pleas of the Crown, Volume I, page 186, clearly assists the contention of the appellants. The case arose under section 9 of 8 and 9 W. III, C. 26, which provided that no prosecution shall be commenced for an offence under the Statute after the expiry of three months from the commission of the offence. Wallace was apprehended on the 5th May 1797 for an alleged offence under the Statute, carried before a Magistrate and committed to jail by warrant dated 8th May. The Assizes at Durham were held on the 8th August, so that more than three months had elapsed between the commission of the offence and the preferring of the indictment. The Judges, at a conference, unanimously held that the information before the Magistrate was the commencement of the prosecution. The decision in Thorpe v. Priestnall (15) also supports the contention of the appellants; there Wright, J., pointed out that Reg. v. Brooks (16) is to the same effect as Reg v. Willace (14), and Wills, J., observed that the passages in the judgment in Yates v. Queen (12), which tended the other way, only amounted to dicta, as the decision in that case related to a prosecution for libel by a criminal information filed by order of the Court. It is worthy of note that the view taken in Clarke v. Postan (11) is consistent with that adopted in Dawson v. Vansandau (17) by Cockburn, C. J., Crompton and Blackburn, JJ. Fletcher, J., concedes in De Rozario v. Gulab Chand (5) that Thorpe v. Priestnall (15) shows that once summons is issued, the commencement of prosecution must be deemed to be the laying of the information or the making of the complaint. But, if this is so, it is plainly logical to hold that the prosecution commences with the complaint, irrespective of the result of the prosecution or of the stage at which it may fall through. We must accordingly adhere to the view taken in Crowdy v. O'Reilly (2) that there may be said to have been a prosecution even though no action at all has been taken against the plaintiff. Here, however, the plaintiffs were, as we know, drawn into the inquiry. Notice was given to them by the Deputy Magistrate of the enquiry directed by the special Magistrate. The terms of the notice are not known as a copy is not in the record, but we shall assume that it merely gave the plaintiffs an opportunity to appear and to be heard. The plaintiffs did, as a matter of fact, appear and produce evidence. If they had not appeared, they would have run the risk of either a prosecution or a proceeding under section 107. The defendant, at any rate, cannot be heard to urge that the plaintiffs need not have appeared before the Deputy Magistrate at that stage; it is not open to him to suggest that his complaint was so manifestly false and frivolous, that the plaintiffs might have safely allowed the inquiry, whereof they had notice, to proceed ex parte. In our opinion, there is no escape from the position that there was a prosecution against the plaintiffs from the 9th July 1910, when the complaint was made to the Magistrate, to the 2nd August 1910, when the Magistrate decided not to proceed against the accused. The second ground cannot, therefore, be supported.

In support of the third contention, viz., that the prosecution initiated by the defendant was not actionable, reference has been made to Kandasami v. Subramania (1). That case is clearly distinguishable; the report does not show that the plaintiff was in any way injured by the proceedings taken against him. In the case before us, the plaintiffs assert that the proceedings have caused them loss, pecuniary and otherwise. This evidently is a question of fact which requires investigation. The third ground cannot consequently be supported.

In the view we take of the matter, it is not necessary to discuss at length the contention of the appellants that they are entitled to recover damages for defamation. It may be conceded that the claim was made, though not very explicitly, in the plaint; but the question was not raised in the issues and although the suit did not come on for trial, till more than ten months had passed after the settlement of issues, no attempt was made in the interval to have them amended. In these circumstances the Subordinate Judge rightly refused to entertain the question of damages for defamation, which was sought to be raised in his Court for the first time in the course of argument at the trial.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge discharged, and the case remanded to him for trial on the merits as a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. The plaintiffs Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 22, 23, 24, 151—Court not subordinate to High Court, whether s. 23 applicable to—Original side of High Court, suit pending in, whether can be transferred—Inherent power, exercise of—Stay of suit, grounds for—Abuse of process of Court—Forum.

Section 23 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply where the Court in which the suit has been instituted is not a Court subordinate to a High Court

Therefore a suit pending on the original side of the High Court cannot be transferred under the provisions of the above section nor can the proceedings be stayed when the cause of action or a cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Court.

A High Court has an inherent jurisdiction to stay any suit which is an abuse of the process of the Court.

But where the parties in a defamation suit do not reside within the jurisdiction of the High Court and the plaintiff proves that he has been defamed and that the defamatory matter has been published within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court and that he has suffered damages within the local limits of the jurisdiction of that Court by reason of the publication, it cannot be said that the institution of the suit in the High Court is such an abuse of the process of the Court as to invoke its inherent jurisdiction to stay the suit

Per Tyabji, J.—The plaintiffs have the choice of the forum and their choice should not be restricted because the defendants may find it more difficult to make their defence in one forum than in another.

The case first came up for hearing before Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair in Chambers while sitting on the original side, who referred it to a Division Bench by the following ORDER.—That the question involved in this application, whether the hearing of a suit may be indefinitely stayed under sections 22, 23 and 24 and 151 of Act V of 1908 and whether this is a fit case in which the hearing should be stayed, and the same is hereby referred to a Division Court under rule 177 of the Rules of the High Court, 1902, and that the plaintiffs do, on or before the 21st day of April 1914, file in Court their counter-affidavit.

Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. T. S. Rajagopala Aiyar, for the Defendants.

ORDER.

TYABJI, J.—This application has been referred to us by Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair sitting in Chambers on the Original Side of the High Court under rule 177 of Order XV of the Rules of the High Court of Madras. We are, therefore, sitting as the High Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction, and not in the exercise of the Appellate Jurisdiction in appeal from decisions in the exercise of its Original Jurisdiction.

The application is that all further proceedings in this suit which has been instituted on the Original Side of this High Court be "indefinitely stayed under sections 22, 23, 24 and 151 of Act V of 1908." The suit is instituted by a limited liability Company for recovering damages for defamation from the editor, printer and publisher of a newspaper in Lahore.

Section 22 of the Civil Procedure Code refers to cases where a suit may be instituted in any one of two or more Courts, and is instituted in one of such Courts. In such cases an application may be made by any defendant for transfer of the suit to another Court. Section 22 does not provide to which Court the application for transfer has to be made. That matter is provided for in section 23. The sub-section of section 23 which is suggested as being applicable is sub-section 3. That sub-section, however, refers to the case where the several Courts having jurisdiction are subordinate to different High Courts. One of the difficulties in the way of applying this sub-section to the present case is that the two Courts which the applicant suggests have jurisdiction, viz., (1) the Original Side of the Madras High Court, (2) the Chief Court of the Punjab cannot be side to be "subordinate to different High Courts." The section defining which Courts are subordinate to the High Court is section 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 3 refers to District Courts, but not to the High Court in the exercise of its Original Civil Jurisdiction. Section 2 (4) defines a "District" so as to include the local limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of a High Court; but it does not refer to the High Court in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Jurisdiction as a District Court. The collocation of words in section 3 does not suggest that it was intended that the expression "District Court" should be applicable to the High Court, and section 3 (15) of the General Clauses Act prevents the High Court in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction being included in the expression "District Judge," and clause (24) of the same section defines a High Court in terms which do not throw any light on the question I am considering.

It seems to me, therefore, very doubtful whether the provisions of sections 22 and 23 can be said in their terms to apply to the present case. Subject to this doubt, I agree with the learned Chief Justice in his remarks on these two sections and his examination of the Indian authorities on this point.

The application is, however, supported before us mainly on the ground that we have under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code inherent power to prevent abuse of the process of the Court. The existence of the jurisdiction cannot be denied. The circumstances in which the Courts will in the exercise of this jurisdiction stay proceedings on the ground that the process of the Court is being abused, are referred to and explained in Norton v. Norton (1), Egbert v. Short (2) and Logan v. Bank of Scotland (3).

These decisions refer to cases where the cause of action had arisen outside England and where the English Courts were sought to be given jurisdiction on the ground that the defendant was, at the time when the writ was issued, residing within the jurisdiction of the English Courts. In the case now before us, the learned Pleader for the applicants asked us to decide the case on the basis that it must be assumed for the purposes of this application that the whole of the cause of action had arisen in Madras. Where the jurisdiciton is sought to be snatched from a Court by means of the accidental circumstances that the defendant happens temporarily to be within the jurisdiction of a Court other than that in the local limits of which Court he ordinarily resides, the case bears a very different aspect from such a case as the present. For the libel upon which this action is based expressly refers to the local agents of the limited liability Company which is alleged to have been libelled, and "the attention of the local Government of Madras is most respectfully invited to the letters" by the editor of the newspaper. The facts, therefore, that have to be determined in deciding this suit have direct reference to the conduct of the local agents of the Madras branch of the Company. In these circumstances the plaintiffs may well claim that inasmuch as the question on which they seek adjudication has reference to people residing in Madras and the acts that will be subject of investigation have taken place in Madras, it would be more beneficial to the plaintiffs that the suit should be tried by the Court in Madras. It cannot be said that in these circumstances the facts before us have any analogy to such facts as were before the English Courts in the decisions cited to us. There it was clearly pointed out that the plaintiff was seeking to put the defendant in the position referred to by Vaughan Williams, L. J., in Norton v. Norton (1). He says: "I have come to the conclusion, not only that this is a case in which it is more natural and more convenient to try the question in dispute in India, because the settlement was made in India and refers entirely to property in India, but, further, that Mrs. Norton has brought the action in England, not for the purpose of any legitimate advantage which she might gain by so doing, but for the purpose of putting her husband in such a position that he would be practically compelled to settle the action." In the present case owing to the facts to which I have referred, it seems to me to be clear that at least on the materials now before us it is impossible to say that the plaintiffs have brought the suit in Madras not for the purpose of any legitimate advantage which they might gain by so doing, but for the purpose of putting the defendants in such a position that they will be practically compelled to settle the action. Conceding for the purposes of the application that the defendants may have some difficulty in proving their cases that they may find it necessary to examine their witnesses on commission, it is the plaintiffs who have the choice of the forum and it does not follow that because the defendants may find it more difficult to make their defence in one forum than in another, the plaintiffs should be restricted in their choice. That difficulty may be a matter which the Judge trying the action may take into consideration when the defence is before him. It does not prevent the plaintiffs from bringing a suit in the Court which they may find more convenient, unless for some such reasons as have been referred to in the decisions of the English Courts.

I, therefore, agree that the application must be dismissed with costs.

WHITE, C. J.—This matter came before the learned Judge sitting in Chambers in the Original Side of this Court and under rule 177 of the Original Side Rules he has referred it to us. A suit has been instituted in this Court for damages for an alleged libel in a newspaper. A Judge's summons has been taken out by the defendants, in which they ask for an order that all further proceedings in the suit in this Court should be stayed and for a direction that the plaintiffs should file their suit in a proper Court in the Punjab. It has not been seriously argued that it would be within our powers to direct the plaintiffs to file the suit in a proper Court in another Province. The contention has been that the case is one in which we ought to make an order staying all further proceedings in the suit in this High Court.

The plaintiffs are a limited liability Company with their registered office at Gujranwala near Lahore. The paper in which the alleged libel was published is printed and published at Lahore. It is not denied that there has been publication of the alleged libel in Madras. The question as to whether the cause of action for this suit arose wholly within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Madras High Court has not been argued by the learned Vakil for the defendants: but for the purposes of this application he is prepared to assume that it did. Assuming that the matter is libellous, publication within the jurisdiction being admitted, I think there can be no question that the cause of action or a cause of action with reference to this alleged libel arose within the jurisdiction. We have been asked to make an order staying the suit on two grounds: first, under express provisions of the Code, and secondly, in exercise of the inherent jurisdiction which is now recognised in section 151 of the Code. The express provisions are sections 22 and 23 of the Code. Section 22 provides as follows: "Where a suit may be instituted in any one of two or more Courts and is instituted in any one of such Courts, any defendant.....may..... apply to have the suit transferred to another Court, and the Court to which such application is made .....shall determine in which of the several Courts having jurisdiction the suit shall proceed." (I assume this suit could have been instituted in a Punjab subordinate Court or in the Madras High Court, though damages are only claimed in respect of the publication in Madras). The first sub-section of section 23 clearly does not apply. Then the section goes on to say: "Where such Courts are subordinate to different Appellate Courts but to the same High Court, the application shall be made to the said High Court." The case does not fall within sub-section (2). Sub-section (3) says: "Where such Courts are subordinate to different High Courts, the application shall be made to the High Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the Court in which the suit is brought is situate." The Court in which this suit has been instituted is not a Court subordinate to a High Court. Therefore, section 28 does not apply. It was argued that section 22 gives the jurisdiction and section 23 could not cut it down. It seems to me, however, that the two sections should be read together and if we find that section 23 contains no provision as to the Court to which the application should be made, it may reasonably be held that section 22 has no application to the particular facts of this case. Moreover sections 23 and 24 deal with the power of the Court to transfer, not with the power of the Court to stay. Certain authorities have been cited. The first case was Tula Ram v. Harjiwan Dass (4). That was a case in which the application was made under section 24 of the old Code and the suit which was asked to be stayed was not instituted in a High Court, but in a Court subordinate to the High Court, and the learned Judges while intimating that they had jurisdiction declined to exercise it. Geffert v. Ruckchand Mohla (5) is a decision of Mr. Justice Scott sitting alone. In some respects it is not unlike this case. There the plaintiff brought a suit in the High Court of Bombay claiming damages for libel. He had previously brought a suit in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Central Provinces in which he had asked for damages for wrongful dismissal. An application was made by the defendant in the suit in the Bombay High Court asking for an order staying the proceedings in the Bombay High Court. The learned Judge, no doubt, assumed that he would have had jurisdiction to make the order asked for. The question of jurisdiction, however, does not seem to have been argued and on the merits he declined to make any order. With reference to this suit before him, he makes the observation that the plaintiff "desires to vindicate his character in the place where he alleges it has been defamed," and he adds: "I can find no authority for preventing him doing so." Our attention has also been drawn to a decision of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court in Babban Bibi v. Sohadra Bibi (6). There again the facts were similar to those in Tula Ram v. Harjiwan Dass (4). The application was for the transfer of a suit pending in a subordinate Court within the jurisdiction of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court and it was asked that the suit should be transferred to a subordinate Court within the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court. The learned Judge on the merits made an order that the subordinate Court, subject to the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court, was the proper Court, having regard to the real interests of the parties and the general convenience of the witnesses, in which the suit should proceed. The facts in the Oudh case are clearly distinguishable. As regards our inherent jurisdiction, I have no hesitation in holding that apart from the express provisions of the Code there is an inherent jurisdiction in the High Court to stay any suit which is an abuse of the process of this Court. The jurisdiction, in my opinion, existed prior to the Code of 1908 and it is recognised in section 151. Then the question is, in the circumstances, is this suit an abuse of the process of this Court? I do not propose to read the whole affidavit on which the defendants rely, but in so far as the affidavit consists of allegations of fact and not expressions of opinion, I am prepared to accept all the allegations in the affidavit. Do those allegations establish that the bringing of the suit here is an abuse of the process of this Court? We start with this that we are assuming for the purposes of this application—and the assumption seems to me to be well founded in law—that the cause of action arose wholly within the jurisdiction of this Court. The alleged libel is set out in the plaint. It contains this passage: "The attention of the Local Governments of Bengal, Madras, the Central Provinces and the Punjab is most respectfully invited to the letters of our correspondents." These letters the plaintiffs say form part of the libel. That the articles were published in Madras is undisputed. The plaintiffs ask for damages so far as this Presidency is concerned. I do not think it necessary to discuss what may be the legal effect of limiting their claim to damages accruing in this Presidency. But we do find that in the plaint they expressly limit their claim. The learned Vakil for the defendants has not been able to call our attention to any Indian case in which this inherent jurisdiction has been exercised. The principle, however, is well recognised and has been given effect to in several English decisions. I would only refer to two cases, both of which curiously enough were Indian cases. In both cases disputes had arisen between husband and wife and in both cases the question was whether an action should proceed in England or in India.

The first case is Norton v. Norton (1). That was a suit in which the plaintiff claimed an account under a settlement. The settlement had been made in India. The wife had gone to England and she alleged that she intended to reside in England permanently. The husband and one of the trustees of the settlement were served with a writ during their temporary presence in England, and the husband and the other defendant applied to stay the proceedings in England. The application was in the Court of first instance refused, but on appeal an order was made staying the proceedings in England. Vaughan Williams, L. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal says at page 479: "In my opinion it must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that either the expense, or the difficulties of a trial in this country are so great that injustice will be done—in this sense, that it will be very difficult, or practically impossible, for the litigant who is applying for the stay to get justice in this country." It is scarcely necessary to observe that the facts of the present case do not come anywhere near the test suggested by Vaughan Williams, L. J. The other case is the case of Egbert v. Short (2). There a deed of separation had been executed in India between the plaintiff and her husband. The defendant was the trustee under the deed. There was default in paying the allowance under the deed, and the defendant happened to be in England on a holiday and he was served with a writ. He applied to have the proceedings stayed and they were stayed. The learned Judge in his order in staying the proceedings observes at page 214: "On the whole the conclusion at which I have arrived is that this action is brought in the tribunal in which it has been brought not bona fide for the purpose of obtaining justice, but for the purpose of harassing and annoying the defendants, and of obtaining something to which the plaintiff may not in justice be entitled." It cannot be suggested in this case that if the plaintiff proves in this Court that he has been defamed, if he proves that the defamatory matter has been published within the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court, and that he has suffered damage within the local limits of the jurisdiction,—of this Court by reason of the publication it cannot be suggested that the suit is brought within the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court "for the purpose," to use the words of the learned Judge in Egbert v. Short (2), "of obtaining something to which he may not in justice be entitled." It seems to me that the defendants have failed to make out that the institution of the suit in this Court is an abuse of the process of this Court.

I would dismiss the application with costs.

Application dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 338 OF 1913.

July 9, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea.

Haji KASSIM MAMOOJI—DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT

K. B. DUTT AND P. CHAUDHURI—RECEIVERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 1—Appointment of Receivers—Authority to bring and defend suits conferred by Court—Lunacy Act (XXXV of 1858), inquiry under—Document executed by pardanashin lady—Terms not explained to her—Suit by persons of unsound mind—Next friend, whether a party.

Ordinarily, a suit to recover possession of property can only be brought by him in whom there is a present title to it, and by the appointment of a Receiver no property becomes vested in the Receiver. But this rule is subject to modification by the Legislature, and the Code of Civil Procedure empowers the Court to confer upon a Receiver all such powers as to bringing and defending suits as the owner himself has, even if it may involve the setting aside of a voidable instrument executed by one of the co-owners who thereby purports to deal with the entire estate.

Where, therefore, one of two co-widows brought a suit against the other for a declaration that she was entitled to a half share in the estate of the deceased husband and for partition thereof, and the present plaintiffs were appointed Receivers under Order XL, rule 1 (d) of the Civil Procedure Code with the power to bring and defend suits in their own name and to use the names of the plaintiff and the defendant also, and where the present plaintiffs sued to recover possession of certain immoveable property on the ground that a lease of 16th September 1906 purporting to have been executed by one of the widows in virtue of which the present defendant claimed to be a permanent tenant was invalid

Held, (1) that the co-widows were the owners of the property and the suit in which the Receivers had been appointed comprised that propertyand that the Receivers were, therefore, as competent to bring this suit as the widows would have been;

(2) that the omission of the Receivers to get leave in the first suit to bring this suit might have consequences adverse to them in that suit but it could not affect their power to bring this suit.

The Lunacy Act contemplates the question of lunacy or sanity at the time of the inquiry, there is no provision in it that the inquiry shall extend to the ascertainment of the period at which the alleged lunatic first became of unsound mind.

Where, therefore, lunacy proceedings commenced in November 1906 and the widow who had executed the lease in September 1906 was found on the 24th September 1907 to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing her own affairs.

Held, (1) that the finding did not carry things back further than the inquiry which commenced in November 1906 and notwithstanding the result of that inquiry the burden still rested on the plaintiffs of showing that she was of unsound mind on the date of the execution of the lease;

(2) that the executant of the lease being of unsound mind at the time it was executed, it created no title in the present defendant and the plaintiffs' right to possession was not barred;

(3) that even if lunacy be not established, the lease was void as its terms were not adequately explained to the executant, a pardanashin lady of weak intellect, and was not understood by her;

(4) that the Receivers were competent plaintiffs even if the lease be held to be not void, but voidable;

(5) that even if a lunatic's manager can sue still there is no established rule of practice in this High Court that requires suits relating to the lunatic's property to be brought by him and not by the lunatic and that on the contrary the Code of Civil Procedure contemplates suits by persons of unsound mind whether so adjudged or not and that though it is true that a person so incapacitated has to sue by next friend, yet a next friend is not a party and the absence of a next friend is immaterial.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of 24-Parganas, dated 9th June 1913.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted in the first Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas to recover possession of immoveable property in Bhowanipore, known as 7 Russa Road.

The plaintiffs are the Receivers of the estate of the late Gopal Lal Seal, and the contesting defendant and sole appellant (to whom I will hereafter refer as the defendant) is Haji Kassim Mamooji.

The plaint includes a prayer for a declaration that a lease executed by Nayan Manjari Dassi, one of Gopal Lal Seal's two co-widows, is void and inoperative.

The defendant, on the other hand, maintains that he has a good title to the premises as their permanent tenant and contends that in any case the plaintiffs are not competent to bring this suit. I will first give a short narrative of the events that led up to the appointment of the plaintiffs as Receivers of Gopal Lal Seal's estate.

Gopal Lal Seal, who was admittedly the owner of the property in suit, died on the 25th of May 1897, without issue, but survived by his two widows, Kumudini Dasi and Nayan Manjari Dasi, who thus became his heiresses in the absence of a testamentary disposition. On the 15th of June 1902 Kumudini applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of her deceased husband. The application was opposed, and was numbered as Suit No. 9 of 1902.

On the 21st of July, Gopal Lal Seal's mother and another propounded an alleged Will of the deceased, and their application, being opposed, was numbered as Suit No. 11 of 1902. Mr. Donogh was appointed Administrator pendente lite in Suit No. 11 of 1902, but in August 1903, Probate was refused and so his appointment terminated. In the same month Mr. Belchambers was appointed Administrator pendente lite in Suit No. 9 of 1902.

On the 8th August 1906 Nayan Manjari commenced Suit No. 666 of 1906 against her co-widow. It was afterwards numbered 427 of 1907.

By this suit Nayan Manjari sought a declaration that she was entitled to a half share in the estate of Gopal Lal Seal for the estate of a Hindu widow, and prayed that the properties might be partitioned and her share allotted to the plaintiff.

On the 29th January 1908 Suit No. 9 of 1902 was withdrawn, and Mr. Belchambers, the Administrator pendente lite, was discharged. On the same day a decree was passed in Suit No. 427 of 1907 and thereby Messrs. Shamal Dhone Dutt and Norendra Lal Dey were appointed Receivers of the moveable property and of the rents, issues and profits of the immoveable property belonging to the estate of Gopal Lal Seal.

By an order of the 8th January 1910 in Suit No. 427 of 1907 the present plaintiffs, Mr. P. Chowdhuri and Mr. K. B. Dutt, were appointed Receivers in the place of Mr. Halder, who had succeeded Messrs. Dutt and Dey in that office with all the powers provided under Order XL, rule 1, clause (d), of the Civil Procedure Code, subject to certain exceptions not material to this case, and it was further ordered that the Receivers should have power to bring and defend suits in their own name and also should have power to use the names of the plaintiff and the defendant who were to be indemnified out of the estate and effects of the intestate.

On the 25th of October 1911 this suit was instituted and on the 22nd March 1912 an order was made in Suit No. 427 of 1907 that the Receivers be at liberty to continue the present suit.

It is in these circumstances that the plaintiffs claim that they are competent to maintain this suit. But before I deal with this point, I will explain the defendant's relations with the property.

As far back as 1893 the defendant became a tenant of the property, and though a difficulty was experienced in obtaining a formal lease, this at length was granted for a term of 15 years to expire in November 1908. The person named as lessee was Ismail Khan Mohammad, but it has been accepted by both sides before us that he was a benamdar for the defendant, Haji Kassim Mamooji.

But though this tenancy terminated on the 15th November 1908, the defendant claims to be a permanent tenant under a lease of 16th September 1906, which purports to be executed by Nayan Manjari Dasi. It is the plaintiffs' case that this lease is invalid, and so it is that they claim to be entitled to recover possession. First, then I will consider the plaintiffs' right to sue in their own names.

Ordinarily, no doubt, a suit to recover possession of property can only be brought by him in whom there is a present title to it, and by his appointment no property becomes vested in a Receiver.

But this rule, like all others, is subject to modification by the Legislature and the only question for our consideration is whether in India there has not been such a modification in favour of a Receiver.

It is profitless to discuss the English cases on the subject or to seek for guidance from American decisions; in England there is no such statutory rule as there is here, and I have no means of ascertaining what the American Law is.

Moreover, there is ample material in Indian enactments and authorities to afford a clue to the solution of the problem propounded. Originally a Receiver could not sue; this is shown by the decision of Phear, J., in Wilkinson v. Gangadhar Sirkar (1). That decision was in 1871. In 1877, however, was passed the Civil Procedure Code of that year; and in it was contained the provision which now finds a place in Order XL, rule 1, of the present Code (see section 503 of the Code of 1877). The present Code empowers the Court to confer upon a Receiver all such powers as to bringing and defending suits as the owner himself has.

This provision is shown by decisions in Calcutta, Madras and Bombay to have been understood by those Courts as authorising suits by Receivers, and though I am not aware of any judgment in Allahabad to the same effect, I have not met with any decision in a contrary sense.

The words of Order XL, rule 1, warrant this view, and I see no reason for putting a narrower construction on the words, or for holding that they do not empower Receivers to bring a suit for recovery of possession of immoveable property, even though it may involve the setting aside of a voidable instrument executed by one of the owners who thereby purports to deal with the entire interest.

The co-widows of Gopal Lal Seal are the present owners of the property: and the suit in which the Receivers have been appointed comprises that property. The Receivers, therefore, are as competent to bring this suit as the widows would have been. It is true, they did not get leave to institute this suit in Suit No. 427 of 1907. This omission may have consequences adverse to them in that suit, but it cannot affect their power to bring this suit, nor has any reliance been placed on this omission before us.

The next point that calls for consideration is whether the instrument of the 16th September 1906 furnishes the defendant with an answer to the plaintiffs' claim for possession.

If it was a valid document, it would, for it purports to create a permanent tenancy in the defendant's favour. Its validity, however, has been attacked on many grounds. Thus it is said (1) that Nayan Manjari, the sole executant, was of unsound mind, (2) that at any rate she was an illiterate pardanashin lady of weak intellect, whose execution of the lease was procured without explanation to her of its terms or comprehension by her of its effect, (3) that at the time of its execution Mr. Belchambers was Administrator pendente lite and that she had no interest in or power over the property, and (4) that her interest in the property did not extend beyond a half share.

On all these points the Sub-Judge has come to a conclusion adverse to the defendant against whom he has passed the decree from which the present appeal has been preferred.

First, then, I will deal with the plea of Nayan Manjari's insanity. This unhappy lady's predicament has been so constantly before the Court in the several litigations in which she is involved that it is particularly necessary that we should be on our guard not to import into this case knowledge derived from other sources, and to see that our decision is based only on the materials afforded by the record in this suit.

The issue for determination is whether Nayan Manjari was of unsound mind on the 16th September 1906.

We start with this that Nayan Manjari is admittedly now of unsound mind.

She was found to be of unsound mind in proceedings under Act XXXV of 1858 instituted as far back as November 1906. By his order in those proceedings of the 24th September 1907 the District Judge of the 24-Parganas held that there could be no reasonable doubt that she was of unsound mind and incapable of managing her affairs. The Act, however, contemplates only the question of lunacy or sanity at the time of the inquiry; there is no provision in it that the inquiry shall extend to the ascertainment of the period at which the alleged lunatic first became of unsound mind: Bodhnarain Singh v. Omrao Singh (2). So the finding of the learned District Judge does not carry us back further than the inquiry, which commenced in November 1906; so notwithstanding the result of that inquiry the burden still rests on the plaintiffs of showing that she was of unsound mind on the 16th of September 1906. The learned Judge was satisfied that this burden was discharged and his estimate of the evidence on this point must necessarily carry great weight with us on appeal. It may, I think, be fairly said here, as it was in the Privy Council decision I have cited, that the burden becomes of a much lighter character when we find that the inquiry which resulted in the adjudication of lunacy supervened within two months of the critical time, the date of the execution of the lease. There is no reason to suppose that this unsoundness of mind could be fairly attributed to anything that occurred in the interval. On the contrary we find the lady's mental condition called in question, though unsuccessfully, as far back as 1892. But more significant of the estimate formed in the family of her previous mental condition is the application on the 14th of July 1906 preferred by her two paternal uncles under Act XXXIV of 1858. This apparently was rejected simply owing to their failure to procure a medical certificate in support of their allegations, a failure due, no doubt, to the fact that she was then residing in the house of her maternal uncle, Kuchil Lal Sen, in Muktaram Babu's Street. Kuchil Lal Sen, who had every opportunity of knowing Nayan Manjari's mental condition, has deposed before the Subordinate Judge that in July and September 1906 it was the same as in July and September 1907, and on this the learned Judge relied as he certainly was entitled to do, and I say this, notwithstanding the contention before us, that Kuchil was entrapped into this estatement. In addition to this there is the evidence of Gour Mohun Dey, the brother of the co-widow Kumudini. He deposes to her insanity from 1903. His evidence is undoubtedly open to criticism, and the learned Judge does not expressly refer to it, so that it would be safer not to attach any great weight to it.

(2) 13 M.I.A. 519; 6 B. L. R. 509; 15 W. R. (P. C.) 1; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 607; 20 E. R. 644.

The Subordinate Judge was obviously not impressed with the evidence by which it was sought to prove Nayan Manjari's sanity at the date of the lease, and on this I am in full agreement with him. In so saying I do not forget that, in course of the argument before us, we were repeatedly reminded of the part taken by the Registration Clerk, but I attach little or no importance to it. The Sub-Judge, therefore, was (in my opinion) justified in his conclusion that it is clear that in September 1906 Nayan Manjari was of unsound mind and incapable of managing her affairs

But if she was of unsound mind then, it is conceded, in view of the interpretation placed by the Privy Council on the Contract Act, that the lease was void. If our decision were final, this would be sufficient for the disposal of this appeal; but as the case may go further, it is right that I should discuss it on the hypothesis that lunacy on the critical date was not established: Tarakant Banerjee v. Puddomoney Dossee (3). This, therefore, I will proceed to do, though it must not be supposed that in so doing I feel any doubt as to the Subordinate Judge's conclusion on the question of Nayan Manjari's sanity. Nayan Manjari on the 16th September 1906 was a pardanashin illiterate lady, apparently with no knowledge of English, and even if, as I assume for the present purpose, she was not a lunatic, she undoubtedly was of weak intellect. And yet it is to her that the defendant went for his permanent lease, though there was an Administrator pendente lite, Mr. Belchambers, and a senior co-widow a co-sharer with Nayan Manjari, as to whose sanity there never had been any question. The evidence further shows that at this time there was a firm of Attorneys acting for Nayan Manjari; still they were not consulted, and the lawyer who is supposed to have represented her in this transaction is Monoj Mohun Bose, a Police Court Pleader. It is clear beyond doubt that this Police Court Pleader in no way protected Nayan Manjari, and did not even take the trouble to ascertain the facts necessary for giving her sound advice, nor did Kuchil in any way look after the lady's interests or give her any effective advice. As he himself says: "the transaction was completed in hot haste," such "hot haste" indeed was there that the lease still contains blanks. The evidence that the document was read or explained to her or its contents or purport understood by her is not worthy of credit, and this omission is all the more serious as the document was in English, a language Nayan Manjari is not shown to have understood. The Subordinate Judge on a consideration of the evidence came to the conclusion that the document was not read over and explained to Nayan Manjari, that she did not know what she was doing, but executed the lease without knowledge of its contents, and that she had no independent advice.

In my opinion this conclusion is justified by the evidence and I agree with it. Even, therefore, if my finding that Nayan Manjari was insane be not accepted, still the transaction is one which cannot stand.

It has, however, been argued that apart from lunacy the transaction would be voidable and not void, and, therefore, it is urged it could not be avoided by any one but Nayan Manjari and in a suit to which her manager was a party. I am not aware of any case in which it has been directly discussed and determined whether such a transaction is void or voidable, but in Lala

(3) 10 M. I A. 476 at p. 488, 5 W. R. (P. C.) 63; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 631, 2 Sar. P. C. J. 184, 19 E. R. 1052.

Mahabir Prasad v. Musammat Taj Begum (4) Lord Moulton, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in the case where the bond of a pardanashin lady came in question, said: "It follows, therefore, that as against the present appellants it must be taken that the terms of the mortgage-bond were extortionate and that the lady, the mortgagor, did not understand the effect of the deed by reason of its not having been adequately explained to her. The deed is, therefore, void and cannot be enforced against her."

It is argued before us that Lord Moulton's remarks were not directed to the distinction between a deed that was void and one that was voidable, and that, therefore, they must not be read too literally. In the absence of a more searching argument than that addressed to us, I must refrain from expressing any definite opinion on the question whether the deed of a pardanashin woman is void or voidable, or whether each case must not depend on its own peculiar circumstances. And I am the more impelled to this course, for, in the view I take and have already expressed, the Receivers are competent plaintiffs even if the lease is not void but voidable. It is sufficient for the purpose of this case to hold, as I do, that the evidence does not satisfy me that the lease on which the defendant relies was explained to the lady or understood by her.

Therefore, the defendant has failed to discharge the burden of proof that lay on him, and the Receivers are entitled to rely on this defect in his proof whether the lease be void or voidable. I do not overlook the argument that if the lease is only voidable, the suit is incompetent in the absence of the manager. It is contended that to avoid the transaction the manager is a necessary party. There is authority in England for the view that the Committee should ordinarily be a party where a transaction is sought to be avoided on the ground of lunacy; but on the hypothesis with which I am now dealing, the lease is impugned on the ground not of the lady's lunacy, but of the inadequate protection of a pardanashin lady. Moreover, even if a lunatic's manager can sue, still there is no established rule of practice in this High Court that requires suits relating to the lunatic's property to be brought by him, and not by the lunatic.

On the contrary the Code of Civil Procedure contemplates suits by persons of unsound mind, whether so adjudged or not (see Order XXXII, rule 15, and Appendix A, "Descriptions of parties in particular cases"). It is true that a person so incapacitated has to sue by a next friend; but a next friend is not a party, and the absence of a next friend in this suit is immaterial. In any case the objection is one of pure technicality and it cannot be suggested that the absence of the manager has affected the merits of the case. And section 99 of the Code provides that no decree shall be reversed or modified for error or irregularity not affecting the merits or jurisdiction. To sum up, then, this appears to me to be a peculiarly gross case of overreaching a lady who was in a special degree in need of advice and protection. I have already expressed my opinion that she was of unsound mind at the date of the lease. If I am wrong as to that, still it can hardly be denied that her mind was seriously unbalanced. In this transaction, she received no advice and no protection, and in place of her ordinary Attorneys, an uninformed Police Court Pleader professed to act for her. No explanation is forthcoming why the defendant should have gone to her for the lease, and not to the Administrator pendente lite or the senior and apparently sane co-widow, and in the absence of explanation the course pursued is eminently calculated to excite suspicion. And over and above all this the transaction was one of grave and obvious improvidence.

I, therefore, hold that the lease on which the defendant relies has created no title in him which bars the plaintiffs' right to possession, though they only sue as Receivers appointed by the Court. It was somewhat feebly suggested in the course of the appellant's opening that certain Small Cause Court proceedings estopped the plaintiffs from denying that the defendant was a monthly tenant and so entitled to notice to quit. But the defendant declines to be treated as a monthly tenant, and when the Vakil for the respondent proposed to deal with this point in the course of his argument, he was stopped by his opponent, who said he did not press it. I, therefore, need not deal further with this plainly unsustainable plea. No other argument than those with which I have dealt was advanced as affording an answer to the plaintiffs' claim for possession.

The result then is that the plaintiffs have (in my opinion) been rightly awarded a decree for possession. They are also entitled to the mesne profits which have been decreed, subject to a small reduction of Rs. 63, the sum accepted by both parties as representing the brief period during which mesne profits would not be payable. The plaintiffs had filed a cross-objection as to the amount awarded in respect of mesne profits, but they were out of time, and were abandoned without our being asked to excuse the delay. The only topic that remains for consideration is the direction as to the new rooms alleged to have been constructed by the defendant. This has been left for determination in execution. But this is a survival of a procedure frequently condemned and no longer countenanced. It was a device commonly employed for the purpose of showing a more satisfactory return of work, but is not now sanctioned. The question involved is one that must be decided in the suit before a decree is passed, and both sides agree to our sending down an issue for the purpose of arriving at a final decision. We, therefore, send down the following issues: —What structures were erected by defendant No. 2 on the land in suit prior to the 15th of November 1908? A description should be given of the structures so erected, distinguishing such of the structures as come within clause 10 of the lease. Both parties will be at liberty to adduce evidence on this point, and the return to this Court should be made in four months. When the return is made, we will dispose of the whole case and will deal with the question of interest on the Government papers in respect of which a claim is made by the appellants.

Babu DHWAKESHWAR PROSAD NARAYAN SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Adverse possession—Bengal Land Registration Act (VII of 1876), s. 78—Registration of name, whether proves possession—Possession of co-tenant, when becomes adverse—Character of evidence required to prove it—Assertion of hostile title—Knowledge of co-tenant out of possession—Suit for partition—Court-fee—Actual or constructive possession not proved—Plaintiff not entitled to maintain suit—Proper remedy—Leave to amend plaint—Costs.

The registration of the name of a person, under the Bengal Land Registration Act, is some evidence of possession, but does not necessarily prove that the person who has been able to get his name substituted in the place of that of his vendor is in possession of any share of the estate.

To enable one of several co-tenants to acquire title by adverse possession as against the others, his possession must be of such an actual, open, notorious, exclusive and hostile character as to amount to an ouster of the other co-tenants, that is, must have been such as to render him liable to an action of ejectment at the suit of the co-tenants.

The evidence to show adverse possession by one co-tenant must be much clearer than between strangers to the title, and the hostile intent of the co-tenant in possession must be shown by unequivocal conduct.

The ouster of the other co-tenants, in order to render the possession adverse, need not be by violent or intimidating expulsion or repulsion; nor need notice of the adverse holding be actually brought home to the other co-tenants by personal or formal communication; but it is sufficient, if the contrary is not proved, that the circumstances show that such knowledge may reasonably be presumed.

A person who has failed to prove that he had possession, actual or constructive of any share of the disputed property, is not entitled to maintain a suit for partition. His remedy is by a suit for joint possession and partition and he may be allowed to amend his plaint on terms as to payment of costs. On the plaint in a suit so framed, Court-fees must be paid ad valorem.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against the preliminary decree in a suit for partition of joint property. The subject matter of the litigation is village Pasraila, an estate which bears No. 2562 on the Revenue Rolls of the Collector of Gaya. The case of the plaintiff is that one Gomti Koer had an one-anna share in this estate in respect whereof she was registered under the Land Registration Act, that on the 12th January 1910 she conveyed her interest to him for a consideration of Rs. 3,500, that he has got his name substituted in the place of that of his vendor in the register, and that he has been in possession since the date of his purchase. He consequently seeks partition of the estate, so that separate lands may be allotted to him in respect of his share. The defendants resist the claim on the ground, amongst others, that neither the plaintiff nor his vendor had any title to the property and that, in any view, the plaintiff cannot sue for partition as he was not in possession of his alleged share at the date of the institution of the suit. On these pleadings, six issues were framed of which the first two raised the question, whether the plaintiff has possession of the share sought to be partitioned and whether the suit was maintainable. The other issues raised the questions of title and limitation. The trial was not restricted to any special issue, so far as we can gather from the order sheet. The Subordinate Judge, however, has dealt with the case in his judgment as if only one issue had been raisod, namely, whether the plaintiff was in possession of an one-anna share. On this question he has found in favour of the plaintiff and has made a preliminary decree for partition according to the shares stated in the plaint. The defendants have appealed to this Court, and have contended that, on the evidence, it should have been held that the plaintiff was not in possession of his alleged share, and the suit for partition should consequently have been dismissed. The first point for investigation is, whether the plaintiff was, at the date of the suit, in possession of the share of the estate claimed by him.

The oral evidence adduced by the plaintiff to prove his possession is extremely unsatisfactory. The first witness who pledged his oath in support of the allegation that the plaintiff was in possession of the share purchased from Gomti Koer, had no concern with the village and was a casual visitor, though he gradually committed himself to assertions that he had seen the collections from tenants and had even supervised them. The plaintiff does not, however, produce any collection-papers, and the tenants from whom rent is said to have been collected have come forward on the side of the defendants to deny that they ever paid rent to the plaintiff. The second witness who alleged that he actually collected rent from the tenants named by him is equally unreliable. He does not produce collection-papers, which, if he is to be believed, were actually prepared. He admits that he was imprisoned in a criminal case. The third and last witness is a solitary tenant who alleges that he and others pay rent to the plaintiff. This evidence in its sum-total is not very convincing and is valueless when contrasted with the evidence on the side of the defendants. Five of the tenants mentioned by the witnesses of the plaintiff depose that they have never paid rent to the plaintiff. They are supported by the patwari, who proves collection of the entire rent on behalf of the defendants from the tenants and produces collection-papers to corroborate his story. The genuineness of these papers does not appear to have been seriously contested in the Court below. The oral evidence, as a whole, negatives the assertion that the plaintiff was in possession of a share of the estate. The conclusion derivable from the oral evidence accords with the indication furnished by the fact of two criminal cases. The purchase by the plaintiff is dated the 12th January 1910, and an order by the Revenue Authorities was made on the 21st November 1910 to substitute his name in the place of that of his vendor. But dispute arose at once between the plaintiff and the defendants, with the result that proceedings were instituted under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the 23rd December 1910. On the 25th March 1911, the Magistrate held that the semindari Kachary to which the dispute related was in the possession of the defendants. About the same time, one of the men under the plaintiff instituted a case against the present defendants under sections 147 and 379 of the Indian Penal Code, arising out of a dispute as to possession of some khud-kasht land in the village. On the 24th March 1911, the Magistrate held that there was great doubt whether the master of the complainant had any land in the village, and refused to take steps against the accused. The present suit, it is significant, was instituted immediately afterwards on the 31st May 1911.

On behalf of the plaintiff, it has been strenuously argued, however, that the possession of the plaintiff is proved by the circumstance that his name was registered under the Land Registration Act. In support of this position, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Ram Pershad Singh v. Lukhpati Koer (1) and Shyama Sundari Dessya v. Mahomed Zarip (2). It may be conceded that the registration of the name of a person under the Land Registration Act is some evidence of possession, but the weight to be attached to this fact must depend upon the circumstances of each case. In the present instance, the name of the vendor of the plaintiff was on the register, and consequently, under section 50 of Act VII of 1876, notice would issue to the transferor alone when the plaintiff applied to have his own name substituted. There is nothing to show that the defendants had notice of the application by the plaintiff or opportunity to contest it. We know, on the other hand, that when the plaintiff attempted to obtain a footing in the village purchased by him, the defendants offered resistance, leading to criminal proceedings which terminated in their favour. The mere fact that if the plaintiff were to sue the tenants for rent they might have no defence to the claim in view of the provisions of section 78 of the Land Registration Act and section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, does not show that the plaintiff had possession at the date of institution of the suit by receipt of rent from the tenants. We hold, accordingly, that the fact that the plaintiff has been able to get his name substituted in the place of that of his vendor does not necessarily show that he is in possession of any share of the estate.

It has finally been argued on behalf of the plaintiff that, inasmuch as he is a co-sharer with the defendants in respect of the property in suit, he must be deemed in possession through the latter, because there can prima facie be no adverse possession between co-tenants. In support of this proposition, reference has been made to the cases of Baroda Sundari Deby v. Annoda Sundari Deby (3), Ittappan v. Mana Vikrama (4), Ujalbi Bibee v. Umakanta Karmokar (5), Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baldeo Das (6) and Shashi Bhushan v. Jatindra Nath Roy (7). This position has been controverted on behalf of the defendants and it has been contended that there may be adverse possession by one tenant-in-common against his co-tenants, if there is exclusion or ouster, and that whether there has been exclusion or ouster in any concrete case must be determined in view of the relationship of the parties, their possession, the mode of life in the particular community to which they belong, the character of the property and other circumstances of a like nature. In support of this proposition reliance has been placed upon the cases of Bandacharya v. Shrinivasa Chariya (8), Gangadhar v. Parashram (9), Amrita Ranji v. Shridhar Narayan (10), Ayenessa Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf (11), Doe dem Fisher and Taylor v. Prosser (12) and Culley v. Doe dem Taylerson (13). We are of opinion that the proposition formulated on behalf of the plaintiff is too widely stated and is not supported by the cases cited.

Every co-tenant has the right to enter into and occupy the common property and every part thereof, provided that in so doing he does not exclude his fellow-tenants or otherwise deny to them some right to which they are entitled as co-tenants; and they, on their part, may safely assume, until something occurs of which they must take notice and which indicates the contrary, that the possession taken and held by him is held as a co-tenant and is in law the possession of all the co-tenants, and not adverse to any of them. It cannot be questioned, however, that one co-tenant may ousst the others and set up an exclusive right of ownership in himself, and an open, notorious and hostile possession of this character for the statutory period will ripen into title as against the co-tenants who were ousted. Thus although, as a general rule, the possession of one co-tenant is not deemed adverse to the other co-tenants, the existence of the relation of co-tenancy does not preclude one co-tenant from establishing an adverse possession in fact as against the other co-tenants, and though the co-tenant enters in the first instance without claiming adversely, his possession afterwards may become adverse. In order to render the possession of one co-tenant adverse to the others, not only must the occupancy be under an exclusive claim of ownership, in denial of the rights of the other co-tenants, but such occupancy must have been made known to the other co-tenants, either by express notice or by such open and notorious acts as must have brought home to the other co-tenants knowledge of the denial of their rights. The same principle is involved in the familiar statement that to enable one of several co-tenants to acquire title by adverse possession as against the others, his possession must be of such an actual, open, notorious, exclusive and hostile character as to amount to an ouster of the other co-tenants, that is, must have been such as to render him liable to an action of ejectment at the suit of the co-tenants. No comprehensive formula can be framed to test whether the possession of a co-tenant in a particular case is adverse to the other co-tenants. But it has been stated that the evidence to show adverse possession by one co-tenant must be much clearer than between strangers to the title, and the hostile intent of the co-tenant in possession must be shown by unequivocal conduct. It is indisputable that acts which might properly be held to show adverse possessin as between strangers, do not necessarily have such effect as between tenants-in-common; acts of ownership by one co-tenant may not in themselves amount to the disseisin of the other co-tenants, and may, indeed, be so explained as to show a consistency with the joint title. But the ouster of the other co-tenants, in order to render the possession adverse, need not be by violent or intimidating expulsion or repulsion; nor need notice of the adverse holding be actually brought home to the other co-tenants by personal or formal communication; but it is sufficient if the contrary is not proved, that the circumstances show that such knowledge may reasonably be presumed. From this point of view, it has been maintained that sole possession by a co-tenant becomes adverse to his fellow-tenants by his repudiation or disavowal of the relation of co-tenancy between them and any act or conduct signifying his intention to hold, occupy and enjoy the premises exclusively and of which the tenant out of possession has knowledge or of which he has sufficient information to put him upon inquiry, amounts to an ouster of the co-tenants; but what is essential is that the overt acts which constitute a definite and continuous assertion of an adverse right must be of an unequivocal character, clearly indicating an assertion of ownership of the premises to the exclusion of the right of the other co-tenants. No useful purpose would be served by an elaborate analysis and examination of the various cases in which these principles have been applied; but reference may be made to the more important amongst them, Doe d. Fisher v. Prosser (12), Wynne v. Styan (14), Holt v. Horrocks (15), Culley v. Doe dem Taylerson (13), Thornton v. France (16), *Doe d. Tested in the light of these principles, the contention of the plaintiff that even if the defendants be found to be in exclusive possession of the property, their possession must be deemed to be on his behalf in respect of his share, proves wholly groundless.

The case for the plaintiff is that he was in possession of his share. That case has completely failed. The possession of his share by the defendants (assuming that he has acquired a title thereto) is presumably adverse to him; when the specific case made by him has failed, he cannot turn round and contend that the defendants were in occupation on his behalf and for his benefit. He does not belong to the same family as the defendants, and no concievable hypothesis has been suggested in support of the view that the possession of the defendants was permissive, there was no fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary relation between the parties. We hold, accordingly, that the plaintiff has failed to prove that he had possession, actual or constructive, of any share of the disputed property. He is consequently not entitled to maintain a suit for partition: Bidhata Roy v. Ram Charitar Roy (39). In that case it was pointed out that the fundamental rule is that partition is not a substitute for ejectment, because partition implies an existing joint possession and enjoyment, to be converted into possession in severalty. The remedy of the plaintiff is by a suit for joint possession and partition, and on the plaint in a suit so framed, Court-fees must be paid ad valorem.

The plaintiff has, as a last resort, prayed that if the Court should hold that he was not in possession at the date of the suit, he may be permitted to amend the plaint. This application, as we have already intimated to the parties, may be granted but only on terms as to payment of costs.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside, and the case remitted to him. The plaintiff is allowed leave to amend the plaint according to his prayer in the petition presented to this Court, copy whereof will be forwarded to the Court below. But the plaintiff will have this indulgence only on condition that he deposits in the Court below, to the credit of the defendants, the costs incurred by them up to this stage in both Courts. The deposit must be made within one month after the arrival of the record in the Court below has been notified to the plaintiff. If the deposit is not so made, the suit will stand dismissed with costs throughout. If the deposit is made, the plaint will be amended, and the defendants will be allowed to file a fresh written statement, the issues will also be re-settled, and the suit will then be re-tried on fresh evidence to be adduced by both parties.

As regards the amount of costs allowed by the lower Court, we observe that the hearing fee has been calculated on the basis of the value of the entire estate. The controversy between the parties, however, related really to an one-anna share, and the hearing fee will be reduced accordingly. The hearing fee in this Court is assessed at twenty gold mohurs. Although, ordinarily in a suit for partition, pure and simple, the parties have to bear their own costs of the suit up to the stage of the preliminary decree, the plaintiff must, in this case, pay the costs of the defendants, who have successfully contested his claim for partition. Nawab Dildar Ali Khan v. Bhowani Sahai Singh (40), Satya Kumar v. Satya Kripal (41), Landell v. Baker (42).

The amount of costs payable by the plaintiff to the defendants under our order will be specified in the decree of this Court.

Appeal allowed.

Evidence—Land revenue reports, whether admissible in evidence—Judicial notice.

A Court is not entitled to take judicial notice of land revenue reports, and they cannot be admitted in evidence unless they are proved satisfactorily.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 6th June 1912, modifying that of the Munsif, Behar, dated the 20th December 1911.

Babu Harihar Prasad Singh, for the Appellants.

Moulvi Muhammad Mustafa Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question which has been seriously argued in this appeal is, whether the lower Appellate Court ought to have allowed rent to the plaintiffs for the rabi crop of 1316. The Munsif found that the plaintiffs failed to prove that there was any rabi crop that year. The Judge assessed three maunds a bigha. The only reason he gave for this assessment was that the finding of the Munsif that there was no rabi crop was not in accordance with the land revenue reports of that year. But the land revenue reports were not proved, and there is nothing to show that the Court was entitled to take judicial notice of them. The lower Appellate Court did not rely on any other evidence, and as the land revenue reports cannot be accepted, the decision on this point must be set aside.

The appeal also relates to the finding of the Judge with regard to the payment of rent for 1316 and 1317. But this point has not been strenuously pressed and is evidently concluded by the finding of fact.

The result is that the appeal will be allowed to this extent that the sum of Rs. 67-4-9 will be deducted from the amount decreed. We make no order as to costs.

Appeal partly allowed.

Abwab, *meaning of—Suit for rent—*Zilla kharach, provision for payment of—Regulation V of 1812, s. 3—Regulation VIII of 1793, s. 54.

Abwab means an arbitrary and indefinite imposition levied by the landlords on their tenants. An item which forms part of the consideration for which the lease is granted is not an abwab.

Where a lease executed prior to the passing of Regulation VIII of 1793, which forbade imposition of abwabs, specifically provided for the payment of zilla kharach:

Held, that as this was a part of the rent agreed upon, the landlord was entitled to recover it under section 3 of Regulation V of 1812.

Appeal against the following judgment of Mr. Justice Chapman, dated 17th March 1913, in Second Civil Appeal No. 2987 of 1910.

CHAPMAN, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The appellants contend that the learned Subordinate Judge should not have allowed the plaintiff a certain sum claimed by him on account of zilla kharach. The contention is that this amount should have been disallowed on the ground that it is an abwab. The relations between the plaintiff and the defendants have to be determined with reference to a permanent lease dating from the year 1783. It was lease of jungle land not cultivated at the time of the lease. From the terms it is clear that the parties contemplated that three years at least would expire before the land became of full value. The agreement was that the rental for the first year should be Rs. 12, for the second year Rs. 18 and for the third year Rs. 22-12; and that after the lapse of three years from the time the land becomes fit for full value, the tenant would pay zilla kharach at the rate of 2 annas 7 karas a rupee.

Now one of the first questions which a Court asks itself in determining whether an item in a lease is abwab or not is, was it an imposition subsequent to the establishment of the asul or original standard rent; or, to put it in other words, did it form part of the consideration for which the land was leased to the tenant? It makes no difference that an objectionable name such as silla kharach is used to describe the item. The leaning of this Court has been to treat such items as part of the consideration, unless they are provided for in a perfectly distinct clause in the kabuliat or lease.

Now it seems to me, having regard to all these considerations, that this item was part of the consideration for which the land was leased and, therefore, was not an abwab. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The respondent has mentioned that the learned Munsif was in error in saying that Rs. 15-8-6 had been paid into Court by the defendants and in directing that that amount should be credited. This is a matter which I cannot conveniently deal with in second appeal. The matter may be dealt with by the Munsif on an application for review.

Babu Girija Prasanna Roy Chowdhury, for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—In the absence of any indication as to what silla kharach includes, I am doubtful as to what my view would have been, had the case come before me in the first instance and had I not enjoyed the advantage of hearing the opinion of four other Judges by whom the case has been heard. I am influenced by the findings of the lower Appellate Court and by the concurrence of opinion of the Munsif, the Subordinate Judge, Mr. Justice Chapman and my learned colleague, and in these circumstances I think I ought to express my agreement with what has been decided.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—In this case the zemindar claimed a certain amount as silla kharach. The lower Courts have held that this amount was not an abwab, but was a part of the rent as agreed upon between the landlord and the tenant under the lease that was granted to the latter in 1783.

It is contended before us that the Courts below ought to have found that this was an illegal abwab, and, therefore, not recoverable from the defendants.

The lease was executed in this case ten years before the Permanent Settlement Regulations. Regulation VIII of 1793 in section 54 provided that the impositions upon the raiyats under the denomination of abwab, mathat and other appellations were to be consolidated with the asal jama, and no new abwabs were to be imposed. This was, however, in respect of certain impositions then known as abwabs and realized arbitrarily and indefinitely from the raiyats. Subsequently in Regulation V of 1812 it was provided that the proprietors of land were entitled to grant leases on any terms convenient to both parties, provided that they did not make any imposition of arbitrary and indefinite cesses. Section 3 of that Regulation further said that "the Courts shall maintain and give effect to the definite clauses of engagments contracted between the parties, or in other words, enforce payment of such sums as may have been specifically agreed upon between them." I think that the amount claimed in this case was specifically agreed upon between the landlord and the tenant, and the landlord was, therefore, entitled to recover it.

In this view of the case I think the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court ought to be maintained.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 497 OF 1910.

June 15, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, KT., and Mr. Justice Beachcroft.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that the first four defendants have no right to open new mines and to raise minerals therefrom on the disputed property, for a perpetual injunction to restrain them from further working three new mines which they have opened and from opening and working new mines, and for incidental reliefs. The case for the plaintiff may be briefly stated. One Paresnath Singh, proprietor of Taluka Gadi Domchanch in the District of Hazaribagh, left two sons, Churaman Singh and Moharaj Singh. After the death of Paresnath Singh, Churaman Singh succeeded to the property; after his death, it passed to his son, Tahalnarain Singh, on whose death it vested in his brother, Moharaj Singh. On the 6th December 1894, Moharaj Singh executed a deed of maintenance grant in favour of Narbada Kumari, junior widow of his brother Churaman Singh. The controversy in this litigation turns upon the true construction of this deed; the plaintiff maintains that the grantor did not part with his right to the minerals by this document, while the defendants contend that, as there was no express reservation of subsoil rights, the generality of the terms of the instrument shows that the mineral rights vested in the grantee. The plaintiff has acquired the right, title and interest of the proprietor of the estate, first, by a conditional mortgage from him, dated the 7th June 1901, and, secondly, by purchase at a sale in execution of a decree against him, held on the 1st March 1904 and confirmed on the 22nd July following. The plaintiff also purchased on the 28th July 1907 one-fourth share of the interest of certain mortgagees who were in possession of the property. The plaintiff may, consequently, be treated as proprietor in partial possession of the property. Of the nine defendants to the suit, the first is Narbada Kumari, the widow of Churaman Singh. The next three defendants are a family of Mahatos, who obtained a mining lease from the two widows of Churaman Singh on the 25th November 1906. The remaining defendants are the mortgagees, a fraction of whose interest has been purchased by the plaintiff. The gist of the claim of the plaintiff is that although Narbada Kumari had no authority, under the terms of the maintenance grant, to give a lease of mining rights, she did so on the 25th November 1906, and that the lessee defendants have wrongfully opened three new mines in village Raidih and have carried away mica worth Rs. 25,000. On the 3rd February 1908, the plaintiff commenced this action for declaration of title, for injunction and for damages. The first four defendants resisted the claim substantially on two grounds; namely, first, that the grantee under the maintenance grant was vested with subsoil rights and was competent to grant mining leases; and, secondly, that the three mines, to which exception is specifically taken, were not new mines, but had been opened and worked before the maintenance grant was made. The Subordinate Judge has, upon the second ground of defence, overruled the contention of the defendants, but, upon the first ground, he has decided in their favour, with the result that he has dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and has contended that the Subordinate Judge has taken an erroneous view of the legal effect of the maintenance grant of the 6th December 1894. This has been controverted on behalf of the defendants, who have, in their turn, attacked the conclusion of the Court below that the three mines mentioned in the plaint were new mines opened by them after they had taken the mining lease of the 25th November 1906. Two questions, consequently, emerge for consideration, namely, first, did the mineral rights continue in the proprietor, notwithstanding the maintenance grant of the 6th December 1894; and, secondly, were the three disputed mines in village Raidih opened before the maintenance grant was made on the 6th December 1894 ?

As regards the first question, it is to be observed that the deed recites that, as according to the usage of the family and the country, the grantor had taken possession of the estate of the last full owner, provision had to be made for his mothers, so that they might spend their lives respectably, comfortably and with dignity in the accustomed manner. The grantor then states, by way of apology as it were, that he wished to give the widows more properties than he actually did, but as the estate was encumbered, he could not do so. Then follows this clause : "I give the under-mentioned properties only to the said Tikaitni Narbada Kumari for her maintenance, so that she may hold possession and occupation thereof and appropriate the produce thereof independently until her death .... She shall have full right and power to hold possession and make collection in the undermentioned properties during her life-time as the proprietrix thereof. After her death, the aforesaid properties shall, without any dispute therein, revert to me or my heirs." A provision is added to the effect that the grantee shall pay to the grantor Rs. 19 annually for revenue and such cesses as might be assessed according to law. The deed concludes with the statement that the grantor had, of his free will and accord, granted the khoreposh sanad as pattah at a fixed annual rent, that it might be of use when required. There can be no room for controversy that the terms in the body of this document, as set out above, do not vest the mineral rights in the grantee. But it is argued that the specification of the properties given in the schedule is conclusive in favour of the defendants. That specification is in these terms :—"Entire sixteen annas of each of the Mouzahs Raidih and Kushana together with all their limits and boundaries, and all sources of income of every kind appertaining to the said mouzahs for the realization, and appropriation and settlement of which the said proprietor has and can have the power, without the exception of anything and any right, together with the khudkasht land called Dakkhingwah below the Sumadrahan, situate in khas Gadi Domchanch, the boundaries whereof are given below, and half the income from forest collections from bankar (forest right), price of wood. Godi Domchanch, Pergunnah Kharagdiha, Thana Kodarama, Sub-Registry Giridhi, District Registry and Collectorate Hazaribagh." Then the boundaries of the khudkasht lands mentioned are described. Finally, the nature of the deed is stated to be "pattah of khoreposh grant for life by way of sanad, amount of the annual rent which the grantee has agreed to pay to the grantor is Rs. 19." Stress is laid on behalf of the defendants on the words of the schedule which describe the property granted as all sources of income of every kind appertaining to the villages for the realization, appropriation, and settlement of which the proprietor has and can have the power, without the exception of anything and any right. It is contended with reference to these words that they are of the widest possible generality, and sufficient to divest the proprietor of subsoil rights in the property. We are not prepared to accept this contention as well-founded. Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, which defines the rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee, provides in clause (o) that the lessee must not work mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted. This is, no doubt, qualified by the introductory words of the section, namely, "in the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary." No question of local usage arises in the case before us. The only point is, whether there is a contract to the contrary, that is, a contract that the lessee may work mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted. No such contract is plainly contained in the body of the instrument, and we are not prepared to hold that such a contract is embodied by implication in the specification of the properties in the schedule, which would, if the contention of the defendants were accepted, enlarge the scope of the grant as made in the body of the deed itself. The position, consequently, is hat there is no express provision in the instrument by which the lessee is authorised to work mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted. There are, on the other hand, weighty reasons against the adoption of the view that the grantor intended to vest the grantee with authority to open and work new mines. The grant was only for life of the grantee for the purposes of her maintenance. It is improbable that the grantor would authorise the grantee to enjoy a right the value and extent of which could not possibly be ascertained at the time. The deed further stated that, on the death of the grantee, the property would revert to the grantor or his heirs: the grantor could not have intended that the grantee might open out mines and take away the minerals, possibly with the result that when the property would revert to the grantor, it might have become wholly valueless. It must also be remembered that if it be held that the grantor intended to vest the grantee with authority to open and work new mines, it would imply that the grantee had authority to open mines, whatever the kind of mineral might be, whether it was mica, coal, iron, or any of the precious metals. We feel no doubt that the grantor did not intend to vest in the grantee the right to open and work new mines, and that the general words which occur in the description of the villages named in the schedule, apply only to surface rights or rights in mines or quarries already open, to which the grantee would have a right under the terms contained in the body of the deed as also under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Reference, however, has been made on behalf of the defendants to judicial decisions which, it is said, support their contention; but an examination of the cases confirms the view we propose to take.

In Tituram v. Elias E. Cohen(1), it was ruled by this Court that it is inconsistent with the ordinary conception of a grant for maintenance, whether limited to the life-time of the grantor or to that of the grantee, that it should confer, either on the grantee or on his transferee, the right to open new mines within the grant and raise and appropriate to his own use the product of them. This view was affirmed, when the case was taken on appeal to the Judicial Committee : Tituram Mukerjee v. Cohen (2). Sir Arthur Wilson stated that a khoreposh grant would be assumed to be only for the life of the grantee, and that such a grant, regarded as one for the life of the grantee, could not be presumed to be more than a grant of rents and profits and could not be presumed to carry with it a right to open mines and remove minerals which are a portion of the soil. The same view had been adopted by this Court, before the decision of the Judicial Committee, upon a full examination of the authorities on the subject in Prince Mahomed Buktyar Shah v. Rani Dhujamani (3). In the case of Kumar Hari Narayan Singh Deo Bahadur v. Sriram (4), which reversed the decision in Sriram Chakravati v. Hari Narain Singh (5), and in Durga Prasad Singh v. Braja Nath Bose (6), which reversed the decision in Brojonath Bose v. Durga Prasad Singh(7), the Judicial Committee held that mineral rights were vested in the zemindar and must be presumed to have remained in him, in the absence of proof that he had parted with them. In each of these two cases, under-ground rights were claimed by persons who asserted that they were permanent tenure-holders, though in the first case the Judicial Committee do not appear to have recognized the permanent tenure. This Court held that the zemindar must be presumed to have parted with all his rights except the right to receive the fixed rent, and that the tenure-holders had, consequently, acquired a right to the minerals. But the Judicial Committee took precisely the opposite view, which had meanwhile been adopted in Rajah Jyoti Prasad Singh v. Lachipur Coal Co. (8). It may be noted that in the earlier cases of Ali Quader Hussain Ali v. Jogendra Narain Roy (9) and Megh Lal Pandey v. Rajkumar Thakur Giridhari Singh (10), which were decided before the decision of the Judicial Committee in Hari Narayan Singh Deo Bahadur v. Sriram (4) and Durga Prasad Singh v. Braja Nath Bose (6), the view had been maintained that in the case of a grant of a permanent tenure without reservation of mineral rights in the proprietor, they must be presumed to have been transferred to the grantee. It is needless to consider whether this view can any longer be maintained in the face of the pronouncement by the Judicial Committee; but in any event, it cannot be of any assistance to the defendants, whose title is based on a mining lease by the holder of a maintenance grant for life. This conclusion is in accordance with that adopted as well settled in the law of England, where the rights of limited owners in mines and minerals are governed by the doctrine of waste. Working new or unopened mines or quarries is waste, but working open mines is not waste; it is enjoyment of profits of the estate: Campbell v. Wardlow (11), Dashwood v. Magniac (12). The right to commit waste is not incidental to the estate of a tenant for life: Whitfield v. Bewit (13), Viner v. Vaughan (14). Consequently, a tenant for life may work opened mines, but may not dig in new mines: Clavering v. Clavering (15), Campbell v. Leech (16), Viner v. Vaughan (14), Bagot v Bagot (17), Campbell v. Wardlow (11), Dashwood v. Magniac (12). No doubt, in the instrument under which the estate of the tenant for life arises, there may be an express provision which authorises him to open new mines, or which gives him an estate without impeachment of waste and thereby enables him to open new mines: Campbell v. Wardlaw (11), Ridge In re, Hellard v. Moody (18). In the case before us, the deed is one for maintenance and for the life of the grantee, and it does not contain any express provision which authorises the grantee to open new mines and to appropriate the minerals therefrom. We must hold accordingly that under the maintenance grant of the 6th December 1894, the grantee had no right to grant a mining lease for the purpose of opening and working new mines.

In the Court below, reliance was placed on behalf of the defendants on the conduct of the parties to ascertain the intention of the grantor. This course could not be properly adopted except in the case of ancient grants, where the terms are ambiguous: Attorney General v. Drummond (19); Drummond v. Attorney General (20). But as Cranworth, L. C., said in Sadlier v. Biggs (21), if there is a deed which says, according to its true construction, one thing, you cannot say that the deed means something else, merely because the parties have gone on for a long time so understanding it; or, as Halsbury, L. C., observed in North Eastern Railway Co. v. Hastings (22), the words of a written instrument must be construed according to their natural meaning, and no amount of acting by the parties can alter, or qualify words which are plain and unambiguous. The conduct of the parties, however, is really of no assistance in this case. Reference is made to a mortgage-deed executed by Churaman Singh, on the 2nd December 1889, which makes express mention of mica and excludes other minerals. This, it is contended, shows that the grantor, Moharaj Singh, was aware of the existence of mica mines when he made the maintenance grant in 1894. Let such knowledge on his part be assumed for purposes of argument; the fact is really inconclusive. The view may well be maintained that if he intended to vest all the subsoil rights in the grantee, he would have explicitly stated so, as he did in the mortgage instrument of the 2nd December 1889. Reference has also been made to the fact that the grantor, on the 16th March 1896, granted a usufructuary mortgage to Jadunath Mukherjee in respect of open and unopened mines to the exclusion of lands in the occupation of persons holding under public or private sales, gifts, khoreposh, mokarari, brahmatar, shivattar, durga and jagir grants. It is suggested that this had reference to the khoreposh lands granted to the first defendant; but there is no foundation for this view. The object of the proprietor was plainly to exclude from the usufructuary mortgage all such lands as were in the possession of persons who held under a valid title derived from him. Reference has finally been made to the circumstance that the first defendant, on the 25th July 1896, granted a mining lease to Jahar Mal and Bahadur Mal and that there was no protest by the proprietor of the estate. To this there are two obvious answers. In the the first place, the lease of the 25th July 1896 is open to the construction that it related only to mines already opened; in the second place, even if the document be interpreted as of wider scope, there is nothing to show that it was ever brought to the knowledge of the proprietor or that the lessees thereunder ever opened and worked new mines; at best, it would only show what the lessee considered to be his right. Reference has also been made to the recitals in the same document to the effect that mining leases had been granted by the first defendant to several persons from time to time. These recitals, by themselves, are not admissible against the plaintiff and in favour of the defendants. But, even if they are used against the plaintiff, they are valueless, as there is nothing to show that the leases mentioned were granted with a view to open new mines, and that the lessees did actually open and work such mines. Reliance has not been placed, it may be added, on the mining lease granted by the first defendant to Gopal Mahto on the 2nd January 1907, for the obvious reason that it bears a date subsequent to the grant of the lease on which the title of the defendants is founded. We are, accordingly, of opinion that the conduct of the parties, even if reliance can be placed upon it, does not support the contention of the defendants. The inference follows that the first defendant did not acquire the right to open and work new mines under the life grant for maintenance in her favour.

As regards the second question, namely, whether the three mines, to which exception is specifically taken in the plaint, were open, as the defendants allege, before the maintenance grant was made on the 6th December 1894, or were opened, as the plaintiff alleges, by the lessee defendants after they had obtained the mining lease of the 25th November 1906, the Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the plaintiff. Upon an examination of the evidence, we are satisfied that the Court below has come to the correct conclusion on this point. The most important witness on the side of the plaintiff on this matter is Bhairo Dosadh. He has pledged his oath that these three mines or pits stand on the land of his holding, and were excavated by the defendants about four years before the time when he gave his deposition in 1910, and he adds that before that time the area, which covers about 7 cottas, was under his cultivation. This statement, which is corroborated by a number of witnesses on the side of the plaintiff, has been accepted as true by the Subordinate Judge, and we see no reason to differ from him in his estimate of the evidence. The evidence adduced by the defendants to rebut this case is of the vaguest description. An attempt is made to make out that the proprietor had, before the maintenance lease was granted, let out the village from time to time, to persons, who made surface excavations which yielded no profit, and consequently discontinued the work sooner or later. It is not shown, however, that the pits excavated and successfully worked by the defendants had any connection with the surface work undertaken by previous prospectors. In this Court, it is sought to be argued that as some shafts had been sunk in the village previously, the three pits now in dispute are open mines. This contention is clearly fallacious. A mine is said to be open when it has been devoted, by a person lawfully entitled to do so, to the purpose of making a profit by the working and sale of the minerals therein: Elias v. Griffith (23). Whether a mine is open or not, is a question of intention, and the intention may be evidenced in various ways: Chaytor v. Trotter (24). If the mine has been worked and the produce sold, it is clear that it is open, even if no profits have been made: Elias v Snowdon State Quarries Co. (25). If a lease has been granted and the lessee has actually worked the mine, it is equally open. It has also been held that although the lessee has never actually worked, the mine is open, if he has paid or become liable to pay a dead rent [In re Kemeys-Tynte (26)], though the contrary view was maintained by Lord Cairns in Elias v. Snowdon State Quarries Co.(25). An actual working is, in any view, not essential if a shaft has been sunk or other development made, the mine intended to be worked by such development is treated as open: Chaytor v. Trotter (24). On the other hand, it is not every working which will render a mine open, for instance, if the working be wrongful or purely experimental, the mine is not open: Chaytor v. Trotter (24), Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Wodehouse (27). When a mine is open, the sinking of a new pit, if it is on the same vein or seam, or, breaking ground in a new place, if it is on the same rock, is not necessarily opening a new mine; but as a rule, the existence of an open mine on one part of an estate does not make the other mines open mines: Campbell v. Wardlaw (11), Elias v. Snowdon State Quarries Co. (25), Clavering v. Clavering (15), Spencer v. Scurr (28) Cowley v. Wellesley (29), Bagot v. Bagot (17), Greville Nugent v. Mackenzie (30), In re Maynerds' Settled Estate (31). In re Chaytor (32). Tested in the light of these principles, the case for the defendants proves wholly unsubstantial. Even Floyd, the most reliable witness on their side and manager of Dirgopal who carried on mining operations from 1890 to 1893, is not able to give any definite evidence as to the nature and extent of the operations in Raidih in his time; on the other hand, his evidence indicates that there was nothing beyond prospecting work at Raidih, and it is fairly clear that whatever work was attempted, was not at the place where the disputed pits have been sunk, but at Araria, nearly one third of a mile from the place where the houses of the tenants stood. Nor is there any reason to think that old workings, such as they were, were on the same vein or seam as the pits in dispute. On a careful scrutiny of the whole evidence, we are of opinion that the evidence as to the mining or prospecting operations before 1894 is so indefinite in respect of their nature, locality and extent, that it is impossible for the Court to hold that the disputed pits or mines were open mines as alleged by the defendants; on the other hand, their allegations that these pits were not new, made in 1906, but were in existence before 1894, has been conclusively proved to be untrue.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Sub-ordinate Judge reversed and the suit decreed. The plaintiff will have a declaration that the first four defendants have no right to open and work new mines in village Raidih. A permanent injunction will also issue, to restrain these defendants from further working the three mines mentioned in the plaint, and from opening and working new mines in Raidih. The decree will also direct that defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 do render an account of the mica abstracted by them from the three mines mentioned, from the 25th November 1906 (the date of their lease) to the 3rd February 1908 (the date of institution of the suit). No order is made as to the mica, if any, abstracted pendente lite, as the claim is limited in the plaint to damages for mica taken up to the date of the institution of the suit. As regards the measure of damages, the value of the minerals, wrongfully abstracted, must be calculated as at the date of the abstraction, and the defendants will be allowed both the expense of converting them into chattel and of carrying them to the pit's mouth: Trotter v. Maclean (33), Prince Mahomed Buktyar Shah v. Rani Dhoja-

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 35 OF 1913.

June 16, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Beaman and Mr. Justice Hayward.

ANANDIBAI BHASKAR NILKANTH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

NARAYAN DHONDDEV TATTOO AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 135J—Presumption attaching to entries in Record of Rights - Mortgage - Properties mortgaged—Ownership of mortgagor—Suit between mortgagee and third party—Burden of proof—Registration Act (XVI 1908), s. 60—Endorsement by Registering Officer—Evidence.

Section 135J of the Bombay Land Revenue Code enacts that entries in the Record of Rights shall be presumed in effect to be a true statement of their contents Therefore, in the absence of any other evidence, a Court would be obliged to be guided by any facts so entered in the Record of Rights.

In a suit between the mortgagee and a third party the onus of proving that the properties comprised in the mortgage-deed belong to the mortgagor, lies upon the mortgagee.

The Registering Officer's endorsement on a registered document is evidence, though, of course, necessarily not conclusive of the truth of the facts set forth therein.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Poona, in Suit No. 303 of 1910.

Mr. J. R. Gharpure, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. D. Daru, for Respondent No. 2.

Mr. P. D. Bhide, for Respondents Nos. 3 and 4.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this appeal has raised three contentions: (1) that the Court below was in error in holding that of the alleged consideration of Rs. 5,000, Rs. 1,300 were not proved to have been paid; (2) that the Court below was in error in exempting from the operation of the mortgage five Survey Nos. 183 and 185 held by the Court below to belong to defendant No. 3, and Nos. 155, 156 and 157 held by the Court below to belong to defendant No. 4; (3) that the instalments allowed by the Court below are unjustifiable in all the circumstances of the case; and that this Court ought to alter that part of the decree of the Court below, even though it confirms the rest of the decree. Upon all these points after hearing very full arguments on behalf of the appellant and of the respondents Nos. 3 and 4, we are of opinion that the appellant is entitled to succeed. We think that the Court below took much too strict a view of the requirements of proof in respect of Rs. 1,300, having regard to the obvious disadvantage under which the plaintiff lay.

Here again the appellant's case for the purpose of argument may be divided into three parts. The plaintiff, who was a minor and represented by a guardian, who himself knows nothing whatever of these transactions, endeavoured to convince the learned Judge below that the alleged consideration was fully paid, upon three main grounds of inference. First, in respect of an assistance suit, the plaintiff contended that inasmuch as the defendant therein made no reference to any failure of consideration and for the purposes of that suit the consideration was impliedly the alleged consideration of Rs. 5,000, it is unreasonable to suppose that the defendant's contention here is well-founded. If he really had this grievance in respect of a partial failure of the consideration money he would have certainly said so in the assistance suit; secondly, in regard to the consideration of a second usufructuary mortgage of Rs. 2,366, the plaintiff's argument is that had the defendant been still entitled to Rs. 1,300 from him on the prior mortgage, he would certainly have refused to acknowlege the debt of Rs. 2,366 without a reference to this sum to which he would then have been entitled; and lastly, that the rent-notes admittedly executed by the defendant imply that the principal sum of the mortgage was Rs. 5,000. This is arrived at by assuming that the rate of interest was 13 annas per cent. per mensem, and when calculated on Rs. 5,000 for a period of nine months or three-quarters of a year, yields a rent of as nearly as possible Rs. 370 which was the rent agreed to be paid by the defendant for nine months. We think that all these inferences are very cogent, and that the Court can hardly have expected more from the plaintiff in the circumstances of the case by way of strict proof. It is very easy for the defendants simply to deny the receipt of a part of the consideration, knowing well that the minor plaintiff is not in a position to have very accurate information as to the events which happened in 1892. But we do think, after carefully considering the record as it stands and the arguments founded upon it, that there is no sufficient reason whatever to doubt that, as appears on the mortgage-bond, the consideration money advanced was Rs. 5,000, and not merely Rs. 3,700 as now alleged by the defendant. For what they are worth the entries in the Record of Rights, to which we must assume that the defendant here was a party, confirm our conclusion. In one of these entries, the mortgage is referred to and the consideration is stated to have been Rs. 5,000, and not Rs. 3,700. We are, therefore, satisfied that the learned Judge below was in error in refusing to decree to the plaintiff Rs. 5,000 as principal on the mortgage.

The next point relates to the lands which the learned Judge below has declared not to be covered by the plaintiff's mortgage. Here again the onus of proof was thrown, and rightly thrown no doubt in the first instance, upon the plaintiff, but we think that the plaintiff has satisfactorily discharged it. It is to be observed in this connection that neither of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 appear to have taken the least interest in the conduct of the suit. They restricted themselves to their written statements denying the plaintiff's claim so far as the mortgage was sought to be extended to these lands, but they did not appear before the Judge, or so far as we can see, offer any evidence with the single exception of Exhibit 78 in support of this contention. How Exhibit 78 got on the record is not very clear.

The facts, so far as they are disclosed upon the evidence relating to these lands, are briefly these. First of all, Survey Nos. 183 and 185. These appear to have been mortgaged by the predecessor-in-title of the present mortgagor in 1878 and this is evidenced by Exhibit 81. We see no reason whatever to doubt the genuineness of that paper or the truth of the transactions which it proves. So that in 1878 at any rate, the defendant or his predecessor-in-title appears to have been the owner of Nos. 183 and 185. In 1892 these two lands are embraced in the mortgage upon which this suit is brought, and the plaintiff under the provisions of the Record of Rights Act was compelled to annex to his plaint extracts from that record relating to lands in suit. It is upon these extracts from the Record of Rights and upon these alone that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 rely. In fairness we ought to say here that defendant No. 3 also is a minor and to that extent labours under something like the same disadvantages as the plaintiff. The defendant No. 4 appears to have been an old Mali woman, and according to her own story has for many years been in Vahivat of the other three numbers to which we will presently refer. The Record of Rights appears to have been written up touching these five numbers in the year 1907, and Nos. 183 and 185 are shown in the name of the khatedar, defendant No. 3. The mortgagor is described as the tenant. It is noteworthy, however, that defendant No. 3 is entered in this record as khatedar since 1905. When these entries were made and when this suit was filed, the old Record of Rights Act of 1903 had not been repealed, and under that Act entries in the record appear to have had no probative value. At any rate no Court was under any legal obligation to attach any evidentiary weight to them. In 1913, that is to say, after the trial of this suit the old Record of Rights Act was repealed and incorporated as Chapter XA in the Land Revenue Code. There we find section 135J, which introduces a great change in this respect. It enacts that entries in the record henceforth shall be presumed in effect to be a true statement of their contents, and in the absence of any other evidence, I suppose, the Court under this section 135J would be obliged to be guided by any facts so entered in the Record of Rights. Whether a provision of that kind should be interpreted in appeal retrospectively is a question of nicety, for it is evident that when the Judge below dealt with materials before him, these extracts from the Record of Rights might have been entirely neglected had he wished to neglect them. Had he adopted that attitude, it is clear that there would have been absolutely no evidence in respect of Nos. 183 and 185 to be set against the plaintiff's evidence that his mortgagor was the owner of those lands in 1878, that he professed to be the owner and to mortgage them in 1892, and, therefore, it established a prima facie case, at any rate, that when defendant No. 1's father executed this mortgage he was the owner of these lands. There is, of course, the oral evidence of defendant No. 1 who now appears to be siding with defendants Nos. 3 and 4. But we do not think that that could have carried any weight, had the learned Judge below not desired to give full effect to the entry in the Record of Rights. Further, it is to be noted that defendant No. 1 himself stood surety to the mortgage-deed upon which the plaintiff now sues. But even assuming that section 135J has retrospective effect, we still do not think that those entries should necessarily lead to the conclusion which the Court below has adopted. Assuming that the mortgage of 1892 was duly effected by the mortgagors, who were then the owners of the land, it is quite conceivable, indeed quite likely, that by the year 1907 this defendant may have entered into other arrangements, trafficked with parts of the mortgagad property, and so got the entry relating to lands Nos. 183 and 185 made in the Record of Rights, and if that be the truth of the matter, we are at a loss to understand how it can affect the mortgagee's rights under his mortgage of 1892

With regard to the other three lands, namely, Nos. 155, 156 and 157, the entry in the Record of Rights shows that the khatedar was one Gopal, and defendant No. 4 appears to have been his vahivatdar. It is significant that this Gopal is the executant of the deed exhibited as Exhibit 92 of the year 1892 and entered into about one month before the plaintiff's mortgage. That deed purports to have been a relinquishment by Gopal, a bhaubund of the defendant, mortgagor of these lands. It has been strenuously contended on behalf of defendant No. 4, the Mali woman, called the vahivatdar in the Record of Rights, that Exhibit 82 has not been proved. This is a registered document, and the defendant who has been throughout the case hostile to the plaintiff has proved his father's signature thereon. There is also the Registrar's note which may be evidence, though of course necessarily not conclusive evidence, of the truth of the facts set forth therein. This is especially provided by section 60 of the Registration Act, and a consideration of the decisions upon that section leaves no doubt in our minds that such an official endorsement may be used and ought to be used as evidence, and in first appeal, where this Court is in a position to make use of whatever materials are available upon questions of fact as well as questions of law, may well be taken along with the signature of Dhondu and the surrounding circumstances to be evidence of the truth of the facts stated therein. So that we think that this document is quite sufficiently proved for the limited purpose for which it was produced by the plaintiff. It was not sought to give effect to this document, but merely to use it as collateral proof of the legal relations of certain parties touching these three Survey numbers. Here again, we think, that the plaintiff's evidence is distinctly superior to that of defendant No. 4, if indeed there can be said to be any evidence at all in favour of that party. The Record of Rights, as I have said, shows that the executant of Exhibit 2 was declared to be the khatedar of this land in 1907, and that defendant No. 4 was then merely a vahivatdar. How this can possibly affect the mortgagee's rights acquired in 1892, if at that time the mortgagor was the owner of the land in suit, we do not understand, and we take that to be the true state of facts. We believe that in 1892 the defendant mortgagor was the owner, not only of Nos. 183 and 185, but also of Nos. 155, 156 and 157. We are, therefore, of opinion that these lands are subject to the plaintiff's mortgage.

As regards the instalments allowed by the learned Judge below, we think all we need do is to increase the amount of these instalments, having regard to the increased amount we are now decreeing to the plaintiff from Rs. 900 to Rs. 1,500 a year, leaving all the other conditions annexed to the payment of such instalments so enhanced as in the decree of the Court below. The decree will be for Rs. 10,000 (Rs. 5,000 principal and Rs. 5,000 interest). There will be interest at 6 per cent. on Rs. 10,000, from the date of the suit till satisfaction. The plaintiff must have his costs throughout all these proceedings. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 to pay half the costs of this appeal. Plaintiff to pay defendant No. 2's costs such as they are of this appeal, and he should recover the remainder of his costs from defendant No. 1 throughout.

Contract to sell, with a reciprocal contract to mortgage by promisee—Failure to mortgage—Gross carelessness on part of promisee—Specific performance, whether allowed.

The defendant agreed to sell to the plaintiff two shops for Rs. 5,900. Rs. 200 were paid in advance as earnest money, Rs. 2,300 were to be paid before the Sub-Registrar, and for the remaining Rs. 3,400 the plaintiff was to mortgage the two shops with possession to the defendant. Both the sale-deed and the mortgage-deed were to be executed and registered within two weeks. In case of default on the plaintiff's part, the defendant was to retain the earnest money, and in case of default on the defendant's part, the plaintiff was to receive back the Rs. 200 and a further sum of Rs. 200 as damages. Both the deeds were duly executed but not registered, owing to the plaintiff's failing to produce the mortgage-deed before the Sub-Registrar for registration. According to the plaintiff the deed was eaten or carried off by rats. The plaintiff sued for specific performance:

Held, (1) that it is discretionary with the Courts to give a decree in such cases; (2) that assuming the facts to be as stated by the plaintiff, the gross carelessness which he had exhibited was such that he did not deserve a decree for specific performance.

JUDGMENT.

CHEVIS, J.—On the 16th October 1909 the plaintiffs entered into an agreement with the defendant, the principal terms of which were as follows. The defendant was to sell to plaintiffs two shops for Rs. 5,900. Rs. 200 were paid in advance as earnest money, Rs. 2,300 were to be paid before the Sub-Registrar at time of registration, and for the remaining Rs. 3,400 plaintiff was to mortgage the two shops with possession to the defendant. Both sale deed and mortgage-deed were to be executed and registered within two weeks, i. e., by 30th October 1909. In case of default on plaintiffs' part defendant was to retain the Rs. 200 earnest money. In case of default on defendant's part plaintiffs were to receive back the said Rs. 200, and a further sum of Rs. 200 as damages.

Both deeds were duly executed, but not registered, owing, so it appears, to plaintiffs' failing to produce the mortgage-deed before the Sub-Registrar for registration. According to plaintiffs the deed was eaten or carried off by rats. Plaintiffs sue for specific performance.

The District Judge framed as a preliminary issue the following: "On the facts stated in the pleadings is the suit for specific performance maintainable?" Then comes an order, "I have heard arguments both on the preliminary issue, and on the case at large, orders to morrow." Then comes the judgment, in which the learned District Judge overrules a plea on behalf of the defendant that certain persons to whom he has since mortgaged the shops should be made parties, and also decides the preliminary issue above quoted in favour of the plaintiffs, but proceeds to dismiss the suit on the ground that plaintiffs' failure to get the mortgage-deed registered is no answer to their demand that defendant should fulfil his part of the bargain, as in the nature of things the sale deed must precede the mortgage-deed, plaintiffs being unable to mortgage the property until they have become the owners, and it being impossible to register both deeds simultaneously. So the learned District Judge gives plaintiffs a decree.

The defendant appeals to this Court.

We do not think the reasons given by the District Judge are sound. In our opinion the agreement to mortgage to the defendant was part of the whole agreement, and had plaintiffs demanded that a sale-deed should be executed and the whole of the remaining sale price, i. e., Rs. 5,700 paid in cash, we think the defendant would have been quite justified in refusing to sell on such terms. Whether the deeds could be registered simultaneously or not is a matter of no importance, for documents take effect from time of execution and not from registration.

Having disposed of the preliminary issue in plaintiffs' favour, we think, the District Judge should have ascertained from the parties whether they wished to produce evidence. It is complained before us that defendant was quite taken by surprise when the District Judge gave judgment in plaintiffs' favour.

It certainly cannot be said that all the facts are admitted. The defendant denies that the mortgage-deed was lost or destroyed as alleged, and the plaintiffs deny the allegation of the defendant that he subsequently lost the sale-deed In fact both parties are entirely at issue as to which party is to blame for the non-fulfilment of the bargain. The defendant asserts that the plaintiffs hung back and falsely pretended that the mortgage-deed had been lost, thus driving the defendant, who was in urgent need of the money, to mortgage the houses elsewhere, while the plaintiffs' allege that the defendant, having repented of his bargain, has taken advantage of the plaintiffs' having accidentally lost the mortgage-deed. What the precise facts are cannot be said, for until both parties have been allowed due opportunity of proving their allegations, it would be improper to pronounce which party is to blame. But even if we admit for the sake of argument that the defendant's conduct in the matter is not straightforward and that plaintiffs' allegations are correct, it is still obvious that plaintiffs are greatly to blame for their gross carelessness in allowing the mortgage-deed, which had been duty executed and was to be presented for registration, to be destroyed or carried off by rats. When the plaintiffs took the document into their custody it was their duty to take proper care of it, and not to leave it unguarded. It is discretionary with the Courts to give a decree in such cases, and we are of opinion that assuming the facts to be as stated by the plaintiffs, the gross carelessness which they have exhibited is such that they do not deserve a decree for specific performance.

At the same time we do not think that the blame lie all on one side; we are extremely sceptical as to the truth of defendant's statement that he has since lost the sale-deed and defendant's counsel has expressed his willingness to refund the Rs. 200 received as earnest money. We think, therefore, that the plaintiffs may well be given back the Rs. 200 which they advanced.

We accept the appeal and reverse the decision of the learned District Judge, but we grant the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 200. The parties will bear their own costs in both Courts.

KENSINGTON, C. J.—I agree with the conclusion of my learned colleague that the merits of this case are properly met by a money-decree to plaintiffs for Rs. 200, and regret that delivery of judgment has been accidentally delayed. I have only to add that the arguments before us covered a good deal of rather technical ground, which need not be discussed in view of our ultimate conclusion. The real point which we had to consider was whether there ought to be a remand for evidence before we could dispose of the case. After hearing the explanations of both sides at some length, we found that a remand would serve no useful purpose and that it was to the interest of all parties that this unsatisfactory dispute should not be allowed to drag on with no reasonable prospect of any more definite result. It is sufficiently clear that the sale negotiations of 1909 fell through because the parties were not really in agreement and that neither side acted in a straightforward manner. It is, under these circumstances, impossible to allow plaintiffs' decree for specific performance to stand, and no evidence which could be now produced would be of material assistance.

The appeal is accepted and the decree in plaintiffs' favour will be modified as proposed.

Appeal accepted; Decree modified.

Trade-mark, law of—Trade-mark, whether can be assigned or can descend in gross—Originator of trade-mark, right of—Good-will, meaning of—Good-will, transferee of, right of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 117—Licensee—Estoppel.

In India the law of trade-marks is not governed by Statute: there is no Statutory system of registration, and the rights and liabilities in connection with trade-marks are determined by reference to the principles of the Common Law of England.

British American Tobacco Co. Ld. v. Mahboob Bulsh, 7 Ind. Cas. 279; 15 C. W. N. 290; 38 C. 110, referred to.

It is in the inherent nature of a trade-mark that it cannot be assigned or descend in gross, for it is a mode of representing the origin of the goods to which it is attached, or their trade association.

The representation of a trade-mark may perhaps only be true of its originator, but usage has sanctioned a more liberal treatment based on the principle of identification by succession and, therefore, successors in business have been allowed to use their predecessors' trade-marks where the representation still continues to be substantially true.

An originator of a trade-mark of a natural product, who certifies to their good quality, is entitled to it and has a right to alienate it.

A trade-mark can only be assigned together with the good-will of the business to which it relates.

Where, therefore, the trade-marks of jute-balers were assigned together with the business of jute-balers, the transfer was held to be valid.

Good-will is the benefit and advantage of the good name, reputation and connection of a business. It is the attractive force which brings in custom. It is the one thing which distinguishes an old established business from a new business at its first start.

A transferee of the good-will is entitled to use the name in which the business was carried on and to represent himself as carrying on that business.

Under section 117 of the Evidence Act a licensee of a trade-mark shall not be permitted to deny that his licensor had, at the time when the license commenced, authority to grant such license.

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Imam, dated 7th April 1913.

FACTS of the case fully appear from the judgment of Mr. Justice Imam reported in 22 Ind. Cas. 372.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, Messrs Jagannath & Co., are described in the heading of the plaint as a firm carrying on business as jute-balers and shippers and merchants at No. 117, Harrison Road, in the town of Calcutta.

The defendants are E. C. H. Cresswell, H. A. Smyth and Geofrey Watson, who carry on business in co-partnership as jute-balers, brokers and merchants, under the name of Messrs. Moran & Co. at 11, Lall Bazar Street, Calcutta, and G. S. Hannah and C. L. Smallwood, who carry on business in co-partnership as jute-balers, brokers and merchants, under the name of Messrs. W. Haworth & Co. at No. 1, Mission Row. It is alleged in the plaint that the plaintiff firm has been and is the proprietor of four jute trade-marks set forth in the schedule, and the plaintiffs' case is that on the 8th of July 1911 the defendants Moran & Co., and on the 1st of March 1912 the defendants Haworth & Co. acquired the right to use and permit the use of these trade-marks and that in return the defendant firms severally covenanted to maintain the reputation of these marks and to pay an annual fixed royalty of Rs. 10,000 in cash and Rs 13,000 in bills. These agreements were repudiated by Haworth & Co. on the 2nd July and by Moran & Co. on the 15th August 1912; and the plaintiffs, without assenting to these repudiations, have instituted this suit on the 5th September 1912, claiming Rs. 3, 50,000 as damages on account of the alleged depreciation of the trade-marks, and Rs. 10,000 in cash, and the execution of three several drafts for the aggregate sum of Rs. 13,500 for and by way of royalty for the jute season 1912-13, or in the alternative Rs. 23,500 as damages.

All the defendants have resisted the claim, and the suit has been heard by Imam, J., who disallowed the claim for damages for depreciation; but passed a decree for Rs. 23,500 in respect of the claim for royalty.

Against this judgment three separate appeals have been filed, one by Haworth & Co,.

a second by Cresswell and Smyth and a third by Watson.

The plaintiffs have on their side taken cross-objections. These several appeals and cross-objections have been heard together and will be determined in one judgment.

All the appellants advance one common ground of appeal, that the plaintiffs had no title to the alleged trade-marks, that they passed no interest to the defendants and that there is no legal consideration for the obligation attributed to them. Watson makes the further point that, having regard to the date of his becoming a partner in Moran & Co.—April 1912,—he came under no liability. This plea, however, was expressly limited by Counsel before us to the claim for damages, and was not put forward as an answer to the claim for royalty.

We will first trace the title to the alleged trade-marks asserted by the plaintiffs.

It is said that these marks were originated by Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee, who carried on business, presumably in Calcutta, as a jute-baler until his death in 1893, under the two names of S. C. Chatterjee and M. N. Chatterjee. Apart from subsidiary dealings by way of mortgage and so forth, it is sought to establish the devolution of these marks to the plaintiffs as follows.

On the 24th September 1904 Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee's widow purported to assign to Landale and Morgan, a firm of jute-brokers and agents, seven marks, including the four in suit, and also the good-will of the business of jute-balers formerly carried on by Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee, the consideration being Rs. 75,000.

On the 26th September 1904 Landale and Morgan in consideration of Rs. 85,000 assigned to Dooli Chand, a baler and dealer in jute trading under the style or firm of Hursook Das Dooli Chand, these seven marks and the good-will of the firm of Landale and Morgan "of, into, upon or concerning the said business of jute-balers formerly carried on by the said S. C. Chatterjee, deceased, and thereafter by the firm in succession thereto, and the sole and exclusive right to use the said trade-marks or brands mentioned and described in the schedule hereunder written and the name of the said S. C. Chatterjee in connection with the said business and to bale jute-cuttings, jute-rejections and all other kinds of jute with and under such marks and brands and name and all the estate, right, title and interest of the firm therein."

On the 8th of May 1907 Dooli Chand purported to assign the trade-marks and the business of Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee to Gocul Chand Khettan for Rs. 3,50,000 and on the 3rd of April 1908 Gocul Chand Khettan purported to make a similar assignment to the plaintiffs for Rs. 1,90,000.

On the 8th July 1911 the plaintiffs in their turn executed an exclusive license, for the period between the date of the instrument and the 30th June 1914 in favour of Moran & Co., of these four trade-marks, and it was thereby agreed that the licensees should and might at all times during the term peaceably and quietly use, or employ or permit or authorise others to use or employ, exclusively, the trade-marks, and to hold the good-will of the business of Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee, the original baler, and the marks as far as any of the marks were concerned, without any lawful interruption or interference by the proprietors. On the 1st of March 1912, the licensees' rights were assigned to Haworth & Co.

In India the law of trade-marks is not governed by Statute: there is no statutory system of registration, and the rights and liabilities in connection with trade-marks are determined by reference to the principles of the Common Law of England: British American Tobacco Co., Ld. v. Mahboob Buksh (1).

It is thus established that a trade-mark cannot be assigned or descend in gross; and this rests on no arbitrary rule, but is a necessary consequence of the inherent nature of a trade-mark; for it is a mode of representing the origin of the goods to which it is attached, or their trade association, and the truth of the representation is essential.

In its strictest meaning the representation of a trade-mark may perhaps only be true of its originator, but usage has sanctioned a more liberal treatment based on the principle of identification by succession.

And so successors in business have been allowed to use their predecessors' trade-marks where the representation still continues to be substantially true.

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 279. 15 C. W. N. 280; 38 C. 110.

Can it, then, be said within the permitted limits of deviation from strict accuracy that the plaintiffs are entitled to the trade-marks in suit?

It must, we think, be taken that Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee was entitled to those trade-marks, and it is no obstacle in the way of that view that the subject of the marks was a natural product and he was merely their selector, who certified to their good quality: Major Brothers v. Franklin & Son (2). Nor do we think that it has been shown that the marks were so personal to the originator as to be inalienable.

Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee carried on the business of a baler. He died in September 1893, and the books of the Calcutta Baled Jute Association indicate that his marks continued to be used from the time of his death. This doubtless was with the authority of his successors, but whether there was such a disposition of the good-will of the business as would be necessary to support this authority, does not appear till 1904.

In that year we have the assignment by the widow in favour of Landale and Morgan to which we have already referred.

This and each succeeding assignment is expressed to be a transfer not only of the trade-marks, but also of the business of jute-balers formerly carried on by Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee. In form, therefore, there has been compliance with the rules that a trade-mark can only be assigned together with the good-will of the business to which it relates.

But is this merely a formal compliance without any reality, a mere device which ought not to be recognised as satisfying the conditions on which a successor is entitled to use a trade-mark he did not originate? For the appellants it is contended that it is, and in support of this much persistent reliance has been placed on an argumentative but unhappily-worded paragraph in the plaint (paragraph 4).

Any one who attempts to express his meaning in a single sentence 27 lines in length runs the risk of being misunderstood, and the author of this paragraph has not escaped the common fate. It is possible that the paragraph was an attempt to escape from the result of the decision in British American Tobacco Co., Ld. v. Mahboob Bukhsh (2) (1908) 1 K. B. 712; 77 L. J. K. B. 601; 981 L. T. 926, (1), and was composed more in reference to that decision than to the actual terms of the several assignments. But whether that be so or not, there is no force in the argument that the actual terms of those assignments are affected by the argumentative statement in the plaint.

They in fact purport to transfer the good-will of Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee & Co. "Good-will", Lord Macnaghten has said, "is the benefit and advantage of the good name, reputation and connection of a business. It is the attractive force which brings in custom. It is the one thing which distinguishes an old, established business from a new business at its first start": Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller and Co.'s Margarine Ld. (3). Manifestly that which goes to form the good-will would vary with the nature and conditions of the business. Certainly a transferee would be entitled to use the name in which the business was carried on and to represent himself as carrying on that business. This right passed under the several assignments; for, under their terms, each assignee became legally entitled to exercise these rights, and each assignor lost these advantages.

But then it is said that there is no evidence that any use was made of these rights, or that any assignee carried on the business in the name of Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee and in particular, that it is not shown that Dooli Chand, who had a baling business of his own, kept this assigned business separate.

In dealing with these objections the character of this suit has to be borne in mind and the relations of the parties; it is not brought by one who claims to be the owner of a mark against a stranger for infringement; it is brought against two firms who are at any rate expressed to be licensees and purported to take in that capacity. And a licensee shall not be permitted to deny that his licenser had, at the time when the license commenced, authority to grant such license (Indian Evidence Act, section 117).

The authority of the plaintiffs to grant the license under consideration depends upon whether they acquired a title to the trade-marks, and this they could not acquire in the circumstances of this case without an effective assignment of the business of Surjoo Coomar Chatterjee & Co.

This would seem to preclude the defendants from questioning the conditions on which the plaintiffs' authority rested, that is to say, the acquisition by them of the business of S. C. Chatterjee & Co. and the trade-marks. The section is positive in its terms, and we are bound to give full effect to it. Had the plaintiffs based their case on the licenses and resisted any attempt to invalidate their title by a reference to its history, they would have been within their rights; and we cannot think that their case has been prejudiced by the mode in which it has been presented.

At any rate section 117 would cast on the defendants the burden of proving that the good-will of the business had lost its separate existence by merger or otherwise, or had not passed to the plaintiffs, to support and justify the transfer of the trade-marks, and that the plaintiffs had not the authority they professed to exercise. This the defendants had not done.

On the contrary it has been urged for what it was worth that the association of the names M. N. Chatterjee & Co. and S. C. Chatterjee & Co. with the trade-marks itself involved carrying on business in the old name.

Had the defendants proved their allegation of misrepresentation on the plaintiffs' part, that would have seriously affected the value of the estoppel on which the plaintiffs rely.

But no such proof has been given, and not one of the defendants has gone into the witness-box.

Then it has been contended that the license was in gross and, therefore, was for an illegal consideration, or at any rate for no consideration, but the agreement purports to vest in the licensees a contractual right to the business. The illegality of the consideration has not been made out, nor can it be said that there was no consideration within the meaning of the Indian Contract Act. From the amounts paid or agreed to be paid at different times, it is obvious that the marks were regarded as possessing considerable commercial value. Nor must it be forgotten that for the first year of its term the license was used and paid for and that as a result of the year's working this commercial value of the marks has been seriously depreciated. Though the leasing or assigning of trade-marks without a real transfer of an existing business is a nullity from a legal point of view and in fact deprives them of the characteristics to secure which they are recognised by law, yet we cannot in the circumstances of this case hold that as against the licensees the plaintiffs have not a good claim to royalty, and we agree with the conclusion at which Imam, J., arrived. We only desire to add that no objection has been urged before us to the form in which the decree in respect of royalty has been passed, and we, therefore, refrain from discussing it.

While Imam, J., decreed the payment of royalties, he dismissed the claim for damages, and to this the plaintiffs have taken a cross-objection. They rely on clauses 4 and 7 of the agreement of the 8th July 1911, and allege that the defendants Moran & Co. permitted jute to be packed under the marks which was inferior to the quality of the standard fixed by the London Jute Association for those marks or for the corresponding marks of the same group, or otherwise committed breaches of the rules and regulations of the London Jute Association by reason whereof the marks have been removed from the respective groups (plaint, para. 10).

This claim is now made against Moran & Co. alone, and not against Haworth, whose predicament in the litigation one cannot but feel to be unfortunate.

It is conceded by Moran & Co. that the marks were included in the London Jute Association's groups for 1911, and not in those for 1912; but this, it is argued, is a matter with which these clauses 4 and 7 have no concern. The argument requires an explanation.

In the jute trade, marks have been and are largely employed as an assurance of quality. This has led to the establishment of several groups, and among them the 6-marks group was of especial importance. As the title suggests, there were 6 marks in this group, and each mark was regarded as an assurance that the jute bearing it was up to the standard of a grade called "Firsts" in the trade. Later an eight-marks group was established, and this comprised these same 6 marks and two others that had acquired a reputation of merit. It would seem, however, that this 8-marks group, though largely identical with the 6-marks group, was in fact an independent group; and so contracts were made on the basis of one or other of these two groups, or of other groups of marks; for there were many other groups, but with them we have no concern at present.

This then is how matters stood at the commencement of the jute season 1911-12, or in other words, on the 1st July 1911.

At this time the London Jute Association had determined to establish its own groups of marks, and without attempting to explore the several reasons by which they had been influenced to this, it may be reasonably surmised that the vicious practice of leasing marks and the results of that practice had in some measure caused the mischief that this new departure was intended to counteract.

It was an easy mode of controlling the marks in use, if only the trade as a whole lent its support. At first apparently this support was somewhat feeble, and contracts on the basis of the Association groups were few; but now they are an important, if not the principal, basis of jute dealings.

This policy evidently had long been under consideration, but it did not take definite and announced shape until the 1st July 1911, when a circular was issued in the terms appearing in Exhibit No. 1 in this case.

When the London Jute Association thus established groups of their own, they adopted the marks then in use in the trade, and (among others) those of the 6 and 8-marks groups.

There were rules regulating the inclusion or non-inclusion of marks in the Association groups, and some undoubtedly were more stringent than the trade conscience, which had previously regulated, so far as it can be said that there was any regulation, the recognition by the trade or the Association of the marks in use. I may illustrate this by the new rule that three penalties might involve the exclusion of a mark, a rule of the Draconian order, for it operates without reference to the volume of jute that might be baled under the mark and disregards the average standard of quality over the whole range of dealings. Three failures in an otherwise excellent course of dealing might involve consequences from which a consistent course of inferior dealing would be exempt.

We point to this in no spirit of criticism; it is not our business or desire to criticise, but to emphasise the altered character of Morans' responsibility if the plaintiffs' reading of the clauses be accepted.

On the 24th September 1910, when the Association marks had not been established, the plaintiffs and Morans had entered into an agreement substantially the same as that now under consideration and containing provisions identical with the dark clauses, 4 and 7, of the agreement of the 8th July 1911. This shows that at that time there was an apprehension of the risk of non-recognition against which the clauses were directed. But ex hypothesi the risk was not of exclusion from the Association's groups, for they did not then exist. The risk must have been the non-recognition by the Association of the marks then in use by the trade—a risk which manifestly was not so urgent as that created by the new rules.

It was against this old risk, Morans contend, and not the new risk created in 1911, that the 4th and 7th clauses were aimed.

The plaintiffs see in this line of reasoning an attempt to construe a later by an earlier document; but this is hardly a complete statement of the position. It is rather an endeavour to place the Court in possession of the facts which, it may reasonably be said, were within the contemplation of the parties when the agreement of the 8th July was executed, and to show that there were conditions, apart from those created in 1911, to which in the minds of the contracting parties clauses 4 and 7 of that agreement could aptly be applied. This seems legitimate, and it becomes of considerable force when it appears that there is strong reason to believe that these new conditions could not have been known to the contracting parties or have been within their contemplation.

The circular of 1st July 1911 could not have reached Calcutta by the 8th in the ordinary course of mail, nor does it clerely appear that it was otherwise communicated to the parties prior to that date. This is important in considering what were the circumstances, that is, the know circumstances, at the time the agreement was made.

The phraseology of the two clauses too seems to us to aid the view that the risk contemplated and accepted did not extend to exclusion from the Association groups. The two clauses evidently refer to the same topic, and they speak of the group of trade-marks which is recognised by the Association, but while the 6-marks group may be said to have been recognised at the date of the agreement, the Association groups were not recognised, but created and established. Mr. H. D. Bose, who has argued the whole case admirably on behalf of the plaintiffs, points to certain passages in Mr. Macleod's evidence as supporting his contention that the Association has ceased to recognise the 6-marks group, and at one point there would seem to be some verbal justification for the argument. But it seems to turn on the precise force Mr. Macleod placed on the word "recognise," when under enticement of cross-examination he gave an affirmative answer to a question implying that recognition had ceased. The Association then had their own groups, and it would probably be correct to say that they did not recognise any other group as occupying the position it had in relation to them prior to the establishment of the Association group. But Mr. Macleod, we believe, is not so much a grammarian as a man of affairs, and passing from the abstract to the concrete, he declares that the 6-marks group can still be the subject of a contract under the prescribed London forms and further, that contracts on the basis of the 6-marks group enjoy the same facilities for arbitration, etc., as are enjoyed by contracts made under the official group. We attach more importance to the position thus disclosed by Mr. Macleod than to the terms of his reply to the question put to him in cross-examination.

Mr. Bose, however, has suggested that the advantage of a more favourable scale of allowances has now been lost, and that the three 8 marks are now no better than substitutes. That may be so where the contract is on the basis of the official group; but it had to be admitted that there was nothing to show this was the case where the contract is on the basis of the 6-marks group, as it still may be if the parties so desire.

It may be that the exclusion of the 38 marks from the Association groups has depreciated the value of those marks in their own group, but as we read the clauses 4 and 7, this casts no responsibility on Morans to indemnify the plaintiffs.

Morans' contention, therefore, is, we think, well founded, and we hold that neither clause refers to exclusion from the Association groups of marks, but only from the group of trade-marks recognised by the Association, as for example the 6-marks group. But apart from the Association groups, it is not alleged, and certainly is not proved, that there has been any omission or demission of the marks in suit, or any removal of them from the 6-marks group; in fact there is every reason to think that they still retain their place. So far we have dealt exclusively with the 6-marks group; but what we have said as to that, applies equally to the other groups for the case and the arguments have proceeded on the basis that what is true of the 6-marks groups is, in the circumstances of this case, true of all groups in question other than the Association's groups.

And so we agree with the conclusion shortly and clearly stated by Imam, J., as to the plaintiffs' inability to recover damages; and in this view it is unnecessary to deal with Watson's separate contention that section 249 of the Indian Contract Act protects him from any liability in connection with this claim for damages.

The result is that each of the several appeals and also the cross-objections must be dismissed.

By consent we make the order that each party do bear and pay his own costs of the several appeals and the cross-objections. We say nothing about the paperbooks. Costs may, if necessary, be taxed as between attorney and client.

Appeals and cross-objections dismissed.

SUKH DIAL v. MANI RAM.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1487 AND 1488 OF 1912.

December 22, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Rattigan and Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

MANI RAM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Stamp Act (I of 1879), s. 2, sub-sec. (11)—Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 2, sub-sec. (15)—Instrument of partition—Award—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Secondary evidence of partition—Details of partition not allowed—Hindu Law—Partial partition proved—Onus probandi as to jointness—Mortgage-decree, form of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 4, 5, 6.

Under the Stamp Act of 1879 an award of arbitrators directing a partition was not included in the definition of "instrumentof partition" and, therefore, if such an award was executed before the present Stamp Act came into force, and the Court is satisfied that it was not put in the form of an award merely for the purpose of avoiding stamp duty, it will be received in evidence if it bears a stamp of Rs. 5 only.

The mere fact that the parties have signed an award does not necessarily constitute it a deed of partition.

Where an award effecting partition is lost, there is nothing in section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act to prevent one of the parties from proving aliunde that a partition did take place, but no secondary evidence of the details of such partition can be given.

Where a Hindu family consisted of a father and a son, and the whole of its property was originally joint, but subsequently the father dealt with various properties as if he were their sole owner, the fact of his so dealing would not amount to proof of his right to do so as against his son. But when we find him actually selling certain properties to the son himself, the inference is obvious and conclusive that some sort of partition of the property must previously have taken place. Under these circumstances, the burden of proof as to jointness is shifted and the party alleging jointness has to prove that a particular property still remained joint ancestral property.

In mortgage-decrees the provisions of Order XXXIV, rules 4, 5 and 6 should not be overlooked.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Lahore Division, dated the 27th June 1912, varying that of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 29th May 1911, decreeing the claim in part.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain and Mr. Broadway, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kirkpatrick and Lala Ganga Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is closely connected with Civil Appeal No. 1488 of 1912 and this judgment will dispose of both. Plaintiffs as mortgagees brought two suits against the representatives of the mortgagor. In the first suit they rely upon a mortgage of a house effected in their favour on the 18th December 1905 by Shib Dial (father of defendant No. 1 and grandfather of defendant No. 2), and their prayer is that the said house may be sold and out of the sale-proceeds the sums of Rs. 4,000, principal, and Rs. 757, interest, be awarded to them. In the second suit the plaintiffs base their claim upon a further charge effected upon the said house on the 23rd December 1908, and in this suit they claim to recover Rs. 1,000, principal, and Rs. 189-4, interest, by sale of the said property. The Additional District Judge in both suits held that the property was ancestral and that in the first suit only the sum of Rs. 2,600 and in the second suit only the sum of Rs. 500 were binding charges upon the property in suit. He accordingly gave judgment in plaintiffs' favour (1) in the first suit for Rs. 2,600 with interest after the 23rd December 1908, (plaintiffs having received interest up to that date in the second mortgage); and (2) in the second suit, for Rs. 500 with interest. The decrees of the first Court provided that the mortgaged property should be sold and plaintiffs be paid from the sale proceeds, the decree in the second suit further providing that if there was any deficiency in making good plaintiffs' claim, the other property of Shib Dial was to be held liable therefor.

Plaintiffs appealed in both cases to the Divisional Judge, and their appeals were accepted, "a decree being passed in each suit as prayed for in each plaint, by sale of the mortgaged property." The learned Judge based his conclusions upon his findings that there had been a partition of the joint ancestral property in 1890 between the mortgagor and his son, defendant No. 1; that thereafter the property which fell to the mortgagor's share became his acquired property, and that the mortgagor was entitled to deal with it as he pleased. At the same time, he expressed the opinion that if the property had not been the acquired property of the mortgagor, there was "no very good proof that the sums of Rs. 1,400 and Rs. 500 (which had been disallowed by the Court of first instance) were required for family necessities" and as such binding upon the property in the hands of defendants.

Defendants have appealed to this Court from the decrees of the Divisional Judge and pray that the decrees passed by the Additional District Judge may be restored.

Mr. Sheo Narain on appellants' behalf gives up ground 2 in Appeal No. 1487 of 1912 and ground 3 in Appeal No. 1488 of 1912, and contends (1) that there is no legal proof that the property of the family, which was admittedly once joint in the strict sense of Hindu Law, was ever partitioned between Shib Dial and his son, Sukh Dial, or that the house in suit fell to the share of the former; (2) that the Additional District Judge's decree did not award future interest and that as plaintiffs did not specifically appeal from that part of his decree, it was not competent to the Divisional Judge to grant future interest after date of decree as prayed for in the plaint; (3) that the lower Appellate Court should not have made the decretal amount a charge upon property other than that mortgaged; and (4) that the Divisional Judge has not considered the finding of the Court of first instance that the sum of Rs. 150 was not actually received by the mortgagor in respect of the second mortgage charge.

As regards the first contention, plaintiffs' allegations are that in August 1890 Shib Dial and his son, Sukh Dial (defendant No. 1), who originally were members of a joint Hindu family, had the ancestral property partitioned by arbitrators and that the latter, after due inquiry, effected a partition by an award, dated 30th August 1890. This award was signed by the parties and duly registered. The original in not forthcoming and defendant No. 1 has stated in Court that it is not in his possession. Presumably, therefore, it is lost, as we cannot assume that Shib Dial made it over to plaintiffs when he effected the mortgage in their favour. It was a document which related not merely to the house in suit, but to various other properties which are said to have fallen to the share of Shib Dial, and there is no reason to suppose that the latter parted with it. On the other hand, it is obvious that plaintiffs, if they had had the original in their possession, would have preferred to produce it rather than the copy which they have obtained from the Registry Office. Other objections apart, therefore, there is no ground for refusing to accept the copy as admissible secondary evidence.

Mr. Sheo Narain's main argument, however, is that the award is inadmissible in evidence, as it was stamped merely as an award and not (as it should have been) as a deed of partition. As the original is not forthcoming, the learned Advocate argues, it is not open to plaintiffs to tender the copy and ask for its reception in evidence upon payment of the penalty due under the Stamp Act where an original instrument is under-stamped [see Raja of Bobbili v. Inuganti China Sitaramasami Garu (1)].

The Courts below are agreed in holding that the copy tendered by plaintiffs is inadmissible in evidence, but we are not satisfied that their conclusions are correct. No doubt, under section 2 (15) of the present Stamp Act, a deed of partition includes "an award by an arbitrator directing a partition", but in 1890 when the present award was made, the definition of "instrument of partition" in Act I of 1879 was not so wide and made no mention of such an award. The very fact that the definition had to be expressly extended in order to include such awards, suggests that under the former Act an award of arbitrators directing a partition was not included in that definition, and it is a well-known canon of construction that fiscal enactments which impose burdens upon the subject are to be construed strictly. If, therefore, the award in the present case was really such, and if we are satisfied that it was not put in the form of an award merely for the purpose of avoiding stamp duty, there is nothing in the definition of "instrument of partition" in Act I of 1879 to preclude us from receiving it as evidence simply because it bore a stamp of Rs. 5 instead of an ad valorem stamp.

Mr. Sheo Narain contends that the very fact that the parties signed the award constitutes it a deed of partition and in support of his argument, refers to a single Bench ruling of this Court [Rattan Chand v. Ghasitamal (2)] and Amarsi v. Dayal (3). We cannot accept this very general proposition. In our opinion, every case must be decided upon its own facts, and the real question is whether the document in question is a true award of arbitrators, or merely a deed of partition by the parties themselves disguised in the form of an award in order to escape payment of stampduty [Jesa Lal v. Musammat Ganga Devi (4), Wasir Ali v. Mahbub Ali (5)]. In the case before us there appears to be no reason to suspect the ostensible character of the document, and it would be a very natural proceeding on the part of the parties concerned to sign the arbitrator's award in token of their acceptance of it. But while we can find no good ground for rejecting the award (and in its absence, the copy of it tendered by plaintiffs), we do not consider it essential for the purposes of the case before us.

Under section 9 of the Indian Evidence Act, the only evidence that can be tendered of the terms of that document would be the document itself, but there is nothing in that section to prevent plaintiffs from proving aliunde that a partition took place between Shib Dial and defendant No. 1, though, of course, plaintiffs would not be entitled to give secondary evidence of the details of such partition. Here plaintiffs have adduced evidence to show that a partition of ancestral property must have taken place prior to the mortgage effected by Shib Dial in 1905, and in our opinion this evidence was admissible and not excluded by the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act.

The further question remains, whether the house in suit remained ancestral property or fell to the share of Shib Dial when the partition (if any) took place. Admittedly, the family and the whole of its property were originally joint, but after 1890 we find Shib Dial dealing with various properties as if he were their sole owner (see the sale-deeds of 11th June 1894, 18th December 1905, and 10th January 1903). No doubt the fact that in these sale-deeds Shib Dial gave himself out as the exclusive owner of the properties sold, would not amount to proof of his right to do so as against defendant No. 1, but when we find him actually selling certain property to defendant No. 1 (see the sale-deed of 1st July 1905), the inference is obvious and conclusive that some sort of partition of the property must previously have taken place, as otherwise it would not have been possible for him to sell it to his co-parcener as if it belonged to him exclusively.

We hold, then, that evidence to prove that some sort of partition actually took place between the father and son is admissible, and that the evidence in support of this allegation does, in fact, prove at least a partial partition of the ancestral property. Upon these findings, we must hold that the onus probandi was shifted and that it was for defendants to prove that the house in suit still remained joint ancestral property, despite such partition and the fact that Shib Dial disposed of it as if it belonged to him exclusively [see Narayan Babaji v. Nana Manohar (6), Amichand v. Ghasita Mal (7), Sain Das v. Musammat Sahib Devi (8), Musammat Nihal Devi v. Kishore Chand (9)]. Defendants have entirely failed to adduce such proof, and we accordingly hold that the house was the acquired property of Shib Dial and could be alienated by him at his pleasure. The only further point in this connection is whether the mortgagor received full consideration. As regards the first mortgage, both Courts are agreed that Shib Dial received the full amount of Rs. 4,000 and nothing further need be said as to it. As regards the second mortgage, the Additional District Judge finds that the sum of Rs. 150 was not really paid to the mortgagor, as that amount was taken back by the mortgagee after the deed had been registered. The Divisional Judge has omitted any reference to this matter in his judgment and he must, therefore, give a decision upon it. It is true that the sum in question was re-paid to the mortgagee immediately after the parties had left the registration office, but we find that the mortgagee gave the mortgagor a pro-note, payable on demand, for the amount. The mortgagor apparently kept the pro-note and made no use of it but we cannot on that account hold that the mortgagee (who was liable upon the note at any moment within the period of limitation) did not give consideration pro tanto for the mortgage.

There remains the question of future interest. It is urged that the Additional District Judge did not award interest after decree to the plaintiffs and that as plaintiffs did not in their grounds of appeal expressly take objection to that part of the first Court's decree, the Divisional Judge was not competent to grant them such interest. We find some difficulty in understanding the decree of the Additional District Judge upon this point and are not at all sure that he did not intend to award interest after decree. But whether he did or did not, it is clear from the claim as made by plaintiffs in their memorandum of appeal to the Divisional Judge that what they prayed for from him was a decree in the terms of their plaint. It is wrong, therefore, to say that the learned Judge gave them more than they asked for. So far then as the merits are concerned, these appeals must fail. We note, however, that the Courts below have overlooked the provisions of Order XXXIV, rules 4, 5 and 6, Civil Procedure Code, and we must, therefore, so far accept the appeals as to vary the decrees by directing as follows:—

(a) that the amounts due to the plaintiffs are (1) Rs. 4,757 and (2) Rs. 1,189-4-0, together with interest thereon at the rate specified in the plaints in the two suits and the costs incurred in both suits by them up to date; and

(b) that if the defendants fail to pay into Court within six months of this date the said sums with interest thereon and costs as above specified, the mortgaged property shall be sold and the proceeds of the sale (after defraying the expenses of the sale) shall be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is declared due to the plaintiffs as aforesaid, and that the balance (if any) shall be paid to defendants;

(c) that if the net proceeds of any such sale are found to be insufficient to pay the amount due to the plaintiffs, the balance shall be recoverable from any other property of the late Shib Dial which may be in the possession of the defendants or either of them, or if any such other property shall have been alienated by them, from the proceeds of such alienation that may have come into their or his hands respectively. Defendants will pay plaintiffs' costs in both suits and in all Courts.

Appeals accepted; Decrees modified.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 9, O. XXI, r. 90, O. XLIII, r. 1 (c)—Application to restore application for reversal of sale, dismissal of—Appeal, whether allowed—Sufficient cause—Party deliberately absenting, whether can claim restoration.

Under Order XLIII, rule 1 (c), of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, no appeal lies against an order rejecting an application under rule 9 of Order IX for revival of an application for reversal of a sale, which had been dismissed for non-appearance of the judgment-debtor.

A party who was present in Court but left the Court of his own accord to attend to other business and without even instructing his Pleader, must take the consequence of his own conduct and is not entitled to have his case restored.

Civil rule against an order of the District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 30th June 1913, confirming that of the Munsif, Alipur, dated the 29th April 1913.

Babu Satish Chandra Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.

Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule either to set aside an order by which the Court of first instance refused to restore an application for reversal of an execution sale, or to direct the lower Appellate Court to entertain an appeal against that order. The petitioner had applied to the Court of first instance under rule 90 of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 for reversal of an execution sale. The case had been set down for disposal on the 23rd

November 1912. On that day, he was present in Court and found the Judge engaged in the trial of another suit. He left the Court and went on another business. He returned after an hour and found that his case had been meanwhile called on and had been dismissed for non-prosecution, as his Pleader had informed the Court that he had received no instructions. He, therefore, applied to have this order of dismissal set aside. The Court held on the 29th April 1913 that no sufficient cause for non-appearance within the meaning of rule 2 of Order IX of the Code had been established and refused to restore the application. The petitioner then appealed to the District Judge. When the appeal was taken up for disposal, a preliminary objection was taken that the appeal was incompetent. The District Judge gave effect to this contention and rejected the appeal. We are now invited either to set aside the order of the Court of first instance or to direct the lower Appellate Court to entertain the appeal.

The first question for consideration is, whether the appeal preferred to the District Judge was competent. It has been argued that the order of dismissal was made under rule 8 of Order IX of the Code, that the application for restoration was made under rule 9 of Order IX and that consequently under Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (c), an appeal lay to the District Judge. In our opinion there is no foundation for the contention. Clause (c) of rule 1 of Order XLIII provides that an appeal shall lie from an order under rule 9 of Order IX rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside the dismissal of a suit. Here the petitioner did not prefer an appeal against an order refusing to set aside the dismissal of a suit. What had been dismissed was his application under rule 90 of Order XXI for reversal of a sale. The language of clause (c) of rule 1, Order XLIIIi is identical with that of clause 8 of section 588 of the Code of 1882. Under that Code, it had been held by this Court in the cases of Sujauddin v. Beasuddin (1) and Jung Bahadur v. Mohadeo Prosad (2) that no appeal lay aginst an order rejecting an application under section 102 for revival of an application under section 311, which had been dismissed for non-appearance of the judgment-debtor. The same view had been previously taken in the cases of Ningappa v. Gangava (3) and Raja v. Srinivasa (4) and has subsequently been adopted by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ghanti Bibi v. Abdul Samad (5). We are of opinion that the new Code has not, in this respect, effected any alteration in the law. It has been argued, however, in support of the contrary view that a substantial alteration has been effected in section 647 of the Code of 1882, which has been replaced by section 141 of the Code of 1908. There is clearly no foundation for this contention. Section 647 provided that the procedure therein prescribed should be followed, as far as it could be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals. To this section was added an explanation in 1892, to the effect that the section does not apply to applications for execution of decrees, which are proceedings in suits. In section 141 of the Code of 1908, section 647 is reproduced in the following form:—"The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction." The two alterations effected are, first, that the words "other than suits and appeals" are omitted, secondly, the explanation is omitted. This, however, has not effected any alteration in the law, as is clear from the history of the legislation on the subject, as indicated by the decisions in the cases of Thakur Prasad v. Fakirulla (6), Asim Mandal v. Raj Mohan Das (7) and Hari Charan v. Manmatha Nath (8). In our opinion, it is clear that the appeal preferred to the District Judge was not competent and was rightly rejected.

We have next to deal with the contention that the order of the Court of first instance was erroneous on the merits and should be set aside by this Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. The Court of first instance accepted the principle laid down in the case of Manilal Dhunji v. Gulam Husein (9), which was subsequently followed in the case of Esmail Ebrahim v. Jan Mahomed (10). In this case it was laid down that where a party has not been taken unawares and where he was under no compulsion to leave the Court, nor could assign any weighty cause for his absence, he took the risk of the case being called on in his absence and could not be said to have established sufficient cause for his absence within the meaning of the Code. Reliance, however, has been placed upon the cases of Somayya v. Subbama (11) and Lalta Prasad v. Ram Karan (12), in which an attempt was made to draw a distinction between "sufficient cause" and "valid reason" for non-appearance. We are not impressed by the distinction suggested. In any event, upon the facts of the case before us, it is manifest that the petitioner is not entitled to any consideration from the Court. He was present in Court. He left the Court of his own accord to attend to other business, and he assumed that his own case would not be taken up during his absence. He did not even take the precaution to instruct his Pleader. The result was that when the case was called on during his absence, the Pleader intimated to the Court that he had no instruction to proceed with the matter. A party who deliberately chooses to act in this way must take the consequence of his own conduct.

The result is that the rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

Rule discharged.

BLANCHE SOMERSET TAYLOR —PETITIONER—APPELLANT AND RESPONDENT

versus

CHARLES GEORGE BLEACH—RESPONDENT—RESPONDENT AND APPELLANT.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 37—Maintenance—Power to award lump sum—Interpretation of Statutes—Punctuation when taken into consideration.

Under section 37 of the Divorce Act, the Court has power to make an order for payment of a lump sum for permanent maintenance.

The words 'for any time not exceeding her own life' in the section qualify 'annual sum' and do not qualify 'gross sum.'

The word 'secure' would ordinarily include 'pay.'

There can be no reason for refusing the assistance of the punctuation, where the sense might otherwise be doubtful, in Acts of the regularly constituted Legislatures of India.

The Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamini Dasi, 14 C 365(P. C.); 14 I. A. 30; 11 Ind. Jur. 275, 4 Sar. P. C. J. 772, distinguished.

Cross-appeals from the decision of the District Judge of Poona, in Suit No. 116 of 1914.

Mr. Binning, (with him Messrs. T. R. Desai and P. Bunter), for the Petitioner.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT, C. J.—These are cross-appeals from an order of the District Judge of Poona awarding a lump sum of Rs. 5,000 to be paid to the petitioner for permanent maintenance under section 37 of the Indian Divorce Act, IV of 1869. The petitioner appeals on the ground that the sum awarded is not sufficient and that the Court should have secured to her a sum the interest of which would secure her at least Rs. 150 per mensem. The respondent appeals on the ground that the Court has no power to award payment of a lump sum and that if it had the power, the sum awarded is excessive.

First, as to the power of the Court to award payment of a lump sum.

The materal clause of section 37 of the Divorce Act is the third. It gives the Court power to "order that the husband shall, to the satisfaction of the Court, secure to the wife such gross sum of money, or such annual sum of money for any term not exceeding her own life, as having regard" etc.

As the sentence is punctuated in the State publications of the Act, it seems to me to be clear that the words "for any term not exceeding her own life" qualify "annual sum" and do not qualify "gross sum." If so assuming a gross sum to be available, how can it be better secured to the wife than by paying it over to her?

The argument against this view was based upon the judgments in Medley v. Medley (1)

(1) (1882) 7 P D. 122 at p 124; 51 L. J. P. 74; 30 W. R. 937.

TAYLOR, B. S. v. BLEACH, C. G.

and Twentyman v. Twentyman (2).

I can see no reason why the punctuation of the editions of the Act issued by the Government of India should be disregarded, for so far as I am aware there is not in India any unpunctuated original Statute Book. The position is not the same as in England, where in Stephenson v. Taylor (3) Cockburn, C. J., said: "On the parliament roll there is no punctuation, and we therefore are not bound by that in the printed copies." In Barrow v. Wadkin (4), Sir John Romilly, M. R., said: "I supposed I should not learn much on the subject from the inspection of the Roll of Parliament; but, as it was in my custody, I have examined it ... It seems that in the Rolls of Parliament the words are never punctuated, and accordingly very little is to be learnt from this document."

The punctuation of the Queen's Printers' Edition of 20 & 21 Vic. C. 85, section 32, published in 1857, is the same as the Indian punctuation and it appears that in three reported cases covering a period from 1870 to 1902 [viz. Morris v. Morris (5), Stanley v. Stanley(6), Kirk v. Kirk(7)], the Divorce Court in England has taken the words now under consideration as authorising it to award payment of a lump sum to the petitioner's wife.

In Medley v. Medley (1) the Appeal Court in England expressed a contrary opinion, being influenced partly by the recital in the Amending Act 29 & 30 Vic. C. 32, and in Twentyman v. Twentyman (2), Jeune, J., held that the Court had no power to order a lump sum to be paid over to the petitioner by way of permanent maintenance. That conclusion was possible, though by no means inevitable, on an unpunctuated Act, but I do not think it would be a reasonable conclusion on the clause of the Divorce Act of 1869, punctuated as it is in the Government of India Edition.

In India we have no Amending Act with an explanatory recital such as was before the Court in Medley v. Medley (1). Section 37 incorporates without comment the operative parts of the two English Acts and cannot be construed with reference to a recital which has been omitted.

In my opinion, therefore, the District Judge had power to make the order for payment of a lump sum.

On the second question whether the sum awarded was adequate or excessive, it appears to me that on the evidence it was a reasonable award and I do not think this Court would be justified in interfering with it.

I would dismiss both appeals without costs.

HAYWARD, J.—I quite agree that we should not be justified on the scanty materials before us in interfering with the amount, namely, Rs. 5,000 awarded for permanent maintenance by the District Judge.

But the question whether that amount should be paid absolutely or should be secured for a limited term by an appropriate instrument, would appear to me a more difficult matter. We have been referred to a number of conflicting decisions of the English Courts upon the corresponding provisions of the English Statutes, namely, section 32 of 20 & 21 Vic. C. 85 (1857) and section 1 of 29 and 30 Vic. C. 32 (1866) which have been combined into section 37 of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869. The Judge Ordinary, Sir C. Cresswell, ordered the absolute payment of a gross sum in the case of Morris v. Morris (5) and Gorell Barnes, J., followed this order in the subsequent cases of Stanley v. Stanley (6) and Kirk v. Kirk (7). But in the meanwhile Jessel, M. R., had held in the case of Medley v. Medley (1) that the absolute payment of a gross sum could not be ordered, because payment from time to time was contemplated by the word 'secure' used in the Statute of 1857. It was again more recently held by Jeune, J., in the case of Twentyman v. Twentyman (2) that the word 'secure' was governed by the phrase occurring later on, 'for any term not exceeding life.' Lindley, L.J., concurred with the Master of the Rolls in the former case, but observed that the word 'secure' would ordinarily include 'pay.' The learned Judges appear to have been moved to their decision by the consideration that the word 'secure,' coupled with the provision for the execution of a proper instrument in the Statute of 1857, applied only to cases where there might be property which could properly be secured by such instrument as recited in the preamble of the subsequent Statute making provision for cases where there might be no such property, namely, the Statute of 1866. We should no doubt feel ourselves bound to follow that decision had the provisions of the English Statutes been incorporated in their entirety in the Indian Divorce Act, 1869. But the distinction between cases of property and cases of no property has, intentionally or unintentionally, not been retained owing to the omission of the preamble of the Statute of 1866. So that the opening words, 'In every such case,' which would otherwise have referred to cases of no property, cannot grammatically be so read in section 37 of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869.

We ought, therefore, in my opinion to approach the matter as res integra from the starting point of Lindley, L. J., that the word 'secure' would ordinarily include 'pay' and consider whether that ordinary meaning should be modified by reason of the other words used in the section. The material words are that the Court may order the husband to 'secure to the wife such gross sum of money, or such annual sum of money for any term not exceeding her own life, as...it thinks reasonable...and for that purpose may cause a proper instrument to be executed.' The plain meaning of those words would appear to me to be that the gross sum of money should be paid absolutely to the wife and that the annual sum of money only should be limited for the period of her life. It was the use of the word 'annual' which required the limitation 'for the period of her life.' The words would have been 'such gross or annual sum of money for any term not exceeding her own life,' if it had been intended to limit the use of the gross sum as well as the annual sums for the period of her life. It was, moreover, apparently foreseen that the gross sum might be paid down at once, in which case there would be no necessity for the execution of any document and hence among other reasons no doubt, it was provided that the parties 'may' and not 'shall' be ordered to execute a proper document. The succeeding clause opening with the words 'In every such case' must, as already indicated, be construed as adding power to order the payment of monthly or weekly sums in all cases, and not merely in cases of no property, owing to the special form of drafting of section 37 of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869.

These conclusions have been reached without reference to the punctuation, but if regard may be had to punctuation, then they are confirmed by the punctuation of the section as appearing in the publication of the Act at page 375 of the Gazette of India, dated 6th March 1869. The generally accepted rule was that punctuation could not be regarded in interpreting Acts of Parliament and this rule was founded on reason, as no punctuation appeared in the Acts on the Rolls of Parliament. But since 1849 punctation has been inserted. Nevertheless the old rule would appear to survive in England (Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, 5th Edition, Chapter I, section 5, pages 67 and 68). Lord Esher, M. R., observed that there were no such things as stops and brackets in an Act of Parliament and Lord Fry refused where the sense was strong to 'pause at those miserable brackets,' though refraining from expressing an opinion whether brackets could be looked at in an Act of Parliament in the case of Duke of Devonshire v. O'Connor (8). It should be no matter of surprise, therefore, that the old rule should be applied to the old Regulations promulgated in this country, and it will be found that the Privy Council remarked upon a consideration of an old Bengal Regulation of 1819 that it was an error to rely on punctuation in construing the Act of the Legislature in the case of Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamini Dasi (9). But whatever may have been the practice under the old Regulations, the practice would appear, since the constitution of regular Legislatures in India, to have been to insert stops in Bills before the Legislatures and to retain them in the authentic copies of the Acts signed by the Governor-General and published in the Gazette of India, and Maclean, C. J., ventured to look at the stops in such an Act in the case of the Secretary of State for India in Council v. Rajlucki Debi (10) and so did Parsons, Acting C. J., in the case of A. (Wife) v. B. (Husband) (11), though the action of the latter was reprehended by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Edward Caston v. L. H. Caston (12), relying on the remarks of the Privy Council. With due deference to that Bench there would, however, appear to me no sufficient ground, in view of the fact that it was an old Regulation under the consideration of the Privy Council and in view of the deliberate insertion of stops by the regular Legislatures, for refusing the assistance of the punctuation, where the sense might otherwise be doubtful, in Acts of the regularly constituted Legislatures of India.

Appeals dismissed.

Trollies running on rails in the streets of a Municipal town, pushed or pulled by hand and used by contractors for the purpose of carrying material to fill up a tank, are 'vehicles' and subject to the wheel-tax under the District Municipal Act.

Civil application from the decree passed by the first Class Subordinate Judge of Broach, in Small Cause Suit No. 590 of 1913.

Mr. T. R. Desai, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. N. Thakore, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—I think the Judge below is wrong in his decision so far as it has gone. We are dealing with some trollies, which run on rails in the Broach streets, pushed or pulled by hand and used by contractors for the purpose of carrying material to fill up a tank. The question is, whether these trollies are vehicles subject to the wheel-tax of the Broach Municipality, the collection of which is in the hands of the plaintiff who is the farmer of that tax. The Judge below, as I understand him, held that these trollies do not come within the definition of "vehicles" of the District Municipal Act. I think they do. It seems to me to be idle to say that these vehicles are not used or capable of being used on a public street when everybody connected with the case knows that in fact they are used on a public street. I see no good reason for supposing that they do not come within the plain words of the definition; nor do I think that they come within the exemption or exception which is provided for in the contract between the plaintiff and the Municipality. They are not the conveyances of the Municipality or of Municipal servants and they are not used for watering roads or for carrying rubbish by which, I understand, is meant the conservancy purpose of removing the town refuse. At least it is not shown that they are used for this purpose. That being so, it is not shown that they come within this exemption or exception. The truth is that the real dispute between the parties is one which has not yet been adjudicated on by the Judge.

We set aside his decree and remand this suit to be disposed of according to law. Costs of this application to be costs in the suit.

SHAH, J.—I concur.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

Under ordinary circumstances and in the absence of fraud or collusion, the managing member of a joint Hindu family is entitled to transact the business of the joint family and represent the members of it.

A family settlement come to in a mutation proceeding and creating rights in immoveable property does not require registration.

Kokla v. Peary Lal, 21 Ind. Cas. 29; 11 A. L. J. 765; 35 A. 502, followed.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Aligarh, modifying that of the Assistant Judge.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Girdharilal Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs sought a declaration that they were the owners and possessors of certain property and possession.

It appears that the parties who are disputing about the estate of one Bhajan Lal were all members of the same family. In mutation proceedings a family settlement was come to, in consequence of which the plaintiffs were recorded as owners in respect of the property now in suit. It is alleged by the plaintiffs that this arrangement was come to as the result of fraud. The Court of first instance found that there was no fraud when the family settlement was entered into, and accordingly the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree.

The lower Appellate Court agreed in all the findings of fact of the Court of first instance, but finding that one of the plaintiffs was a minor, it decreed the claim to the extent of the interest to which he would have been entitled had there been no family arrangement. The defendant comes here in second appeal contending that inasmuch as the father of the minor Raj Narain consented to the arrangement, it is binding upon his son, who is a member of the joint Hindu family. In our opinion under ordinary circumstances and in the absence of fraud or collusion, the managing member of a joint Hindu family is entitled to transact the business of the joint Hindu family and respresent the members of it.

In the present case no fraud or misconduct of any kind on the part of the father is proved, and it is not shown that the arrangement taken as a whole was not for the benefit of the family. On this point, therefore, we think that the lower Appellate Court was wrong.

The respondent, however, seeks to uphold the decree of the Court below, on the ground that rights in immoveable property were created by the compromise entered into between the parties, and that this could only be done by a document duly registered. We think that under the circumstances of the present case it was not necessary that there could have been any registered writing. The case is very similar to the case of Kokla v. Peary Lal (1). This case was followed in the case of Jagrani Misrani v. Bisheshar Dube (2), to which one of us was a party.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondent.

RAM GULAM v. BAGA PRASAD.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent filed a suit, on the 21st July 1910, in the Court of the District Judge, Narsinghpur, on the basis of a mortgage-deed, dated the 23rd April 1883. The relief asked for was a decree for sale of the mortgaged property, that is, the superior proprietary rights in the village of Rehli. The appellants are subsequent mortgagees of the same property. Various pleas were taken in the lower Courts, which need not be noticed. On the 4th September 1911—the day fixed for argument after the case had been closed—the appellants put in a petition for leave to add a supplementary ground of defence, resting solely on the construction of the mortgage-deed. The District Judge refused to grant leave at that stage of the case. The points raised have, however, been fully considered by the learned Divisional Judge on appeal, and the memorandum of second appeal is confined to those points.

At the hearing before me, the appellant's learned Counsel asked permission to raise a new point not covered by the petition of appeal and not raised in either of the Courts below. The respondent's learned Counsel objecting, I had to disallow additional grounds of appeal of which no notice had been given to the other side.

The points for consideration are (1) whether upon a right construction of the mortgage-deed in suit, the plaintiff is entitled to sue for sale of the mortgaged property at all, and (2) if so, whether the right to such relief is limited to the recovery of the principal amount only.

The parties agree that the answer to the first question depends on whether the mortgage is a pure usufructuary mortgage, or one partly in the nature of a usufructuary mortgage and partly in the nature of a simple mortgage. Both parties rely on the dictum of this Court in Fida Ali v. Ismailji (1). The learned Divisional Judge has applied this ruling and has held that there is a personal convenant to pay combined with words of hypothecation.

The official translation made for this Court has not been challenged, and it agrees substantially with that given by the learned Divisional Judge in paragraph 10 of his judgment.

(1) 5 Ind. Cas. 701; 6 N. L. R. 20.

The mortgage runs thus: "I have now borrowed from you Rs. 500 (in words five hundred) I will to pay interest on it at Rs. 1-4-0 per cent (sic). I agree to re-pay the amount in six years from Samvat 1940 to the end of Samvat 1945. In lieu of this I mortgage with possession malikana rights of the whole of Mouza Rehli. . . . . You will, therefore, take Rs. 127 year by year, the amount of my munafa, from the inferior thekadar on account of yearly interest, and if there be any surplus amount, credit it towards the principal. No one will claim the mortgaged property till satisfaction of the amount."

The appellants' Counsel argues that there is no personal covenant to pay, or at any rate the covenant does not extend to anything beyond the principal amount of rupees five hundred. I am unable to agree with this contention. The property mortgaged yielded a fixed sum of money payable by the inferior proprietor. This sum could not be raised till the next settlement of the village, and the parties knew that no new settlement could come into operation during the term of six years. The amount might be irrecoverable in years of famine, but even if the whole amount was regularly paid, the mortgage debt could not be satisfied by the usufruct. I think the contention that the mortgage debt was to be repaid out of the usufruct only and not personally at the end of six years, fails. Here I may as well dispose of the second point raised above. It is argued that the personal convenant cannot extend to the interest. I think the plain meaning of the parties is that the "amount" payable includes interest, for the clause agreeing to pay interest immediately precedes the clause containing the personal covenant. The mortgage, moreover, is not a mortgage in which the usufruct was to go only in lieu of interest.

I have held that there was a personal covenant to pay the mortgage-money. But the dictum of this Court which has been accepted by both parties requires something more than a mere personal covenant.

I think there are words of hypothecation in the mortgage-deed. The property mortgaged was merely a right to recover a certain sum of money from the inferior proprietor, the money being charged on the village in the latter's possession. No suit would lie for the possession of such rights. The mortgagees' remedy will lie in a suit for money or in a suit for sale of the superior proprietary rights. There is no means of ejecting the inferior proprietor for non-payment of the malikana. In my opinion the mortgagor merely charged an annuity charged upon land. If then this is the true nature of the transaction, the agreement not to claim the mortgaged property till satisfaction of the debt amounts to a hypothecation of the property within the meaning of the ruling above cited.

For the above reasons I hold that the plaintiff was entitled to the usual sale decree, and his suit was within time under section 31 of Act IX of 1908.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Tenancy, permanent or not—Burden of proof—Question of fact—Tenancy of homestead land, created before Transfer of Property Act 1882, transferability of.

In the absence of a written instrument containing the terms and conditions of a tenancy, the burden of proving that a tenancy is a permanent one is on the person who alleges it.

Such a question is primarily one of fact. The incident of non-transferability is common to tenancies from year to year of homestead lands created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, in the absence of a custom to the contrary.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This is a second appeal from the decree of the learned District Judge of Murshidabad dismissing an appeal in a suit tried by the Munsif of Lalbagh. Two contentions have been urged before us. In the first, place it is said that the finding of the learned District Judge that the tenancy in question in this suit is not a permanent tenancy is open to objection in point of law. Speaking for myself I am perfectly content with the mode in which this question has been dealt with in the judgment appealed from. It has been dealt with briefly, no doubt, but in my opinion sufficiently. It is said that two of the tests which the District Judge has applied for the purpose of determining the nature of the tenancy are not absolute or essential tests. He says that there is nothing to show that the land was ever transferred by sale or otherwise or that permanent buildings were ever erected on it. By these words, as it seems to me, he did not mean to imply that these were essential tests or the only tests that could be applied. In the absence of a written instrument containing the terms and conditions of the tenancy, the burden of proving that the tenancy was a permanent one was on the defendants in this suit, who alleged such permanancy. Such a question is primarily one of fact, because the answer to it must depend in each case in which it arises upon the particular facts and circumstances which are found to exist. The Judge had before him here the fact that the land had been held at the same rental for a period of 40 years, and no evidence was brought on either side to show how the tenancy originated. He referred to the tests above mentioned not as being absolute tests, but as indicia the presence or absence of which might affect the result. Upon the whole of the materials before him he came to the conclusion as a question of fact that the permanancy of the tenancy had not been proved. I am unable to say that in coming to that finding he committed any error of law.

The next point taken is that the learned District Judge is wrong in holding that the tenancy, whether it was permanent or not, was not transferable and that, therefore, the defendants who claimed as recent transferees were mere trespassers and were not entitled to a notice to quit.

The tenancy, it appears, is not an agricultural tenancy. The land is in the Municipality of Azimganj and the relationship of landlord and tenant was created before the Transfer of Property Act was passed. In holding that such a tenancy was not transferable, the Courts below appear to have relied on the case of Madhu Sudan Sen v. Kamini Kanta Sen (1). The learned Pleader for the appellants has told us that the opinion expressed by the learned Judges by whom that case was heard is not borne out by or goes further than the previous decision which they purported to follow and was not necessary for the purpose of their own decision. The Judges mention, however, that they had decided previous cases on the same basis, that the incident of non-transferability is common to tenancies from year to year of homestead lands created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, in the absence of a custom to the contrary. This view, moreover, was adopted in the subsequent case of Ram Charan Naskar v. Hari Charan Guha (2). In my opinion we are concluded by authority; and that being so, it is not possible for us to say that the Judge has come to a wrong finding. There is nothing to show that any change was subsequently effected by the conduct of the parties or otherwise in the incidents of this tenancy, as they must be taken to have been at the time of its creation. Both the contentions urged before us failing, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

STAMP REFERENCE MADE BY THE BOARD OF REVENUE.

In re STAMP REFERENCE.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss. 56, 57—Document not in existence—High Court, power of, to give opinion—Jurisdiction.

Under section 56 of the Stamp Act, the High Court can deal only with those instruments which are already in existence and which have been made the subject of action by the Collector, and not with such instruments as are not in existence.

Stamp Reference made by the Hon'ble Board of Revenue.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

Under section 17 of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act (II of 1903) when a Civil Court passes a decree against a member of an agricultural tribe on a mortgage made before the Act came into force, the decree is sent to the Collector who shall offer the decree-holder a mortgage in form (a) or (b) in full satisfaction of the decree. The question for the ruling of the High Court is whether such a mortgage requires to be registered and stamped or not. The Board think that neither registration nor stamping is required because (a) if the mortgage is executed on behalf of Government it is exempt from stamp duty under section 3 (1) of the Stamp Act, (b) if this view is incorrect the transaction is not a new one between the parties and it would be highly inequitable to demand double stamp duty on it. The Board think that it is a substituted transaction effected by the Court's order. It is probable that the Collector when acting under section 17 is a Court and that the mortgage is really the order of a Court, which does not require registration or stamping. This seems to be probably the reason why a mortgage under section 17 is not mentioned in item 20 of Appendix C to the Stamp Manual.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In reply to our order dated the 8th of July 1914, the Secretary to the Board of Revenue sends us a sample form of mortgage under section 6A of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act and adds that there are no sample forms under section 6B. We understand from this reply that the reference made to us does not refer to a particular deed in existence but to some deed which may or may not hereafter come into existence Section 56 of the Stamp Act confers upon this Court power to deal with instruments which are already in existence and which have been made the subject of action by the Collector acting under sections 31, 40 and 41 of Act II of 1899. The Board have sent on the reference under section 57 of the above-named Act. Comparing the language of section 56 with that of section 57, we are of opinion that section 57 contemplates a decision being given under circumstances and upon documents of the same nature as those referred to in section 56 of the Act. The present case falls under neither of these sections. We have no jurisdiction to give any opinion upon documents other than those already mentioned. We, therefore, direct that this our judgment be returned to the Board of Revenue for their information.

RAJANNA AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Chanda District—Cultivation of sugarcane —Lambardar, right of, to take land out of possession of any tenant.

In Chanda District there is an old established village custom as regards the taking of land by a lambardar out of the possession of any tenant for cultivation of sugarcane and the deduction to be made therefor Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chanda, dated 30th June 1913, confirming that of the Munsif, Chanda, dated 14th March 1913.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are fully given in the judgments of the lower Courts. As often happens in civil suits, each side claimed too much. The plaintiff, the tenant, claimed that the malguzar could never use a tenant's field for sugarcane cultivation without the tenant's consent, and that the tenant had the right to withhold or give consent entirely at his own pleasure. On behalf of the landlord, defendant, it was contended that the landlord could seize any field whatever for sugarcane cultivation totally irrespective of the tenant's wishes and, apparently without taking into consideration the question whether or not it was not the turn of the field to be selected in rotation for sugarcane cultivation. The issues actually framed on this point were:

(1) Whether the defendant lambardar has the right to take the plaintiff's tenancy land in suit without the latter's assent, for growing sugarcane as alleged by the former?

(a) Whether the right is supported by a long standing and well-recognised custom having the force of law?

(2) Whether defendant in this case obtained plaintiff's land for raising sugarcane with the plaintiff's express or implied consent?

The second issue was found in the negative and this finding cannot be, and is not, attacked in second appeal.

On the first issue the first Court held that no valid custom existed to deprive a tenant of his land entirely without his consent, and this decision was upheld by the District Judge on appeal. This may be a correct decision on the issue as it is framed, but it is not a satisfactory decision of the dispute between the parties since their respective rights are not defined, and it is bound to lead to considerable future and futile litigation. The case is a test case and required very careful trial. There can be no doubt from the village Wajib-ul-arz and from the Chanda District Gazetteer, pages 172, 173 that there is a village custom as regards the cultivation of sugarcane, the taking of land out of the possession of any one and the deduction to be made therefor. (I may note that the Wajib-ul-arz in evidence is that of the Settlement of 1866, that of the last Settlement is not on record). Paragraphs Nos. 58 to 63 of the Chanda Settlement Report of the last Settlement deal with the subject. An issue should have been framed so as to ascertain exactly what the custom is and exactly what form the compensation to the tenant should take apart from the exaggerated pleas of the parties. Apart from the books above referred to, it is plain from the evidence on the record that there is an old standing custom in the village, and it is impossible for a single tenant in the village entirely to ignore the custom. Either it was or was not the case that the field in suit was one whose turn it was in rotation to be used for sugarcane cultivation. This can hardly be ascertained without a map showing the field in reference to the other fields cultivated with sugarcane that year. It should be definitely ascertained whether or not under the village custom it was the turn of this field to come under sugarcane. If it was, could he reasonably refuse to allow such cultivation? He apparently would not have consented even if he had been asked, but the pleas on this point are deficient and we do not know his reason for his presumed refusal. His refusal might be reasonable or the reverse. If an unconditional refusal was unreasonable, what condition was he entitled to demand? Was he entitled to refuse without being given a share in the sugarcane cultivation, and why was such an opportunity not offered him? If plaintiff's refusal would have been unreasonable and he did not want a share in the sugarcane cultivation, would he be entitled by custom to any thing more than a remission of rent? I may note here that the District Judge has not recorded a distinct finding as to whether rent was actually remitted or not. Such are the kinds of questions that really arise in this case; upon the answer to them the proper decision of the case really depends. I remand the appeal for re-trial, after the taking of fresh pleadings and the framing of the necessary further issues. It would be highly desirable if the defendant-appellant, the Hon.urable Sir Gangadhar Madheo Chitnavis, would interest himself personally in the suit. It has been managed on his behalf hitherto by agents, whose conduct of the case has not been of an entirely satisfactory nature. The District Judge should himself take the further pleadings and frame the issues. He may use his discretion as to the further procedure to be adopted. The decree in favour of the plaintiff is set aside and the appeal is remanded for retrial in reference to the above remarks. Costs will be costs in the suit.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Partition—Vendor and purchaser—Condition not to partition property, whether against public policy—Breach of contract—Compensation—Damages, measure of.

A condition imposed in a sale-deed that the vendees would not partition the share purchased without the consent of the vendor, is not opposed to public policy, as no right is absolutely given up, and the vendor is entitled to compensation for the breach of such condition.

Where the parties have themselves fixed the value of their right, that amount is a proper measure of the damages sustained by a party.

Second appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Barielly.

Mr. Brijnath Vyas, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The case for the plaintiff-respondent in this appeal was as follows. She stated that on the 12th of July 1907 she sold to Mihi Lal and Thakur Das certain immoveable property for the sum of Rs. 900, that the vendees agreed in the sale-deed that they would not partition the share purchased without the consent of the plaintiff and that they also would not interfere with her retention of the post of lambardar, that the two vendees represented to her that the value of the concession they had made in regard to partition and lambardari was at least Rs. 250 and asked her to forego that sum in their favour out of the purchase-money. She agreed to this and remitted Rs. 250, though at the time of the registration she admitted receipt of the full Rs. 900, that Thakur Das and Mihi Lal subsequently applied for partition of the share, that she objected and after appeals to the Collector and the Commissioner the application for partition was dropped, that after the death of Thakur Das, who died childless, Mihi Lal had now applied for partition and the Revenue Court, having acquiesced, it was being carried out. She, therefore, sued, primarily, for an injunction against Mihi Lal to restrain him from proceeding with the partition and in the alternative she claimed the sum of Rs. 250, stating it to be unpaid purchase-money. The Courts below have found the facts in favour of the plaintiff and they have granted her a decree for Rs. 250 plus interest from the date of the sale, recoverable as unpaid purchase-money, by sale of the property in question. The defendants have come here in second appeal. They plead that the sum of Rs. 250 was in no way unpaid purchase-money, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the money as such, that that portion of the contract relating to the right of partition was contrary to public policy and as such void and, therefore, not enforceable and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover anything at all. Stress is laid on sections 23 and 28 of the Contract Act. Section 28, in my opinion, hardly applies. Section 23 possibly may apply. It is quite clear to me that the claim for Rs. 250 can in no way be a claim for unpaid purchase-money. On the plaintiff's own showing the purchase-money was Rs. 900, but owing to the persuasion of the vendees she actually remitted Rs. 250 out of the consideration for the property, in view of the fact that the vendees had agreed to the two conditions mentioned. This is equally clear from the fact that the plaintiff has stated that her cause of action arose not on the date of the sale, but on the date on which Mihi Lal applied to the Revenue Court for partition and the Revenue Court passed an order in his favour. There cannot be the slightest doubt that if Mihi Lal had not applied for partition, this suit would never have been brought. I note here that the prayer for injunction was dismissed by the Court below and it is not pressed in this Court. On the facts found it is clear that if the contract be not void, then the plaintiff is merely entitled to recover damages for the breach of the contract.

In regard to the contract itself, so far as it relates to the partition, it is pleaded that such a contract is contrary to public policy, as it is a limitation of the right of ownership which passed under the sale-deed. Looking at the matter from all points of view, it seems to me that the meaning of the parties was only this much that in the life-time of the plaintiff the vendees would not apply for partition except with her consent. No right was absolutely given up, and I am not prepared to hold that such a contract is against public policy and, therefore, void. It is a condition which would not be binding on the heirs of the vendee but as against Mihi Lal, I think the condition is binding. The suit was instituted as against him and the plaintiff, in my opinion, was clearly entitled to a decree for compensation.

The question remains as to the proper measure of that compensation. On the facts found by the Court below it, is clear that the parties themselves had fixed the value of the right at Rs. 250 and that sum, in my opinion, will be a proper measure of the damages sustained. The plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to a decree for that sum, but she is not entitled to a decree for sale nor is she entitled to interest for any period prior to the breach of contract. I, therefore, allow the appeal to this extent that I modify the decree of the Court below and give the plaintiff a simple money-decree for that sum of Rs. 250 plus interest at 6 per cent. per annum from June 25th, 1912, upto the date of payment. In so far as the Courts below are concerned the plaintiff will have her costs in both those Courts. In so far as this Court is concerned the parties will pay their own costs.

HIRJI KHETSEY—APPLICANT

versus

THE INDIAN SPECIE BANK, LTD.—OPPONENTS.

Company—Liquidation—Share-holder, whether entitled to have his name struck off the list of contributories Share-holder buying shares on faith of false prospectus, right of.

In proceedings to wind up the affairs of a Company, a share-holder is not entitled to have his name struck off the list of contributories, on the ground that he was induced to purchase the shares by the false reports and balance-sheets issued by the Company.

If a share-holder, who has applied for shares on the faith of a prospectus which eventually is found to contain false representation, wishes to have his name struck off the register, he must take steps before the commencement of winding-up, otherwise he would be too late.

Mr. B. J. Desai, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.- The applicant contends that he was induced to buy shares of the above Company owing to the half yearly reports and balance-sheets published by the Company, and applies that the list of contributories should be rectified by striking off his name, on the ground that he has now discovered that these reports and balance-sheets were false and contained information regarding the dealings of the Company contrary to the real facts of the case. As a matter of fact, the Company, instead of having made a profit since 1909, had incurred heavy losses and had speculated heavily in silver, although the balance-sheets showed large profits and the Directors reported, at the general meeting, that there had been no such speculation. It is not disputed that if a share-holder, who has applied for shares on the faith of a prospectus which eventually is found to contain false representation, wishes to have his name struck off the register, he must take steps before the commencement of winding-up otherwise he would be too late. Whether a person who has bought shares in the open market on the faith of reports and balance-sheets can succeed in getting his name struck off the register while the Company is a going concern, does not appear to have been decided.

It seems beyond doubt that he cannot succeed when a winding-up order is made before he takes action or a state of affairs has arisen which would enable a creditor to present a petition for winding-up. That was laid down by the House of Lords in Tennent v. City of Glasgow Bank (1), a very similar case to this, except that the plaintiff filed his suit for reduction of the transfers and entries in the Bank books and stock certificates in his favour a day before an extraordinary resolution was passed to wind up the Company permanently. Earl Cairns, L. C., in giving his decision stated, at pages 621 and 622: "The case of Oakes v. Turquand (2) in this House has established that it is too late, after winding-up has commenced, to rescind a contract for shares on the ground of fraud.. But if the Company has become insolvent, and has stopped payment, then, even irrespective of winding-up, a wholly different state of things appears to me to arise. The assumption of new liabilities under such circumstances, is an affair not of the Company but of its creditors. The repudiation of shares which, while the Company was solvent, would not or need not have inflicted any injury upon creditors must now of necessity inflict a serious injury on creditors. I should, therefore, be disposed in any case to hesitate before admitting that, after a Company has become insolvent and stopped payment, whether a winding-up has commenced or not, a rescission of a contract to take shares could be permitted as against creditors."

His Lordship then points out that the Company had stopped payment on the 2nd of October and never resumed business, stoppage having been caused by its insolvency. On the 5th of October the Directors convened an extraordinary general meeting of the share-holders by advertisement for the 22nd, for the purpose of considering, and, if thought fit, passing extraordinary resolutions under the Companies Act, for the purpose of winding-up the Bank voluntarily. These were steps taken by the Directors as agents of the share-holders, and there was imposed upon the share-holders whatever responsibility might fairly be inferred from the steps so taken.

I find, therefore, the applicant is not entitled to have his name struck off. Strictly, speaking the applicant should have taken out a summons against the Liquidator, but this omission does not affect the merits of the case and, if necessary, a summons could be issued pro forma to remedy the irregularity.

Application rejected.

MAHADEO—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9, scope of—Illegal dispossession—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 110—Nature of possession—Presumption.

Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act in no way controls the operation of section 110 of the Evidence Act. It has no concern whatever with title, but is merely a law for restoring a possession which has been disturbed otherwise than in due course of law, and may properly be used to eject even a true owner who has disturbed a peaceful possession.

The possession which attracts the presumption of ownership is a juridical possession obtained nec vi, nec clam, nec precario, ab adversario, and stands valid against all the world except the person legally entitled.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chanda, dated the 27th November 1912, confirming that of the Munsif, Chanda, dated the 29th February 1912.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The parties own and occupy premises which adjoin one another in the town of Chanda. Their dwelling houses are separated by a piece of open land, bounded on one side by the public road. In 1910 the defendant completely closed entrance on to this land from the road by putting up a wire fence along the roadside for the whole distance between his own house and that of the plaintiff. The defendant further entered upon exclusive use of the land by stacking his wood thereon. The plaintiff sued to have the wire fence removed and the defendant ejected from a portion of the land—a strip 5½ feet wide—claiming that the same belonged to him and afforded ingress and egress to his latrine attendant. The Courts below have found that previous to 1910, when the defendant forcibly entered thereon, the plaintiff had "for a long time" been in possession and enjoyment of the land in dispute, though his original title to the same, or his acquisition of a title or easement by prescription, had not been proved. On this finding the Courts have given the plaintiff a decree ordering the defendant to remove his wire fencing and his wood, and to leave the land free to the plaintiff as before 1910. Both Courts surmise that the disputed plot may be, but do not actually find that it is, nasul land. Against the above decree the defendant has made the present appeal.

The Courts below have not considered the bearing of section 110 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, on the facts found by them. The plaintiff has not proved any title to the land apart from any presumption arising from his possession. But he has proved that he was in peaceful possession when he was forcibly ousted by the defendant in 1910. The plaintiff did not avail himself of the summary remedy provided by section 9 of Act I of 1877 for restoration of his disturbed possession. He has brought this regular suit for the purpose. The question that arises is, whether he must prove title to re-enter otherwise than by a presumption under section 110 of the Evidence Act. There is a conflict of authority on this question.

Before the Specific Relief Act, 1877, was enacted, the Calcutta High Court held to be the ordinary rule that force does not interrupt possession, and that he whose possession was interrupted by an act of violence, without any form of law or justice, was nevertheless to be considered as a possessor for the purposes of section 110 aforesaid: Jadubnath v. Ram Soondur (1), Khaja Enaetoollah v. Kishen Soondur (2), Radha Ballub v. Kishen Gobind (3), Gour Paroy v. Wooma Soondaree (4), Mahomed Bux v. Abdool Kureem (5), and Daitari Mohanti v. Jugo Bundhoo (6). In Kawa Manji v. Khowas Nussio (7), the same tribunal held that the Civil Courts are competent, section 15, Act XIV of 1859, notwithstanding, to give a decree for immoveable property on the bare ground of illegal dispossession in a suit brought after six months from the date of such dispossession, in which suit the defendant has failed to prove his own title to the land. But, thereafter, the Calcutta Court adopted the view that proof of prior possession, and of illegal dispossession, are in themselves no evidence of title, except in a possessory suit under Act I of 1877; and that section 110 of the Evidence Act applies only to actual and present possession, and does not declare generally that possession shall always be prima facie evidence of title: Mohabeer Pershad v. Mohabeer Singh (8), Brojo Sunder v. Koilash Chunder (9), Purmeshur Chowdhry v. Brijolall Chowdhry (10), Nisa Chand Gaita v. Kanchiram Bagani (11). These decisions are based, in some cases, upon deductions from the dicta of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Wise v. Ameerunnissa Khatoon (12), and in Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghouse (13). But some disturbance of the view is indicated by the Full Bench decision in Tamiruddin v. Ashrub Ali (14).

The Bombay High Court, after some decisions the other way, have settled down to a contrary opinion, and do not accept the Calcutta interpretation of the above Privy Council ruling: Pemraj v. Narayan (15), Krishnarav v. Vasudev (16), Krishnacharya v. Lingawa (17), Hanmantrao v. Secretary of State (18), Bharmawa v. Sangappa (19), Bai Fatan v. Emad Asla (20); and Rajaram v. Nanchand (21). In the Madras High Court a somewhat uncertain note was sounded in Mustapha Saheb v. Santha Pillai (22), but the Bombay view is clearly followed in Narayana Row v. Darmachar (23). To the same effect is the dictum in Lacho v. Har Sahai (24), followed in Wali Ahmad Khan v. Aindhia Kandu (25) and approved, as to principle, in Sri Gopal v. Aisha Begum (26). The same view was taken by Ismay, J. C. in Nand Ram v. Narbad (27).

I am of opinion that the correct view is that propounded by the majority of the Chartered High Courts and by this Court, and that section 9 of the Specific Relief Act in no way controls the operation of section 110 of the Indian Evidence Act. That section provides that peaceful possession shall be prima facie proof of title: while section 9, Act I of 1877, has no concern whatever with title, but is merely a law for restoring a possession which has been disturbed otherwise than in due course of law. The former will not avail a possessor against the true owner: the latter can properly be used to eject even a true owner who has disturbed a peaceful possession; because, in a summary case, the Court will not look at title, but only consider the question whether there has been an unlawful—using that word to mean "otherwise than in due course of law"—disturbance of possession. In one of the Calcutta cases it was suggested that if section 110 of the Evidence Act were to be applied to a possession which had been disturbed, anomalies would arise. For example, suppose A having held peaceful possession for eight years is then forcibly ejected by B, but does not sue B for seven years after the ejectment. Could the presumption under section 110 be properly used in favour of A? Or, suppose the converse case, where A, having held for seven years, is unlawfully ejected by B, who holds for eight years before any suit is brought. Such cases seemed to the Calcutta Judges to create difficulties in applying the section to any but actual physical occupation at the date of suit. They would not apply it to any wider form of juridical possession. With due respect, I venture to question this reasoning. It is not safe to interpret a provision of law by the result of applying it to an extreme case. The best rule that the ingenuity of man ever devised can be reduced to an absurdity in that way. It is easy to put forward an extreme case against the Calcutta interpretation. Suppose A, in peaceful possession of the house in which he dwells, leaves it physically unoccupied for a few hours, while he visits a friend. During his absence, B takes up his abode in the house, and, claiming it as his own, forcibly and successfully prevents the re-entry of A. Thereupon A at once files a regular suit for possession. The Calcutta interpretation of section 110 of the Evidence Act would not only refuse the presumption thereunder to A, but would grant it to B. The correct rule seems to be that law must be reasonably interpreted and discreetly applied. The interpretation must be accurate, constant, and consistent; and we must look to a proper exercise of judicial discretion for the elasticity necessary for the due application of that interpretation to the varying circumstances of each case as it comes up for treatment.

In the supposed anomaly illustrated by the Calcutta High Court, under a proper construction of section 110 aforesaid, B's unlawful dispossession of A would not prevent a presumption in A's favour under the section. But a discreet Judge would at once hold that presumption rebutted by A's conduct in allowing B to remain in undisputed possession for the seven or eight years, as the case might be, provided A's ejectment was forcible or otherwise within his knowledge. But suppose, in the case used as an illustration, B's trespass was a clandestine encroachment only discovered by A after it had existed for seven or eight years, and immediately attacked by a suit. Surely, in such circumstances, proof that A was in juridical possession before B encroached, would rightly give rise to a presumption in favour of A's title and against that of B. A man cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, as where he has obtained possession by illegal means, such as force or fraud, in order to shift the burden of proof on to his opponent. The possession which attracts the presumption of ownership is juridical possession, obtained nec vi, nec clam, nec precario, ab adversario: and it stands valid against all the world except the person legally entitled. It cannot, in the eye of the law, for the purpose of applying section 110 of the Evidence Act, be interrupted by force or fraud. But where a possession, in whatever way it was originally obtained, has stood undisputed for such time as, in the circumstances of the case, is sufficient to satisfy a reasonable mind that it must have some legal right or sanction behind it, the Court will treat it as a juridical possession to which the above section is applicable.

In the present case, the plaintiff had such a juridical possession. The date and nature of its origin are unknown. But the Courts below were satisfied that, when forcibly disturbed by the defendant, it had continued undisputed for a sufficient time to justify the assumption that it was a legal and valid possession. That finding made it a possession for the purpose of applying section 110 of the Evidence Act: and the defendant, having failed to prove his own title, cannot fall back on a jus tertii. The decrees of the Courts below are thus correct, and I, therefore, dismiss the present appeal without notice to the other side.

Promissory note—Suit by assignee of promissory note—Right of assignee to sue, how far executant can question.

In a suit by the assignee of a promissory-note to recover the money due under the note, all that the executant is entitled to have ascertained is that the plaintiff is the legal holder of the note, and able to give him a good discharge; he cannot question whether consideration was paid or not paid by the assignee.

Second appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut, reversing that of the Munsif, Meerut.

Dr. S. C. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff sought to recover the amount due under a promissory note. A number of pleas were taken, and amongst others a denial of consideration. The Court of first instance granted the plaintiff a decree. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the Court of first instance and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Both Courts have found that there was good consideration for the note. But the lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiff, who is the holder of the note under an assignment, dated the 17th of June 1912, did not give any consideration for the assignment of the note. It seems to us that this finding was immaterial. Even if we assume the finding to be correct, the defendants, Behari Lal and Nathu Singh, have no concern with the question whether consideration was paid or not paid by the assignee of the note. If they are liable under the note, all that they are entitled to have ascertained is that the plaintiff is the legal holder of the note and able to give them a gooddischarge. It is quite clear that the plaintiff is entitled to give a discharge to the defendants. The case cited has no application to the present case. In that case the transferor was a party to the suit and he repudiated the transfer in favour of the plaintiff, contending that he had retained all his original rights. We must allow the appeal and setting aside the decree of the Court below, restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The appellant will have his costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Bengal Regulation XI of 1825, ss. 4, 5—Alluvion and diluvion—Government as owner of river-bed and proprietor of land abutting on river, dispute between—Encroachment.

Section 4 of the Bengal Regulation XI of 1825 is intended to apply not merely to cases of alluvion and dereliction arising between the owners of properties situated on opposite banks of a river, but also to cases in which the dispute is between the Government as the owner of the bed of the river and a proprietor whose land abuts on the river. Section 5 does not apply to cases of accretions made owing to recession of rivers.

Babu Ram Chandra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Secretary of State for India against the respondent, the Rani of Ajudhia, for recovery of possession of a small piece of alluvial land situated on the banks of the river Gogra at Ajudhia. The whole of the land in Ajudhia (which is also known as Mauza Avadh Khas, Pargana Haweli Avadh) belongs to Government, except such portions of it as have been granted away or have been decreed to claimants in suits brought by them against Government. It is admitted that a portion of the land of this mauza was granted to the Ajudhia Estate by Government, and that this land was afterwards used for the erection of a temple on the banks of the river. Since the time of the grant the river has receded towards the north and the land in dispute has been thrown up and is adjacent to the site which was granted to the Ajudhia Estate by Government as above mentioned. The case for the defendant was that the land gradually emerged from water owing to the recession of the river. The defendant, therefore, claimed that by reason of this gradual accretion it had become a part of the land originally granted to the estate and could not therefore be claimed by Government. Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit. It has been found, as a matter of fact, that the land in question has been gained by gradual accession from the recess of the river Gogra, and acting under the first clause of section 4 of Bengal Regulation XI of 1825, the Courts have held that the property in this land is with the defendant. The principal contention which has been raised here in second appeal, is that the Courts below were wrong in applying section 4 of the Regulation to the case. In my opinion this contention cannot be maintained. The argument appears to be that because the bed of the river Gogra is the property of Government, no claim to any portion of the river-bed which has been exposed by the retrogression of the river can be made by the owner of any land adjacent to the land so exposed. But the first clause of section 4 of the Regulation does not contain any reservation in favour of the right of Government in the beds of rivers. It was also suggested in argument that the section was properly applicable to disputes between the owners of land on opposite sides of a river which divided them. This argument, however, cannot hold good having regard to the language of the preceding sections. Accordingly to section 2 of the Regulation, where any clear and definite usage of shikast paiwast has been immemorially established for determining the rights of the proprietors of two or more contiguous estates divided by a river, the usage so established is to govern the decision of all claims and disputes relative to alluvial land between the parties whose estates may be liable to such usage. Section 3 goes on to say that where no local usage of the nature referred to in section 2 is established, the general rules declared in section 4 shall be applied to the determination of all claims and disputes relative to lands gained by alluvion or by dereliction of a river. The language of this section is important and makes it quite clear, in the first place, that the rules contained in section 4 are to be applied to the determination of all claims and disputes, not merely claims and disputes, arising between two riparian owners, and in the second place, that the rules are to be applied with regard to land which has been exposed by the dereliction of any river. There is nothing in the language of section 3 to suggest that the rules contained in section 4 are not to be applied in cases where the ownership of the river-bed is claimed by the Government. The rule does not clearly relate to all classes of rivers whatsoever. It seems to me, therefore, that section 4 was intended to apply not merely to cases of alluvion and dereliction arising between the owners of properties situated on opposite banks of a river, but also to a case like the present in which the dispute is between Government on one side as the owner of the bed of the river and a proprietor whose land abuts on the river. This interpretation of the Regulation is the correct one and seems to me to be established from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the well-known case of Felix Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (1). In that case the bed of the river Ganges was regarded by the Privy Council as "public domain or public territory." Their Lordships in the course of their judgment remark that "when the words of the whole Regulation are looked at, it is quite obvious what the then Legislative authority was dealing with was the gain which an individual proprietor might make in this way from that which was part of the public territory, the public domain, not usable in the ordinary sense, that is to say, the sea belonging to the State, a public river belonging to the State. This was a gift to an individual whose estate lay upon the river or lay upon the sea, a gift to him of that which, by accretion, became valuable and usable, out of that which was in a state of nature neither valuable nor usable." It was suggested further in the course of arguments on behalf of the appellant that the proper section applicable to the facts of this case was section 5, which lays down that nothing in this Regulation shall be construed to justify any encroachment by individuals on the beds or channels of navigable rivers, but in truth there is no question of encroachment in this case. It was not pleaded that the defendant had in any way encroached upon the bed of the river, and again, it never was the case of the plaintiff in the Courts below that the river was a navigable river. Section 5, in my opinion, can have no application to the case whatever. Another point which was raised was that the land in dispute was really not an accretion to the land which had been originally granted to the Ajudhia Estate, but was an addition to another portion of land which had previously been thrown up by the recess of the river and which intervened between the original site granted to the Ajudhia Estate and the site of the land in dispute. This, however, is raising a new case which was not put forward in either of the Courts below and I cannot allow it to be raised now. I have no doubt whatever that the law was properly applied in this case by both the Courts below. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 199—Suit for ejectment—Defendant set up lease—Direction of Revenue Court to file suit for declaration of title in Civil Court within three months—Suit filed after expiration of three months—Limitation.

In a suit for ejectment in the Revenue Court the defendant pleaded that he was holding the land under a lease the term of which had not yet expired. The Revenue Court directed the defendant to institute a suit in the Civil Court within three months to establish his rights under the lease. The suit was instituted after the expiration of three months

Held, that as a cloud was cast on the plaintiff's title under his lease he was entitled to institute the present suit notwithstanding that the period prescribed in the order of the Revenue Court had expired.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Aligarh, affirming that of the Munsif of Havali.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. C. Banerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff sought a declaration that he was entitled to remain in possession of certain property under an alleged sar-i-peshgi lease, dated the 9th September 1904. It appears that the document in question is executed by one Lala Behari Lal, the father of the plaintiff, in favour of his son. Musammat Hira Kunwar, the defendant, was one of the co-sharers. Partition proceedings were brought in the Revenue Court and the portion of property alleged to have been leased fell to the lot of Musammat Hira Kunwar. Thereupon she instituted a suit in the Revenue Court for possession of the plots that had so fallen to her lot and for ejectment of the plaintiff. The plaintiff set up the document of the 9th of September 1904. The Revenue Court, thinking that it was a case to which section 199 of the Agra Tenancy Act applied, directed Suraj Mal to institute a suit in the Civil Court within three months to establish his rights under the lease. Suraj Mal did not institute a suit within the three months prescribed. Both Courts have dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation, holding that the suit ought to have been instituted within the three months mentioned in the order of the Revenue Court. Hence the present appeal.

It seems to us open to some doubt whether Musammat Hira Kunwar was entitled to institute her suit in the Revenue Court for ejectment. Her case appears to be that the lease of the 9th of September 1904 was a fraudulent lease made by the lambardar in favour of his own son. If this be her case and if it be found to be correct, then Suraj Mal would be a trespasser. It seems to us also that the decision of the Courts below was not correct. It is quite clear that no question of "proprietary" title was raised in the Revenue Court. The plaintiff in that Court sued for possession of certain plots and Suraj Mal set up the plea that she was not entitled to possession, because a lease had been made in his favour by the lambardar. If the suit was properly instituted in the Revenue Court, then the Revenue Court might have decided the question of the validity or the invalidity of the lease itself. But it seems to us that a cloud having been cast on Suraj Mal's title under his lease, he was entitled to institute the present suit notwithstanding that the period prescribed in the order of the Revenue Court had expired. We particularly wish to state that we are not expressing any opinion on the question of the validity or invalidity of the lease. This is a matter which must be tried. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and remand the case to the Court of first instance, through the lower Appellate Court, with directions to re-admit the case under its original number in the file and proceed to hear and determine the same according to law. We direct that the Court below take up the case as soon as possible. Costs here and heretofore will be costs in the cause.

Appeal allowed: Case remanded.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.
CIVIL SUIT No. 263 OF 1883.
December 2, 1886.
Present:—Mr. Justice Farran.
PARMANANDDAS JIVANDAS—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
ARDESHIR FRAMJI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Lease, land once held under—Presumption—Fazendari tenure, meaning of.

There is a strong presumption that land once shown to be held under a written instrument of lease continues to be held under it as long as it is occupied by the same tenant, unless the contrary is shown by evidence of a cogent nature.

The word "Fazendari" is used with reference to tenants holding under a private landholder to indicate, sometimes, an indefeasible right to hold in perpetuity on payment of a small quit or ground-rent, and sometimes any kind of tenure agreed upon between the parties.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit claims to eject the defendant from, and to recover possession of, a piece of land at Bhundarwara Hill in the Island of Bombay admeasuring 675 square yards. He also claims damages from the defendant on account of his wrongful occupation of the land.

The defendant as to about 575 square yards of the land claimed by the plaintiff denies the right of the plaintiff to eject him therefrom and claims to hold the same from the plaintiff upon a Fazendari tenure, which gives him the right to remain in possession of the land upon payment of a fixed annual rental of annas two per square yard so long as the plaintiff's title to the Bhundarwara Hill continues. As to the residue of the 675 square yards, the defendant lays no claim thereto and says that he is not in actual occupation thereof.

It is not denied that the plaintiff is the holder under Government of the Bhundarwara Hill of which the pieces of land, the subject-matter of this suit, form part. By indenture of lease bearing date the 1st October, A. D. 1794, the East India Company demised the Bhundarwara Hill to one W. H. Blachford for ninety-nine years from the date of the lease at an annual rental of Rs. 324-4-0 and a premium or fine of one phara of bhat at the expiration of every twenty-one years of the turn. The lease also contained a covenant by the East India Company that they would, upon the expiration of the term and upon the application of the heirs, executors, administrators of the lessee re-grant and renew the said lease on the same terms and conditions upon their paying to the lessor an additional fine or premium of Rs. 90 for such renewal, and it was further provided that if the said leases should not be renewed, the lessors would pay to the representatives of the lessee half the real value of the buildings and plantations which should then be on the land demised. The lease, therefore, unless renewed by the plaintiff, will expire upon the 1st of October 1893.

The plaintiff is now the assignee of this lease. By various mesne assignments, which have not been put in evidence, it passed to Canjee Chattoor, the grandfather of the plaintiff. Canjee Chattoor died in 1859 having devised his property, including the Bhundarwara Hill, to his sons Runchordas Canjee and Jiwandas Canjee. Jiwandas Canjee died intestate on the 2nd March 1859 leaving the plaintiff, then a minor, his only son. Runchordas Canjee died without issue in the year 1859, leaving a Will bearing date the 12th May 1859 by which, subject to certain bequests, he purported to devise and bequeath the whole of the property left by Canjee Chattoor to the plaintiff. This Will was proved on the 30th June 1859 by Lakhmidas Damji, Bhanabhai Dwarkadas and Jivraj Champsi, three of the executors named in it. On the 4th May 1870 the executors made over the property comprised in the Will of their testator to the plaintiff, he having then attained the age of eighteen years. The above is the nature of the tenure upon which the Bhundarwara Hill property is held by the plaintiff and of the plaintiff's title to it.

I proceed to consider how the defendant became a tenant upon the property. The nature and incidents of that tenancy are the questions to be determined in this suit. D. and M. Pestonji were the assignees of the lease of the Hill in 1850. The earliest document connected with the defendant's title is a certificate, dated the 24th January 1850, by which D and M. Pestonji certify "that one Manekbai had their permission to build her house upon their ground, part of Bhundarwara Hill—Collector's No. 19 of ground rent for which she pays to us ground rent." No further description of the land is given in the certificate. In the first document in the bundle Exhibit G, which was produced by the defendant and put in by the plaintiff, Manekbai was the sister of the defendant's father.

The next document in order of date is Exhibit D. The plaintiff says that he received it from the executors of Runchordas Canjee in 1870. It bears date the 20th March 1850. It purports to be an indenture of lease between D. and M. Pestonji of the one part and Manekbai of the other part, whereby the lessors demise to Manekbai all that piece or parcel of land on Bhundarwara Hill, more particularly described in the plan annexed, whereon it is coloured red and which contains 189 square yards or thereabouts, to have and to hold the same unto Manekbai, her executors, etc., from the 1st January 1850 as a monthly tenant yielding and paying therefor on the first day of every month the rent or sum of Rs. 1-15-6, and whereby Manekbai covenants with the lessors to pay the said monthly rent and that she will, at any time within one month, next after any notice in writing given to her, quit and deliver up the demised premises to the lessors, and that she will not assign or part with her interest in the said demised premises or in any part thereof without the consent in writing of the lessors first had. And it is provided that in case of the rent being in arrears for ten days after demand, or if the lessee attempt to assign or shall not deliver up possession to the lessors after notice, the lessors may re-enter, and that the lessee shall be liable to pay Rs. 5 per diem for every day she shall remain on the premises after the expiration of the notice to quit.

This document purports to be signed and sealed by Manekbai. No corresponding document executed by the lessors is produced by the defendant, and he says that he never saw or heard of such a document.

There is no ground for doubting the genuineness of Exhibit B. It is more than thirty years old and came from the proper custody. From the first rent receipt produced by the defendant it appears that Manekbai paid Rs. 23-10 as a year's ground rent for 189 square yards at Bhundarwara to the trustees of D. and M. Pestonji for the year ending 31st December 1850: see Exhibit G2. In that year at all events Exhibit B may be presumed to have been acted on and to have contained the terms upon which Manekbai held the 189 square yards of land demised by it.

In the next year, 1851, Canjee Chattoor became the assignee of the lease of Bhundarwara Hill. He adopted the printed form of lease used by his predecessors-in-title, changing only the names of the lessors to his own, and the plaintiff produces a document in such printed form bearing date the 8th December 1851 containing terms the same as those in Exhibit B. By it Canjee Chattoor purports to lease to Manekbai 208 square yards of land at Bhundarwara Hill as a monthly tenant at the rental Rs. 2-2-8 per month from the 1st January 1851. This also purports to be executed by Manekbai: see Exhibit C. Under this lease Manekbai paid rent for 1851, for the defendant produces a receipt in her favour signed by Canjee Chattoor for a year's ground rent from 1st January 1851 to 31st December of that year of a spot at Bhundarwara Hill containing 208 square yards: see Exhibit G3. No receipt is produced for the rent payable for this year under Exhibit B.

The defendant produces a receipt signed by Canjee Chattoor in favour of Manekbai for the rent of 344 square yards of vacant ground situated at Bhundarwara Hill No. 28 for one year from 1st January to 31st December 1852, Rs. 43. Deduct as allowed Rs. 9=Rupees 34. See Exhibit G4. No. 28 is the number borne by the lease Exhibit C.

The aggregate of the land leased by Exhibit B and Exhibit C is 397 square yards (189 plus 208) and does not correspond with the amount of land mentioned in this receipt, Exhibit G4. The rental renewed by Exhibit B amounts to Rs. 23-10 per annum and that by Exhibit C to Rs. 26=Total Rs. 49-10.

The receipt produced by the defendant for 1853 is for yearly rent of the vacant ground situated at Bhundarwara occupied by Manekbai from 1st January to 31st December 1853 measuring 344 square yards, rent Rs. 43: see Exhibit G5.

The receipt produced by the defendant for 1854 is for the annual rent of the vacant ground situated at Bhundarwara occupied by "you" from 1st January to 30th January 1854, Rs. 19-8. From 1st July to 31st December measuring 247 square yards, Rs. 15-7=Total Rs. 34-15: Exhibit G6.

The next receipt is important. I transcribe it:

"To amount of Fazendari rent of 247 square yards of ground situated at Bhundarwara Hill, Mazagaon, for one year from 1st January to 31st December 1855, Rs. 30-14, Bombay 1st January 1856. E. E. and contents received. (Signed Canjee Chuttoor)" Exhibit G7. The only oral evidence adduced down to the period of term is that of the defendant, who says that he first knew the land in 1855 ; that there was then a masonry building upon it which was at that time about five years old. This, I consider, must have been on the land referred to in the receipt Exhibit G7.

From the foregoing I am asked by the plaintiff to draw the conclusions :—

(1) That the 247 square yards of land referred to in the receipt Exhibit G7 are the same land as the land leased by Exhibit B and Exhibit C together or form part of the same land which amounted to 397 square yards.

(2) That the land referred to in the receipt Exhibit G7 continued to be held upon the terms of Exhibit B and Exhibit C at the date of Exhibit G7 and after that date.

There is no description of the land leased by Exhibit B other than that contained in the plan annexed to it, which shows that it lay to the West of Lawrence De Lima Street. There is no description of the land demised by Exhibit C other than that it was in Bhundarwara Hill, but as Manekbai built a house before 1855 on the land comprised in receipt Exhibit G7 and as it lies to the West of Lawrence De Lima Street and as it is not alleged that she held any land at Bhundarwara Hill other than the lands in respect of which the defendant produces the rent-receipts and as the number in G7 corresponds with the number in Exhibit C and as no suggestion has been made to the contrary, I consider that I am justified in assuming that the 247 square yards of land referred to in Exhibit G7 formed portion of the 397 square yards leased by Exhibit B and Exhibit C taken together.

There is of course a strong presumption that land once shown to be held under a written instrument of lease continues to be held under it as long as it is occupied by the same tenant, and unless the contrary is shown by evidence of a cogent nature a jury would be directed to draw an affirmative inference to that effect.

The following circumstances may be urged in this case as rebutting that presumption :—

(a) That the land held by Manekbai in 1855 was less by 150 square yards than the land leased to her by Exhibit B and Exhibit C.

(b) The general improbability of any prudent person building upon land held under the stringent conditions contained in the leases, Exhibit B and Exhibit C, and on the precarious tenure created by these leases.

(c) That in 1855 the form of the rent bill sent to Manekbai was altered by the introduction of the word "Fazendari" before the word "rent."

The reduction in the quantity of land held by Manekbai is not a matter of weight.

The land was held upon a monthly tenure. Part of the extra quantity taken up in 1851 was probably necessary for her when engaged in building her house, which she would naturally give up when her house was completed. She apparently gave it up at the end of the year 1851. That of itself would not alter the tenure of the residue or raise any presumption tending in that direction.

The apparent imprudence of Manekbai building upon land held upon such a frail tenure is not of great importance, inasmuch as the building certificate of 1850 and her having built or commenced to build in that year show that she must have considered the terms of Exhibit B such as to justify her in laying out her money upon the land held under it. Land was less valuable then than it is now, and she probably relied upon the honour of D. and M. Pestonji and Canjee Chattoor, forgetting that their successors-in-title might not possess or inherit the same feelings.

There remains the introduction of the word "Fazendari" into the rent bills.

The circumstances existing at the time this was done do not favour the contention that the tenure was then altered.

The rent was continued at the same rate, annas 2 per square yard per annum. It is unlikely the lessor would have abandoned the advantages he possessed under the leases B and C without obtaining some corresponding advantage in the shape of an increased rental. Manekbai's house had been then long completed. There was no change in ownership, why then a change of tenure? The time when Manekbai commenced to build would presumably be the time when she would have taken steps to strengthen her tenure, and not when her house had been completed and she had no means of compelling her landlord to accede to her wishes.

At this time Canjee Chattoor was granting leases in the same form as Exhibit B and apparently for building purposes. See Exhibits H and I put in as specimens. One of these is a monthly and the other is a yearly tenancy. He has not shown to have leased any land upon a more permanent tenure.

If such a very important change was effected in 1855 in Manekbai's tenure it must have been of design on Manekbai's part, and at her request. Would she not have obtained some writing evidencing the change, and not rested content with a mere change of wording in her rent bills?

The whole theory of a change of tenure rests therefore upon the introduction of the word 'Fazendari' into the rent bills, and this leads to a consideration of what is the generally accepted meaning of that word. No evidence has been given upon this point. My experience is that it is used with reference to tenants holding under a private landholder, to indicate sometimes an indefeasible right to hold in perpetuity on payment of a small quit or ground rent and sometimes any kind of tenure agreed upon between the parties.

Perry, C. J., in Doe d. Dorabji v. Bishop of Bombay (1) thus says that the true meaning of "Fazendari land" is land not belonging to Government: "A Fazendar occupying and tilling land himself, and paying a fixed rent to Government; or one making contracts with tenants to occupy the Fazendary land on terms to be agreed between them; or one merely receiving a certain fixed sum by virtue of ancient usage, are all Fazendars in the eye of Government, and in the popular language of the Bazar. But in these three persons we perceive three different characters, with wholly different legal relations attachable to them, and for the most part equivalent to our English notions of a tenant in fee simple holding of a superior lord by rent service, a landlord demising at rack rent, and a party seized of an ancient rent issuing out of the land. But as this ambiguity is contained in the word 'Fazendar' we must be cautious how we apply general propositions to the terms." Yardley, J., at page 508 of the report attaches similar meanings to the term "Fazendar" in Fazendari tenure.

The word being thus ambiguous, it would be dangerous to assign to its introduction into a rent bill an indication that the parties thereby intended that a monthly tenancy should be converted into a perpetual one.

In this case the framers of the rentbills produced by the defendant have varied the language in describing the rent paid by the holder of the land in question from time to time. The description is generally inaccurate. In my judgment the introduction of the word "Fazendari" into the rent bills may indicate a change in the person of the English writer who drew them out for Canjee Chattoor or a desire on the part of that gentleman to have the title of Fazendar attached to his name just as much as a change in the tenure under which the land was held. The title of Fazendar as it was used to describe the plaintiff in the case of Doe d. Dorabji v. Bishop of Bombay (1) was quite inapplicable to Canjee Chattoor who held under the leases from Government, of which he was assignee.

For these reasons I am unable to hold that there is any proof that Manekbai's tenure of the land she held was of a permanent character, such as is described as a Fazendari tenure in the more limited sense.

Raja HANWANT RAM—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

THE HONOURABLE Maharaja SIR BHAGWATI PRASAD SINGH, K. C. I. E.,—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27 (1) (a)—Documents rejected by lower Court, admissibility of, in Appellate Court—Evidence, fresh—Documentary evidence, admissibility of, at late stage—Court, discretion of.

The plaintiff undertook at the trial to prove a fact definitely and put in documentary evidence in support of it. At the instance of the defendant interrogatories were issued to be answered by the plaintiff himself with a view to obtain his admission as to non-existence of the fact, but the answers not being given by the plaintiff, but by his general agent, and being of an unsatisfactory character, although admitting non-existence of the fact to a certain extent, the defendant asked leave to file certain documents in proof of the non-existence of the the fact. The lower Court refused to receive those documents but they were asked to be filed before the Appellate Court.

Held, that under the above circumstances the lower Court ought to have received the documents in order to dispose completely of the matter in dispute, and that they were admissible in the Appellate Court under Order XLI, rule 27 (1) (a), Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated 30th November 1911.

The Hon'ble Rai Sri Ram Bahadur and Babu Ramapat Ram, for the Appellant.

Babu Baidev Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Counsel for the appellant in this case has asked us to admit into evidence during the hearing of this appeal certain documents which were rejected by the Court below. This application was embodied in a memorandum of additional grounds of appeal filed on the 13th of August 1912. The facts appear to be as follows: The suit was brought by the respondent, the Maharaja of Balrampur, against Raja Hanwant Ram for the recovery of a large sum of money alleged to be due upon a registered agreement executed by Hanwant Ram's deceased brother, Raja Achal Ram. The suit was brought against Hanwant Ram on the allegation that he was heir to his brother and had succeeded to his brother's property. In the plaint there was no specification of the property which was alleged to have come to the hands of the defendant. One of the pleas taken in defence was that Raja Hanwant Ram, although he was the brother of Achal Ram and his heir by relationship, had nevertheless not succeeded to any property left by Achal Ram. In the course of the trial attempts were made to prove that Hanwant Ram had come into possession of various items of property belonging to his deceased brother. One of these items consisted of the equity of redemption of 89 villages mortgaged to the plaintiff himself. At the instance of the defendant interrogatories were issued to be answered by the plaintiff himself. They were sent to the plaintiff, but the answers were not given by the Maharaja but by a general agent of his, one Raghunandan Prasad. The answers to the interrogatories were recorded on the 13th November 1911. The object of these interrogatories was to obtain from the plaintiff an admission that the equity of redemption of these villages had been sold long before the suit was brought. The answers given by the plaintiff's general agent were of an unsatisfactory character, but he admitted at any rate that he was aware that a portion of the equity of redemption had been sold in execution of decrees and that some of the purchasers had given notice to the Maharaja of their intention to bring a suit for redemption. Hanwant Ram was interested to show that the entire equity of redemption relating to these 89 villages had been sold from time to time in execution of decrees obtained against his deceased brother, Achal Ram, and when this point was not admitted in the answers given in the interrogatories, the defendant asked leave to file certain documents—certified copies of proceedings taken in execution of decrees,—to show that the entire equity of redemption had passed from the hands of Hanwant Ram long ago. The Subordinate Judge refused to receive the evidence or to call for the record of the execution cases in which these sales had taken place. In these circumstances it has been argued that the Subordinate Judge ought to have received this evidence so as to enable him to dispose of the matter in dispute. The Subordinate Judge seems to have been rather doubtful as to the way in which he should deal with the case before him. In one passage of his judgment he states that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that any particular items of property belonging to Achal Ram had come into possession of Hanwant Ram, and he cited an authority for this proposition. That may be, but at any rate there is no doubt that whether it was necessary for the plaintiff to do this or not, he did lead evidence to show that Hanwant Ram had come into possession of considerable property belonging to Achal Ram and one of the items regarding which such evidence was led was this equity of redemption. Documentary evidence was put in to show that after the death of Achal Ram, Hanwant Ram applied for and got mutation in respect of the 89 villages to the extent that he was recorded in the revenue papers as the owner of the equity of redemption. This being so and the plaintiff having undertaken at the trial to prove that definite items of property had come to the hands of Hanwant Ram, we think the Subordinate Judge would have acted wisely in receiving this evidence so as to enable him to dispose completely of the matter. We think that having regard to the items of Order XLI, rule 27, sub-rule (1), clause (a), this evidence ought to be received at the present stage and we therefore direct that it be so admitted. The documents are, as we have already observed, certified copies of execution proceedings of the Civil Courts.

Application allowed.

KAMTA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

BHAGIRATH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu law—Joint family—Alienation by manager—Adult co-parceners, when bound by alienation by manager—Consent, implied—Co-parcener not benefited by transaction effected by other co-parcener, not bound by transaction.

No alienation by one co-parcener, even if he is a managing member of the joint Hindu family, will bind the other adult co-parceners, unless their consent to the alienation is either expressed or may be implied from their conduct.

And, consent to an alienation would necessarily be inferred where a co-parcener with full knowledge of all the facts takes possession of and retains that which has been purchased with the proceeds of the property alienated.

A co-parcener not benefited by a transaction entered into by the manager of the joint Hindu family can plead that he is not bound by that transaction on the ground that he derived no benefit from it and that it has not been entered into for any legal necessity.

Appeals from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated 29th March 1913.

Babu Baslov Lal, for the Appellants.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Mr. E. Manuel, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of two suits which were tried in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad. The suits were consolidated and were disposed of by one judgment. First Civil Appeal No. 69 of 1913 relates to a claim for the recovery of Rs. 6,000 on the basis of a mortgage executed on the 9th of June 1900, by which an area of 111 bighas made up of certain plots situated in the village Patna Mubarakpur was mortgaged to the plaintiff. Appeal No. 118 of 1913 has sprung out of a suit on another mortgage bearing the same date, by which a 6-pies share in the village just mentioned was hypothecated by way of security. The amount of the claim in this second suit was Rs. 1,100. In order to understand the matters in dispute between the parties, it is necessary in the first place to set out the following pedigree:—

The first transaction to be noticed in connection with these suits is one of the 19th of February 1900, a transaction by way of sale in which an 8-annas share of Patna Mubarakpur was purchased from one Bhola Singh by five persons Kashi, Sital, Ram Charan, Ramapat and Gopal Dat. We are not concerned in these cases with Kashi or Sital, who belong to a different family. Ram Charan, whose name has just been mentioned, is defendant No. 1 in the suit brought for the recovery of Rs. 6,000. Ramapat, another of the purchasers, is defendant No. 7 in the same suit and Gopal Dat the remaining purchaser is now represented by the defendants Jagan Nath, defendant No. 4, Ram Nath, defendant No. 5, Kamta, defendant No. 6. It will be noticed from the pedigree just given that Ram Charan belongs to one branch of the family, namely, the branch descended through Kunj Behari, while Ramapat and Gopal Dat belong to the other branch of the family being descended through Ram Saran. Both Ram Saran and Kunj Behari were, as the pedigree shows, the sons of Debi Dayal, who is the common ancestor of the defendants. The price agreed upon for the property purchased from Bhola Singh was Rs. 7,200, Rs. 1,200 in cash was paid to the vendor, the rest was left with the purchasers to pay off prior mortgages on the property. It is further to be noticed that according to the terms of the sale-deed the purchasers purchased in separate shares. Out of the 8 annas, 1 anna 8 pies is recorded as having been purchased by Ram Charan, while Gopal Dat and Ramapat each became purchasers of a 10-pies share. We come now to the two mortgages upon which the two suits now under consideration were brought. The first of these, dated 9th of June 1900, was executed in favour of Bhagirath to secure a loan of Rs. 2,000. The executants of this deed were Ram Charan, defendant No. 1, Bhagwan Dat, defendant No. 2, Ram Jas, the father of Murli, defendant No. 3, Jagan Nath, defendant No. 4, and Ram Nath, defendant No. 5. The second deed of mortgage executed on the same date and in favour of the same mortgagee was for Rs. 500. The executants of this deed were Jagan Nath, defendant No. 4, and Ram Nath, defendant No. 5. It is not disputed now in appeal that these two deeds were actually executed as alleged by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's case was that these two sums of money aggregating Rs. 2,500 had been borrowed in order to pay off a portion of the mortgage-money, which the purchasers under the deed of the 19th of February 1900 had to pay to the prior incumbrancers. The total amount owing to these previous incumbrances on the whole 8 annas share which was purchased from Bhola Singh came to Rs. 5,883/15/-. The 3-annas 4-pies share which was bought by Ram Charan, Gopal Dat and Ramapat was, therefore, liable to contribute a sum of Rs. 2,451/10/-. The plaintiff's case is that the sum of Rs. 2,500 which was borrowed under these two mortgage-deeds was borrowed for the purpose of paying off the above share of the mortgage-money. The suits have, therefore, been brought against these various defendants, the allegation being that the money having been borrowed for the benefit of the joint family consisting of these defendants, they are bound by the mortgages in suit. So far as these appeals are concerned we have to deal only with the cases of three of these defendants. In appeal No. 69 the three appellants are Kamta, defendant No. 6, Ramapat, defendant No. 7, and Chandrabhal, a minor, defendant No. 10. The appellants in the other Appeal No. 118 are Ramapat and Kamta only. All these defendants denied their liability under these mortgages. They denied that they were members of a joint family with other parties arrayed as defendants and they denied that they were bound by the mortgages in suit. The lower Court has found that these appellants were liable, and has therefore given decrees on the mortgages, the result of which is to make their shares in the items of the mortgaged property liable to be sold. It will be convenient to deal first with Appeal No. 69, in which there are three appellants, Kamta, Ramapat and Chandrabhal. This suit relates to the mortgage of 111 bighas of Patna Mubarakpur. The plaintiff in order to establish the liability of all these defendants as members of a joint family produced both oral and documentary evidence. The principal oral evidence in the case consists of the statement of the fourth defendant, Jagan Nath, who was examined as a witness on the plaintiff's behalf. According to Jagan Nath's story at the time these mortgages were executed, the descendants of Ram Saran and Kunj Behari each constituted a joint family although both branches of the family were distinct. Jagan Nath deposed that the descendants of Ram Saran including himself separated four years after these mortgages were executed. He also deposes that Kunj Behari's descendants separated amongst themselves at the same time. Speaking of his own branch, namely, the branch of Ram Saran, he went on to say that after the separation just mentioned he and Kamta remained in union till about a year before the suit, while Ram Nath and Ramapat also remained in union. Speaking of the branch of Kunj Behari, he deposed that Ram Sahai, the father of Chandrabhal, defendant No. 10, died four years before the suit. His evidence also shows that at the time these mortgages were executed Chandrabhal's father, Ram Sahai, was alive and was at that time joint with his three brothers, Ram Charan, Bhagwan Dat and Ram Jas. He also proved that Ram Sahai must have been of adult age at the time these mortgages were executed, for he deposes that Ram Sahai who died only four years before the suit, was 34 years of age at the time of his death. Speaking with regard to the money borrowed under these two mortgages, Jagan Nath swore that all of it was applied to paying off the prior incumbrances on the 3-annas 4-pies share out of 8-annas which was purchased from Bhola Singh. He affirmed that neither Kamta nor Ramapat provided any of the money for redemption out of their own pocket. He went on to say that after redemption had been effected, Kamta got possession of his share of the property purchased from Bhola Singh. Ramapat too, he says, got his share, which he afterwards sold to one Ishuri. Kamta became the owner of this latter share by means of a suit for pre-emption. Speaking of the constitution of the family at the time these mortgages were executed, Jagan Nath swore that he and Kamta were heads of the family descended from Ram Saran, while Ram Charan was the managing member of the family descended from Kunj Behari. From what has been stated above, it will become apparent that neither Kamta nor Ramapat were parties to either of the mortgages in suit. According to Jagan Nath's deposition Kamta was absent at a marriage at the time when the bonds were executed. He says that Kamta authorised him to execute the mortgage. This, as I have already mentioned, is the principal oral evidence adduced by the plaintiff. As for the documentary evidence, the plaintiff relied principally upon two applications which were made under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. Certified copies of these applications together with copies of the tenders made in connection with them and also copies of the orders passed by the Court in relation to them were placed upon the record. These tenders show that on the 13th of June 1900, that is to say, four days after the execution of these mortgages, two applications were filed in Court for deposit of mortgage-money due on the 8-annas share purchased from Bhola Singh. The persons who are concerned in these applications were Ram Charan, defendant No. 1, Ramapat, defendant No. 7, Jagan Nath, defendant No. 4, Kamta, defendant No. 6, and Ram Nath, defendant No. 5; Sital and Kashi Nath the other two persons concerned in the purchase of Bhola Singh's share, were also parties. It is proved, therefore, that although Ramapat and Kamta were neither of them parties to the mortgages executed on the 9th of June 1900, they nevertheless joined in the applications made on the 13th of June for deposit of the mortgage-money; and the plaintiff has relied upon this fact in order to render Ramapat and Kamta liable in these mortgage suits. As against this evidence, Kamta put forward his own statement and also the statements of two witnesses by way of evidence to prove that he had separated from Jagan Nath and the other members of the family long before the mortgages were made. Kamta in his own statement says that he never got any share of the mortgage-money which was borrowed from the plaintiff. He admits that he took part in the proceedings relating to the deposit of the mortgage-moneys under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, but his story in this connection is that the money he contributed to these deposits was paid out of his own pocket. Kamta in cross-examination was confronted with a statement which he had made in the Revenue Court in the year 1912 to the effect that at that time he and Jagan Nath were living in a state of union. He prevaricated when he was asked to explain the statement so made, and there can be no doubt that Kamta's story of separation is altogether untrue. He is convicted of falsehood by this statement of his own which was made so recently as 1912, and there can be no doubt that Jagan Nath's story to the effect that he and Kamta were joint at the time these mortgages were executed and remained so up till about a year before the suits were brought is in fact true. Kamta also tried to prove his separation by putting forward certain deeds purporting to show that he had been lending money in his own name but, as the Subordinate Judge remarks, the fact that Kamta entered into separate mortgage dealings on his own account is not necessarily inconsistent with the allegation that he was a member of a joint family. The two witnesses Nibar and Muneshar Pande whom Kamta produced to support the story of separation were discredited by the Court below, and I think rightly. Muneshar Pande deposed that at the time when Kamta separated from his brothers a written instrument of partition was drawn up. This document has not been produced in Court. Altogether the evidence of these two witnesses is of an extremely vague description. They seem to be partisans of Kamta and are ready to swear to anything in his interest. So far as Kamta is concerned, I think the true state of his relations with the other members of the family is to be found in the statement made on oath by the defendant Jagan Nath. And the matter seems to me to be conclusively established by the part which Kamta is proved to have taken in connection with the deposits of mortgage-money which were made in Court on the 13th of June 1900. It is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that the sum of Rs. 2,500 which was borrowed on the mortgages executed on the 9th of June 1900, was borrowed to pay off the share of the prior incumbrances, which was due on the portion of the property which came to Ram Charan, Gopal Dat and Ramapat. I have mentioned already that these persons' share of the moneys due under the previous incumbrances came to Rs. 2,450 odd. Jagan Nath's story, therefore, must be accepted that the whole of the money borrowed under these mortgages was devoted to the purchase of the 3-annas-4 pies share out of the 8-annas share bought from Bhola Singh. The case of Ramapat stands much on the same footing. He produced two witnesses to prove separation between himself and the other members some eighteen years before suit. The witnesses contradicted each other. They were unable to say how the fields were divided and altogether reading their statements, it would be quite impossible to hold that they ever really witnessed any division of property between Ramapat and his co-sharers. Ramapat himself did not venture into the witness-box to explain how, if he were not interested in the mortgages which were executed on the 9th of June, he came to be a party to the deposits of the mortgage-money which were made in Court four days afterwards. So far, therefore, as the cases of Kamta and Ramapat are concerned they are perfectly clear. I have no doubt whatever that they are bound by the mortgages in suit, although they were not parties to them. It is proved that at the time the mortgages were executed, Kamta and Ramapat were members of a joint family with Jagan Nath and Ram Nath who were executants of both the deeds in suit. Jagan Nath was one of the managing members of this branch of the family, and as it is proved that Kamta took a part in depositing the money several days after the execution of the mortgages, it must be taken that as a co-sharer he consented to the alienation. The same is the case with Ramapat, and it only remains to be added that Jagan Nath has deposed that both Kamta and Ramapat obtained their shares of the property purchased from Bhola Singh. In these circumstances neither Kamta nor Ramapat can possibly be heard to say that they are not liable under the mortgages executed on the 9th of June 1900. These defendents are the only appellants in Appeal No. 118 of 1913 and for the reasons given, that appeal fails in toto and is dismissed with costs.

So far too as they are interested in Appeal No. 69 of 1913 their appeal must fail. There remains for consideration the case of Chandrabhal, who is one of the appellants in Appeal No. 69 of 1913. Chandrabhal was no party to the suit out of which Appeal No. 118 has arisen. The case of Chandrabhal in connection with this mortgage of 111 bighas, which is being considered in Appeal No. 69, stands on a different footing from that of Kamta and Ramapat. I have already set out the particulars of the mortgage relating to 111 bighas which was executed by Ram Charan, Bhagwan Dat, Ram Jas, Jagan Nath and Ram Nath. Out of these five executants three were brothers, namely, Ram Charan, Bhagwan Dat and Ram Jas. There was a fourth brother at the time this mortgage was executed, namely, Ram Sahai, who was the father of the minor appellant, Chandrabhal. Ram Sahai clearly was no party to the mortgage, nor has it been established as against him that he took part in making any deposit of the mortgage moneys as did Ramapat and Kamta. The only ground upon which the liability of Chandrabhal has been asserted is that Ram Charan, who was one of the executants of the mortgage, was the managing member (aguakar) of that branch of the family. For this statement we have the evidence of Jagan Nath, which I have accepted and which I see no reason to disbelieve. The question is whether it being found that Ram Charan was the aguakar of the family consisting of himself and his three brothers, Chandrabhal, who now represents the fourth brother Ram Sahai, can be held bound by the act of Ram Charan. Jagan Nath's evidence proves that at the time this mortgage was executed, Ram Sahai must have been of adult age. If we take it, therefore, that Ram Charan was the managing member of this property of the family, we have to see what his powers as manager were in the matter of alienation of co-parcenary property. Where the co-parceners, are adults the manager of the joint family may sell or mortgage the joint family property so as to bind the interest of the co-parceners provided that in the case of adult members if the sale or mortgage is made with their consent, expressed or implied, such consent may be implied from conduct at or after the time of the transaction. We have seen in the case of Kamta and Ramapat that there was abundant evidence of their consent by conduct, for they both joined in the tender of the mortgage-money, money which undoubtedly had been borrowed for the purpose under the mortgage-deeds of the 9th of June 1900. It was also proved in their case that they had benefited by the transaction, for they both came into possession of their proportionate shares of the property which was purchased from Bhola Singh. Is there any such evidence in the case of Ram Sahai? I have not been able to find any. If Ram Sahai and after him his son, the minor appellant Chandrabhal, had got possession of any portion of this property purchased from Bhola Singh, I should treat that as being sufficient proof of their consent or ratification, for consent to an alienation would necessarily be inferred where one of the co-parceners with full knowledge of all the facts takes possession of and retains that which has been purchased with the proceeds of the property disposed of. There is no such evidence on the record. The learned Counsel for the respondents referred me to a Settlement khewat, a copy of which is Exhibit No. 9, in order to show that Ram Sahai held the property jointly with his brothers. This khewat was prepared about the year 1898, or 1899 and it cannot be accepted as any proof that Ram Sahai got any share of this property which only passed from Bhola Singh in the year 1900. No doubt Ram Sahai was joint with his brothers in the year 1898 and the parties had at that time a small share in this village of Patna Mubarakpur, but there is absolutely nothing to prove that Ram Sahai or after him his minor son, Chandrabhal, has ever acquired any portion of the property which was purchased from Bhola Singh. It is true that in paragraph 6 of his plaint the plaintiff asserted that Chandrabhal was in possession of a portion of this property. This, however, was not admitted in the written statement. Chandrabhal's defence was that he had never got any share of this property and that he had received no benefit whatever from the loan of Rs. 2,000, which was borrowed upon one of the mortgages executed on the 9th of June 1900. This being the case, it appears to me that the minor Chandrabhal was entitled to say to the Court that he was not bound by the mortgage in suit, from which he derived no benefit whatever and which was not executed for any legal necessity. In the concluding portion of his judgment the Subordinate Judge remarks as follows:—"This is not a case of a mortgage by a co-parcener of his undivided interest in the joint family so as to require the consent of the other members. In the present case certain members have incumbered their own shares as well as of the others. So the joint ownership of all the members is not broken up by any specification of shares. Therefore no question of consent comes in." I am unable to understand these remarks of the learned Judge. The law is as I have stated above that no alienation by one co-parcener, even if he is a managing member of the family, will bind the other adult co-parceners unless their consent to the alienation is either expressed or may be implied from conduct. I think therefore that the appellant, Chandrabhal is entitled to succeed in this Court and I hold accordingly that Chandrabhal's interest in the 111 bighas of Patna Mubarakpur, which was mortgaged by Ram Charan, Bhagwan Dat, Ram Jas, Jagan Nath and Ram Nath on the 9th of June, cannot be brought to sale in this suit of the plaintiff's. The result is that Appeal No. 69 of 1913 is allowed in part and the decree of the lower Court which is in question in that case is modified, it being declared that the interest of the minor Chandrabhal in the plots specified in the decree is not liable to sale. The appellant Chandrabhal will get from the plaintiff-respondent his proportionate costs both here and in the Court below. In other respects the appeal No. 69 of 1913 is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Shahabad, dated the 1st March 1913, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge of that place, dated the 15th of June 1912.

Babu Raghoo Nath Singh, for the Appellants.

Moulvi Wahid Hosain and Babu Harendra Nath Mookherjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point raised in this appeal is, whether a decree-holder in a mortgage suit is entitled to the rate of interest stipulated for in the mortgage-bond from the date fixed for payment to the date of realization, that is, the date when the money in question is paid, or whether he is entitled only to the Court rate of interest for that period. The lower Court relying on the decision in Radhika Mohan Ghose v. Brojendra Kumar Saha (1), where the question was treated as one of construction, has allowed the stipulated rate for that period. We agree that the matter to be decided is one of construction, and that we have no power to alter the decree. In these circumstances, having regard to the general rule laid down in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (2) and the view taken by this Court in Maha Pershad Singh v. Surendra Mohan Singh (3), we hold that the construction adopted by the lower Court is wrong. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Subordinate Judge. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court, which are assessed at three gold mohurs, and the Court below.

Appeal allowed.

KESHAVRAO BHAIJI AND OTHERS —DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Lease of land for purposes of building over—Ejectment—Terms of agreement—Mere non-payment of rent, effect of—Fasendari, meaning of

A tenant took a piece of land for building a house thereon on the condition that so long as the wadi of which the said piece of land formed a portion remained in the possession of the landlord, the tenant would occupy the land, but when the wadi ceased to be in the landlord's possession and the land was required, the tenant was to be paid the valuation of the house and to vacate:

Held, (1) that the landlord whose possession was contemplated in the agreement must include both the landlord and his assigns, and in the same way the tenant would include his assigns;

(2) that the tenant could not be ejected according to the terms of the agreement while the landlord remained in possession of the wadi and the land was not required by any one else;

(3) that the mere non-payment of rent by a tenant, if the tenancy is not determined, does not give him a right to the property as against his landlord.

The word "fasendari", even though indicating the nature of the rent, does not necessarily decide the nature of the tenure which depends upon the agreement between the parties.

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Beaman, reported as 23 Ind. Cas. 880.

Mr. Setalvad (with him Mr. Desai), for the Appellant.

Mr. Kanga (with him Mr. Jardine, Acting Advocate-General), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an ejectment suit in which the plaintiff represents the landlord under two agreements of 1859 and 1860, and the defendants represent the tenant under those agreements.

The question is whether the plaintiff is entitled at any time to determine the tenancy which has been subsisting since the date of those agreements.

Now, the first of them, Exhibit A, is dated the 5th of March 1859, and the tenant there agrees as follows:—

"There is your wadi by name Charni situate on the sea-shore. I have taken the land Fasendari (or on Fasendari or as Fasendar) being a portion of this Wadi on the Southern side for building a Cadjan house. On this land I shall build a house at my cost within Rs. 50. The ground rent is fixed at Rs. 6 per annum which I will continue to pay from year to year. I will pay the assessment, and, if at any time you be in need of the ground appertaining to this house, I am to give the said ground to you and you are to pay me Rs. 50 being a valuation thereof agreeably to what is written above."

At that time the intention was to build a Cadjan house of the value of only Rs. 50 and the tenant agreed to give up ground whenever it was required by the landlord.

In the following year, an agreement, somewhat different in terms, was entered into. It recites that the tenant has taken on Fasendari land in the wadi for the purpose of building a Cadjan house thereon. The agreement then continues:—

"I shall build a house in the said wadi at my own cost. The Fasendari rent in respect thereof is fixed at Rs. 9 per annum which I will continue to pay to you from year to year. I will pay the assessment. I shall build house on this land and live in it peacefully. I shall live there till the wadi remains in your possession. If the wadi ceases to be in your possession and if the land be required, you are to pay me the value of the said house whatever the same may come to. Otherwise I shall pull down my house and remove it."

It is to be observed that the value of the house is not stated in that agreement, but the rent is raised fifty per cent. from Rs. 6 to 9 and the condition as to surrender is worded quite differently. The tenant is to live in the wadi so long as it remains in the possession of the landlord. He is to be paid the valuation of the house when the wadi ceases to be in the landlord's possession and the land is required. Therefore, his possession will not cease merely upon the wish of the landlord. For instance, if the landlord remains in possession and wishes him to vacate, he would not have to vacate according to the condition in the second agreement.

Now, we think that the landlord whose possession is contemplated there must include both the landlord and his assigns and in the same way the tenant would include his assigns. Here we have a suit in which the landlord sues to eject according to the terms of the agreement while he remains in possession of the wadi and the land is not required by any one else. It appears to us that under the terms of the agreement he has no right in such circumstances to eject the tenant. That disposes of the suit and the decree of the lower Court dismissing the suit must be affirmed.

It must not be supposed, however, that we accept the view of the lower Court with regard to the meaning of Fasendari, when it occurs in a written document embodying the contract between the parties. On that point, we entirely agree with the remarks of Mr. Justice Farran in Parmanandas Jivandas v. Ardeshir Framji (1).

We also do not agree with the learned Judge in holding that the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation. In the letter of the 7th of July 1871, the tenants who were then Atmaram Bhikaji and Bhai Lakshmanji, predecessors-in-title of the present defendants, instructed their attorneys to say that they did not recognize Ramnath Dadaji, predecessor of the present plaintiff, as the Fasendar of the premises and could not see what right he had to interfere. Unless, therefore, Ramnath showed them that he was the Fasendar, they would complete purchase without regard to the threats contained in his letter. Then on the 19th of July after having been informed of the title of Ramnath Dadaji, the attorneys of Atmaram Bhikaji and Bhai Lakshmanji stated that they were ready and willing to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 9 per annum, if Ramnath removed the foundation of the wall which he had laid in front of their clients' house and allowed the use of the old privy.

There is, therefore, no denial of the title of Ramnath Dadaji as the landlord of this ground and although there is no evidence that rent was paid between 1871 and 1901, the mere non-payment of rent by a tenant, if the tenancy is not determined, does not give him a right to the property as against his landlord. Then, it appears that in 1901 the plaintiff sued the defendants for rent according to the terms of the agreement of 1860 and after evidence had been given by the plaintiff the defendants agreed to a decree for the amount of rent prayed, on condition that the summons in the suit was amended by the insertion of the word "Faxendari" as indicating the nature of the rent. We are of opinion that that word, even though agreed upon as indicating the nature of the rent, does not decide the terms upon which the defendant held and still holds, for his tenure must depend upon the terms of the agreement of 1860 taken together. Upon the terms of that agreement, we are of opinion, for the reasons already stated, that in the circumstances which have been established in this case, the plaintiff has no right of ejectment.

We, therefore, affirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 108 (10)—"Illegally ejected", meaning of—Res judicata, temporary.

The words "illegally ejected" used in section 108 (10) include an ejectment by a process of law if the ejectment was illegal.

A decision in a previous ejectment case under section 62 of the Oudh Rent Act as to under-proprietary rights operates as res judicata between the parties in a subsequent case for recovery of possession in the Revenue Court until there is a final adjudication of the question in the Civil Court.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 28th April 1913, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, Sultanpur, dated 26th August 1912.

FACTS.—The defendants-landlords filed a suit against the plaintiff for ejectment under section 62 of the Oudh Rent Act. The latter pleaded that he was an under-proprietor of the land in suit. The Revenue Courts found that he had no under-proprietary right, and ejected him. After he had thus been ejected, he brought a suit for recovery of possession under section 108 (10) of the Oudh Rent Act, on the allegation that he had been illegally ejected as he was an under-proprietor. The points for decision in the case, therefore, were:—firstly, whether the plaintiff was entitled to sue under section 108 (10) after he had been ejected under section 62, and secondly, whether the decision in the previous ejectment case as to under-proprietary rights operated as res judicata in the subsequent suit for recovery of possession.

Mr. P. C. Bhattacharjee, for the Appellant.

Babu Raj Kumar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Commissioner has dismissed the appeal somewhat summarily, and I am not altogether able to accept his view of the law. It has been held that the words "illegally ejected" used in section 108, clause (10), include an ejectment by a process of law if the ejectment was illegal. He will find the rulings on the subject at page 248 of Mata Prasad's Oudh Rent Act, second edition.

I proceed to dispose of the appeal on the merits of the case, as it seems unnecessary to send it back for re-hearing by the Commissioner. The Assistant Collector says that defendant No. 3 was not a party to the suit under section 62. The copy of the judgment on the file shows that besides the present defendants Nos. 1 and 2 there were other parties to the suit, and respondent contends that defendant No. 3 was a party. The appellant is not very definite on the point. Appellant has, however, admitted that defendant No. 3, Mata Prasad Singh, holds his title under the other defendants. This being so, section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to him also, and the question of under-proprietary right which was in issue and decided in the section 62 suit is now res judicata as between the parties, until there is a final adjudication on the question in the Civil Court. There was no illegal ejectment therefore, and the suit was properly dismissed.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Arbitration—Party having notice of hearing not appearing—Ex parte award, validity of—Costs, order as to, included in award—Award, whether bad.

Where a party to an arbitration proceeding receives notice of the hearing but does not appear, the arbitrators are right in making an ex parte award.

Costs incurred in the process of obtaining an order from the Court are within the discretion of the Court and outside the province of the arbitrator, but an award is not bad merely because of their inclusion.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Mulchand Thawardas, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The award is objected to on behalf of Assanmal Udernomal on three grounds:—

1. That Assanmal received no notice of the hearing.

2. That the arbitrators proceeded ex parte.

3. That the award is ultra vires, inasmuch as it awards costs and charges that may be incurred in filing this award in Court.

Mr. Noble has proved that notice of the hearing was sent by registered post and the receipt purporting to be in order is produced. He states that Assanmal systematically refused notices. All that Assanmal can say of this receipt is that he did not sign it himself; he is not prepared to say that one of his brothers did not sign it.

I hold that Assanmal received notice of the hearing and that, as he did not appear, the arbitrators rightly proceeded ex parte.

I have previously held in the case of James Finlay & Co. v. The Firm of Asudamal Harbhagwandas(1) that all costs incurred in the process of obtaining an order from the Court are within the discretion of the Court and outside the province of the arbitrator; but it is an almost universal practice of arbitrators in Karachi to add at the end of their award the words complained of, and the Court may fairly regard such words as nothing more than a recommendation that the costs referred to be granted. As the costs are not specified, the award cannot be enforced of itself and without some order of the Court. Construing the words in this sense, I hold that the award is not bad merely because of their inclusion. So far as I am aware no award has been held bad solely because the arbitrators awarded costs of filing the award.

Let the award stand filed. All costs of these proceedings to be borne by respondents No. 2.

The Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act does not apply to debts and liabilities which are charged upon immoveable property outside Chota Nagpur.

Therefore, a Manager of an encumbered estate appointed under the Act and the Revenue Authorities in Chota Nagpur have no jurisdiction to reduce the interest or deal in any other way with a mortgage-debt created by the proprietor of the estate on a property outside Chota Nagpur, and the proprietor of such an estate is not entitled to the rents payable under the patni leases which were reserved in lieu of interest on the mortgage-debt, until the principal sum secured by the mortgage is re-paid, and is liable to refund any amount realized as such.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment about to be delivered by Richardson, J. I agree herewith for the reasons there stated.

RICHARDSON, J.—The plaintiffs in this suit (Kumud Nath Chatterjee and others) are the sons and daughter-in-law of the late Mohesh Chandra Chatterjee. The defendant is the Raja of Pacheti in Chota Nagpur, having succeeded to that dignity on the death of his grandfather, the late Maharaja Nilmoni Sinha Deo.

The late Maharaja granted to Mohesh Chandra Chatterjee patni leases of four lots or parcels of land, three of which are in the District of Bankura, while one is in the District of Burdwan.

In the year 1887, the late Maharaja borrowed from Mohesh Chandra Chatterjee the sums of Rs. 22,435 upon the security of a mortgage of the lands covered by the patni leases. Interest was payable on the loan at the rate of Rs. 10-8-0 per cent. per annum, and the amount of annual interest being approximately equivalent to the amount of rents due under the leases, it was stipulated that the one sum should be set off against the other until the principal was re-paid. This arrangement was effected by a deed, styled a sudbandaki mortgage-bond, which was executed by the Maharaja at Pacheti on the 2nd February 1887. If the arrangement was not terminated by the proceedings to which I am about to refer, it is still in force as between the plaintiffs as representatives of Mohesh (who died in 1890 or 1891) on the one hand and the defendant Raja on the other.

In the year 1895, the affairs of the late Maharaja being then, as it appears, in a very embarrassed condition, the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (Act VI of 1876) were applied to his case and the management of his immoveable property was vested in a Manager appointed under section 2 of the Act. This vesting order was notified in the Calcutta Gazette of the 3rd July 1895, and was wide enough in its terms to extend to the immoveable property of the Maharaja in Chota Nagpur and in the districts of Burdwan and Bankura. The Manager, in due course, issued a notice under section 5 of the Act and the plaintiffs, among other creditors, brought in their claim. They submitted their mortgage-bond with a petition, dated the 26th August 1895, (Exhibit U) praying "that an order may be passed for the payment of the said amount (Rs. 22,435) from the estate or for the continuance of the practice of crediting the rents of the said lots to the satisfaction of the interest." The Manager dealt, or assumed to deal, with the debt under the Act, under section 8; the principal amount due to the plaintiffs was determined to be Rs. 22,393-2-9, instead of Rs. 22,435. The reduction was made, as I understand, because it was thought that interest had been overpaid, the annual rents being slightly in excess of the annual interest. The debt so determined was then entered in the schedule of the Maharaja's debts and liabilities and in the scheme for their settlement prepared and submitted to the Commissioner under section 11. What was done in regard to it was this. Under the rules framed under clause (d) of section 19, future interest was allowed at the reduced rate of 6 per cent. per annum and the difference between the interest calculated at that rate and the amount of the patni rents was taken in satisfaction of the principal amount determined under section 8. It may be that the Manager was at first disposed to allow interest at the bond, rate but there is no doubt that in the scheme of settlement in the form in which it was finally sanctioned by the Commissioner the debt was to be discharged in the manner I have indicated. This appears from the Deputy Commissioner's letter to the Commissioner and the statement of account dated 29th March 1898 (Exhibit H and Exhibit F), from the Commissioner's letter in reply dated 30th April 1898 (Exhibit G), and from the ledger accounts (Exhibit Q, Exhibit T). Exhibit T, the ledger of debts for the years 1906-1907, shows a balance of Rs. 5,523-12-11 due to the plaintiffs on the 31st July 1907. This amount seems to have been deposited in the treasury in August or September of the same year, presumably to the credit of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, however, have not withdrawn the amount and it is not shown that notice of the deposit was given to them.

The late Maharaja having died, the property which had been under management was restored on the 1st August 1907, to his heir, the defendant Raja. This was done under the first paragraph of section 12 of the Act, on the footing, that is, that the debts and liabilities entered in the schedule prepared under section 11 had been paid and discharged. Throughout the period of management, the plaintiffs must be considered to have been in possession as mortgagees. They paid no rent. On the only occasion on which any rent was collected from them, it had been demanded by an oversight and was repaid. The incident has no importance, because it is not the case for either side that any rent was actually payable by them in money during the period in question. The system adopted by the Manager was a system of book entries of which the plaintiffs may or may not have been aware. They assert that they were in possession under the terms of their mortgage-bond. The defendant says that their possession was subject to the action taken under the Act in respect of the debt due to them.

Acting upon that view, the defendant on his restoration proceeded to levy rent from the plaintiffs by putting or threatening to put in force the summary provisions for the recovery of patni rent enacted in Regulation VIII of 1819. He applied to the Collector for the sale of the patni tenures and caused notice to be issued to the plaintiffs under section 8 of the Regulation. The plaintiffs then paid certain sums aggregating Rs. 6,848-4-0, and they subsequently brought the present suit for the recovery of the money so paid. The plaint also prays for interest, a claim which was withdrawn at the trial. In regard to the principal claim the plaintiffs were successful in the Court below, and this appeal is preferred by the defendant from the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 26th June 1912.

The first point urged on the appellant's behalf related to the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge. The greater part of the sum decreed was paid to the defendants' agent at Bankura. A small portion, however, was paid at Burdwan and it cannot, therefore, be said that no portion of the cause of action arose at Burdwan. The contention that the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan had no jurisdiction to try the suit must be rejected.

The contention, that the suit should be dismissed because the payments which it is sought to recover were voluntary payments made under a mistake of law and not under a mistake of fact, raised a more debateable question, but is also in my opinion untenable. No doubt the payments were made without express protest and without application for a summary investigation under clause second of section 14 of the Patni Regulation. The record, therefore, does not show in point of fact whether the payments were made rightly or wrongly in satisfaction of the demands for rent or whether they were made merely for the purpose of preventing the threatened sale of the tenures. It may further be conceded that the case does not come precisely within the class of cases of which Dhuli Chand v. Ram Kishen Singh (1) may be taken as an illustration, while the payment is made by a third party under compulsion of a threatened sale and for the purpose of preventing the sale. It does not follow, however, that the claim is not maintainable. The true answer to the defendants' contention is that it is wrong to treat the claim merely as a claim for money paid and received by the defendant to the use of the plaintiffs. If that were the only foundation of the claim there might be a difficulty in the plaintiff's way. No suggestion of fraud is made and there is the doubt as to the intention with which the payments were made. The ordinary rule, moreover, is that money paid under compulsion of legal process cannot be recovered back [Marriott v. Hampton (2), Moore v. Fulham Vestry (3)]. But the present case stands on higher ground. Section 14 of the Regulation recognizes some right, at any rate on the part of the patnidar, to resort to the ordinary Civil Courts for the purpose of contesting the demand made by the zemindar. If the former does not pay the amount claimed, the tenure is to be sold, but with this express reservation that "it shall be competent to any party (including, that is, the patnidar), desirous of contesting the right of the zemindar to make the sale, whether on the ground of there having been no balance due, or any other ground, to sue the zemindar for the reversal of the same and upon establishing a sufficient plea to obtain a decree with full cost and damages." Similarly if under the second clause the patnidar contests the demand and applies for a summary investigation and the investigation (which is also called a "suit") is not concluded before the day appointed for sale, the sale is to be held unless the amount claimed is deposited, and if the deposit is not made the alleged defaulter is to "have no remedy but by a regular action for damages and for a reversal of the sale." A patnidar, therefore, can always sue to have a sale set aside and no distinction in this respect exists between cases in which the demand is, and those in which it is not, contested before sale. There is no reason why, if the amount claimed is paid (with the result that no sale is in fact held), it should not be recovered back when it is afterwards found that no rent was due. If that course is permissible to the patnidar, it is much more convenient to all concerned than his waiting till the sale is over and then suing to have it set aside, when various complications may arise owing to the existence of a third party auction-purchaser. It seems to me that the section necessarily implies a right on the part of the patnidar to recover back his money by suit in such circumstances as those of the present case. In the first place, the patnidar is not obliged to prefer his objection to a demand before the Collector. Clause second of section 14 merely says that he "shall be competent to apply for a summary investigation." In the second place, the section is silent on the question whether if in the course of such an investigation the amount claimed is deposited, and the Collector decides against the validity of the objection and pays the money over to the zemindar, the patnidar can sue to recover it back. But obviously he must have that right and it seems to me upon the language of the section as a whole, that its framers contemplated and intended that he should have the right to sue for the recovery of his money on the ground that no rent was due from him not only when he has made an unsuccessful objection, but in all cases whether he has or has not paid under protest or lodged an objection. In other words, an objection or a summary investigation by a Collector is not a condition precedent to the bringing of a suit. The Collector's decision is not final and in the case before us, for instance, nothing could have been gained by bringing the dispute between the parties before the Collectors of Burdwan and Midnapur. Litigation in the Civil Courts would have followed as a matter of course. Under the Regulation no complete or final determination is possible except by bringing the matter before the Civil Court. The truth seems to be that a zemindar initiates proceedings under Regulation VIII of 1819 at his own risk and subject, if there is no balance of rent due, to the right of the patnidar to recover the sum levied from him by such proceedings, or to be restored to the status quo ante. When there is no arrear of rent in fact due, proceedings under the Regulation are in their inception unauthorized and illegal. Possibly it is this illegality which distinguishes the original notice issued on the plaintiffs in the present case from the writ or summons in an ordinary suit and furnishes a compulsive or coercive element sufficient to bring the case within the rule applied in Duli Chand's case(1) and embodied in section 72 of the Contract Act [Seth Kanhaya Lal v. National Bank of India Ltd. (4)]. But if the plaintiffs have a right of suit in the nature of a suit for money had and received under the Regulation, it is not necessary to consider whether they have an independent right of suit under section 72 of the Contract Act. In my opinion it is no defence to the present suit (though it may be a good defence in other cases) to say that the payments made by the plaintiffs were voluntary payments made with a full knowledge of all the facts.

The main stress of the argument addressed to us was directed to the question whether the Chota Nagpur Incumbered Estates Act, according to its true construction, applies to immoveable property situated outside the limits of the Chota Nagpur Division, or to debts for which such property is merely hypothecated. The learned Subordinate Judge has answered the question in the negative, and his opinion is supported by the subsequent decision of a Bench of this Court (Mukherjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) in the case of Bhicha Ram v. Bishambar Nath (5). By that decision we are bound, unless we see such reason to differ from it as would justify us in referring the question to a Full Bench for determination. The learned Vakil, who argued in the case cited in favour of the view which was adopted by the Court, has now with the skill and learning to which we are accustomed pressed the contrary view upon us. Notwithstanding I am not prepared to take the course which he urged us to take. In deference to his argument, however, we have re-examined the provisions of the Act, which is no doubt an extremely difficult one to construe. The difficulty is largely grammatical, the language being very involved owing to the loose way in which words of relation are used. I take the Act as printed in the Bengal Code, that is, as it stood before it was amended by Act III (B. C.) of 1909. The most important sections are perhaps section 2, under which the vesting order is made, and section 3 which defines the effect of the order. The rest of the Act is largely concerned with machinery and details, but nonetheless sections 2 and 3 cannot be construed as though they stood alone. The Act must be read and construed as a whole. Section 1 gives its title, "The Chota Nagpur Incumbered Estates Act." Section 2 begins. "Whenever any holder of immoveable property". Admittedly in view of the preamble and the title, that means "whenever any holder of immoveable property in Chota Nagpur" and if the words "in Chota Nagpur" must be understood here, it becomes at least possible that the expression "immoveable property" occurring elsewhere must be similarly limited to property in Chota Nagpur. Omitting two or three paragraphs, the section continues:—

"Or when any such property belonging to such holder has been attached in execution of a decree of a Civil Court, the Deputy Commissioner within whose jurisdiction such property is situate."

That must also mean property in Chota Nagpur. Then come the words:—

"Applies in writing to the Commissioner, stating that the holder of the said property is subject to, or that his said property is charged with, debts or liabilities other than debts due or liabilities incurred to Government."

There again "the said property" is property in Chota Nagpur.

The Act proceeds:—"the Commissioner may .... appoint an officer (hereinafter called the manager) and vest in him the management of the whole or any portion of the immoveable property of or to which the said holder is then possessed or entitled in his own right or which he is entitled to redeem, or which may be acquired by or devolve on him or his heir during the continuance of such management."

These are wide words and at first sight suggest that they extend to more than the immoveable property held in Chota Nagpur required as a condition precedent to an application for the benefit of the Act. But almost in the next line a difficulty suggests itself. Under clause (a), with which one of the clauses in section 3 is referentially connected, the application is to state the particulars of the debts and liabilities as aforesaid to which the said holder is subject or with which his immoveable property is charged. The difficulty lies in the relative words "as aforesaid" which refer back to the application clauses. They may, however, and probably do, mean debts and liabilities other than debts due or liabilities incurred to Government. If that be so, the words "his immoveable property" in clause (a) and clause (b) of the section are capable of a construction consistent with the extended meaning which it is suggested should be given to the language of the vesting clause.

There is nothing in section 3 which is necessarily inconsistent with that meaning. The words "such debts and liabilities" in clause first must refer to debts and liabilities of the kind contemplated by clause (a) of section 2. Clause secondly speaks of "the property so vested as aforesaid." In clause thirdly, three different expressions are used

(5) 17 Ind. Cas. 957; 16 C. L. J. 527; 17 C. W. N. 754; 18 C. L. J. 48.

"the said immoveable property," "such property" and "the same property" but, in each case the reference must be to the property so vested as aforesaid mentioned in clause secondly.

Even so, however, there still remains a doubt whether the words of the vesting clause do in fact include, and whether they were intended by the Legislature to include, property other than property in Chota Nagpur. The doubt is suggested in the first instance by the preamble and title of the Act. In regard to the scope and purpose of the Act or its policy, it is arguable whether the Legislature ever intended to do more than free the holders of the land in Chota Nagpur from their personal liabilities and disencumber their lands and estates in Chota Nagpur. It is quite conceivable that the Legislature did not intend to touch debts and liabilities which are merely charged upon lands outside Chota Nagpur. As Mr. Justice Mookerji has pointed out, the language used in sections 2 and 3 does in more than one place support the view that a distinction ought to be drawn between the debts and liabilities to which the holder of the land is personally subject and debts and liabilities secured upon landed property. If that distinction be borne in mind, it is quite possible to confine the words of the vesting clause, wide as they are, to immoveable property in Chota Nagpur, and that construction seems to me, as it seemed to the learned Judges in the case cited, to be more consistent with the preceding part of section 2, with such provisions as those contained in sections 10, 16 and 23 and with the Act as a whole. For instance, section 2 speaks of the Deputy Commissioner within whose jurisdiction such property is situate and section 16 of "the Deputy Commissioner within whose jurisdiction the property is situate." In section 2 the property referred to must be property in Chota Nagpur, and it is obvious that in section 16 the Legislature were also thinking of property in Chota Nagpur. Deputy Commissioners are to be found in Chota Nagpur and other non-regulation tracts, but the revenue head of the ordinary district is styled a Collector. Sections 7 and 8 are consistent with either view of the scope of the Act, the property referred to in those sections being the property the management of which is vested in the manager. It all depends on the meaning of the vesting clause as to which the conclusion arrived at is precisely that in the case cited. Something was said as to the Act having been passed by the Supreme Legislative Council and not by the Bengal Council. That may well be accounted for by the fact that the Act abridges, or may in some cases abridge, the jurisdiction of the High Court.

I may add that we have given the learned Vakil for the defendant an opportunity of addressing us on the question whether, according to the terms of the mortgage-bond of 1887, the late Maharaja was under any personal liability to repay the amount which he had borrowed, a question which was not discussed at the original hearing of the appeal. The learned Vakil has very candidly informed us that having read the instrument, he is not in a position to argue that it imposed any such liability on the Maharaja.

The result is, in my opinion, that the Act being inapplicable to immoveable property outside Chota Nagpur, the Manager and the Revenue Authorities in Chota Nagpur had no jurisdiction to deal with the plaintiff's mortgage, either by reducing the interest on the debt or in any other way. It follows that until the principal sum secured by the mortgage is re-paid, the defendant is not entitled to the rents payable under the patni leases and that he must refund the amount claimed in this case.

It was suggested that even if the Manager had no jurisdiction, the plaintiffs so acted as to constitute him an arbitrator for the settlement of their claim. But consent cannot confer on a Judge a jurisdiction which he does not otherwise possess, and section 15 of the Act shows that the Manager acts in some respects judicially. Even if it be assumed that the Manager might have been by agreement validly appointed an arbiter or that some valid agreement as to the mode in which the plaintiffs' claim should be satisfied might have been arrived at between the plaintiffs and the Manager, the latter acting not as a Judge but in some administrative or representative capacity for the Maharaja, I cannot find on the record materials sufficient to support a conclusion that the plaintiffs ever entered into any agreement either of the one kind or the other. There is nothing to show that they consented to be bound by the decision of the Manager, whether he had, or had not, power under the Act to deal with their claim, or that they assented to or adopted the Manager's action in regard to that claim.

In my opinion the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 79 (1) (b)—Suit for compensation for crops wrongfully removed by landlord—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court.

Section 79 (1) (b) of the Agra Tenancy Act entitles a plaintiff to recover the value of any crop which has been wrongfully removed by the defendant as one of the resultant damages of wrongful dispossession.

Therefore, a suit for compensation for the value of the crops which were wrongfully removed is a suit for compensation for illegal ejectment by a tenant against his landlord and should be brought in a Revenue Court.

Application for revision against a decree of the Small Cause Court Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 22nd September 1913.

Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is a person who obtained a sub-lease from the defendants, the occupancy-tenants of the land. He sowed the land. The lessors trespassed on it and cut and removed his crops. He prosecuted them in the criminal Court charging them with criminal trespass and assault. One of them, Laljit, was convicted of these two offences and was fined Rs. 10. The plaintiff now brings a suit for compensation for the value of the crops which were removed. The lower Court, that is, the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, has rejected the plaint, on the ground that the suit was one for compensation for illegal ejectment by a tenant against his landlord, and has returned it for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff applies in revision and contends that the suit is merely to recover the value of the property which was illegally taken by the defendants. It is clear that after the wrongful ejectment, the plaintiff was entitled to bring a suit to recover possession of the holding and also for compensation for wrongful dispossession under section 79 of the Tenancy Act. If compensation for wrongful dispossession could cover and include the value of the crops removed by the defendants, then it is clear that the suit ought to have been brought in the Revenue Court and not in the Court of Small Causes. It seems to me that clause (1) (b) of section 79 would entitle the plaintiff to recover the value of any crop which has been removed by the defendants as one of the resultant damages of wrongful dispossession. The suit, therefore, ought to have been brought in the Revenue Court and the order of the Court below is quite correct. This application is, therefore, rejected. I make no order as to costs, as the opposite party is unrepresented.

JUDGMENT.—Ram Datt Tiwari v. Court of Wards, Ajodhya Estate (1) is entirely against the appellant's case. It is only under-proprietary tenures which pay no rent at all that fall under the operation of the Resumption Chapter. Under-proprietary tenures which pay rent must be dealt with under section 79 of the Land Revenue Act. Indeed the appellant himself applied at the last Settlement under section 79, and only failed to get the rent enhanced because it was held that no enhancement could take place until a Settlement began.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 62—Suit to recover money from person appointed to realise assets of a deceased—Money had and received—Limitation.

The defendant was appointed to sell the stock-in-trade of a deceased, to realize debts due to him and pay debts due to others by the deceased, pending the settlement by arbitration of disputes between the relatives of the deceased as to their shares. The defendant realised the assets of the deceased and paid certain debts. The arbitration proceedings meanwhile fell through. The plaintiff, a sister of the deceased, sued to recover her share:

Held, that the plaintiff was only entitled to recover under the form of action known as a claim for "money had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff" and as the suit was brought more than three years after the latest item was received, it was barred by Article 62 of the Limitation Act.

FACTS of the case fully appear from the following judgment in connected Appeal No. 104 of 1912:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover her share in the estate of her brother, one Sheikh Gulzar Ali, who died on the 22nd of August 1907. It is clear that the plaintiff was entitled to her share in the estate of her deceased brother after paying his debts. It appears that the deceased carried on certain business as a timber merchant. After his death pending disputes (which it was hoped would be settled by arbitration between the relatives of the deceased), defendant No. 2, Maulvi Syed Masihuddin, was appointed to sell the stock-in-trade of the deceased, to realise debts due to him and pay debts due to others by the deceased. The arbitration proceedings seem to have come to nothing, but it is admitted that the defendant No. 2, the appellant in the present appeal, did realise the estate of the deceased to the extent of Rs. 26,628-12-0. There can be no doubt that notwithstanding that the arbitration proceedings came to nothing, the defendant No. 2 was liable to account for the estate of the deceased which had come into his hands. In the plaint it was admitted that certain debts had been paid out of the money realised. After the written statement was filed, the plaintiff gave details of the debts which she admitted to have been paid to the extent of Rs. 18,917-4-0. Amongst the details was an item of Rs. 4,540-9-9. This was stated to have been paid for miscellaneous debts of creditors whose names were not known. In the column of remarks opposite to this item, there is the following passage: "After the execution of the agreement referring the matter to arbitration. Thakur Prasad had mentioned this sum to the plaintiff's servant as the total amount due on account of miscellaneous items, including the arrear due to the warifa-holders and others, salary holders, and the amount of income-tax and it was entered in the plaint. The detail of the account was not known, hence it could not be correctly checked. Thakur Prasad had also mentioned that a certain sum was due to Hakim Saiyed Husain but he did not give a detail of it."

The contention in this Court by the appellant has been that the plaintiff having admitted that the sum of Rs. 18,917-4-0 having been paid to the creditors, and not having admitted that any sum was due to Hakim Saiyed Husain, the appellant is entitled to credit for any sum which the Court below found to be due to Hakim Saiyed Husain, and furthermore that inasmuch as the Court below found that the plaintiff had failed to prove that there was any money save Rs. 2 left by the deceased in cash, not only is the money found due to Hakim Saiyed Husain to be added to the Rs. 18,917-4-0, but also the sum of Rs. 1,155 admitted by the plaintiff to have been paid for funeral and other expenses. It appears to us from a perusal of the judgment of the Court below, and after hearing the learned Advocate on behalf of the appellant that the parties in the Court below went into evidence upon all disputed items, which included many items, which went to make up the Rs. 18,917-4-0. The Court below heard the parties and came to a conclusion upon every disputed item. In our opinion it was quite open to the Court below to do this, and it seems to have done it without any protest on behalf of either party. In the end although the Court found that the defendant had failed to prove the entire Rs. 18,91-4-0, it nevertheless held the plaintiff bound by her admission that debts, etc., had been paid to this extent. The view that we have taken as to the way that the matter was dealt with by the Court below and the parties themselves is further corroborated by the grounds of appeal, which are mainly confined to the question whether the appellant here was in law liable at all. The fifth ground of appeal is the only ground upon which the matters which have been dealt with in the arguments before us could be discussed. It is noteworthy that no specific mention is made of the debt due to Hakim Saiyed Husain, nor of the item of Rs. 1,155 for funeral and other expenses. In our opinion the Court below was entitled to go into the accounts between the parties. It did so, and we see no reason to differ from its finding.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is connected with First Appeal No. 104 of 1912* in which we have just now delivered judgment. The facts are stated in our judgment in the connected appeal, and the only difference between the cases is that a plea of limitation has been taken in the present case. It is contended on behalf of the defendant that the suit is barred by Article 62 of the 1st Schedule to the Limitation Act, in so far as the case relates to a claim against him for money realised by him. In our opinion under the circumstances of the present case, the plaintiff was only entitled to recover under the form of action known as a claim for "money had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff." The last item realized by the defendant was realised as far back as the year 1908. The present suit was not instituted until February 1912, that is to say, more than three years after the latest item was received. In our opinion the suit is barred under Article 62. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the suit as against the appellant with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Ex-proprietary rights, claim for—Sale of proprietary rights—Relinquishment of ex-proprietary rights, deed of, executed at same time as sale-deed—Possession retained by vendor, effect of

A deed of relinquishment of ex-proprietary rights executed on the same date as the deed of sale of proprietary rights, is void and inoperative; and the vendor retaining possession of the land can claim ex-proprietary rights in respect of it although the deed of relinquishment relates to that very land.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 12th August 1913, upholding the order of the Deputy Commissioner, Partabgarh, dated 21st April 1913, modifying that of the Assistant Collector, Partabgarh, dated 23rd January 1912.

FACTS.—On the 13th of August 1908, the plaintiffs sold their proprietary rights to the defendants, and after the sale-deed was executed, the plaintiffs executed another deed on the same date in favour of the defendants under which the former agreed to relinquish their ex-proprietary rights in Nos. 464 and 552. Subsequently the plaintiffs applied for reservation of their ex-proprietary rights in those numbers and in others which were their sir and khudkasht, and for fixation of proper rent on them. The plaintiffs had, moreover, not given up their possession on any of those numbers. The point for decision was whether the plaintiffs could claim ex-proprietary rights in respect of Nos. 464 and 552.

Babu Gopal Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M. (April 18th, 1914)—The appeal relates to Nos. 552 and 464. Appellant is found to have no ex-proprietary rights in these numbers, because on the day on which the sale-deed was executed he had also executed a document declaring that he would give up the land and not claim ex-proprietary rights. This was one of the ordinary expedients to defeat the provisions of the law as to ex-proprietary rights, and as such it was entirely void and inoperative. Appellant never gave up possession of the land and as he has retained possession he retains also the ex-proprietary rights. It is urged for respondent that the suit as to No. 552 was dismissed by the Court of first instance and that appellant had not appealed to the Deputy Commissioner about this number. The fact is that there was a clerical mistake in his cross-objection before the Deputy Commissioner in which '652' was written instead of '552', but there is no doubt that the intention was that '552' should be shown. This matter is unimportant.

I would allow this appeal with costs on respondent, declaring appellant to be ex-proprietary tenant of the two numbers in question. The lower Court must submit a report showing the rent due.

The survivor of the two widows of a sonless Bhakral Rajput of Mauza Deir, Gujarkhan Tahsil, Rawalpindi District, is entitled, whatever her caste or rights as against a co-widow may be, to hold her deceased husband's property for life, and so long as she lives, no collateral can claim possession of that property.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Rawalpindi Division, dated the 15th July 1910, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, Rawalpindi, dated the 6th August 1909, decreeing the claim.

Messrs. Fasl-i-Hussain and Taj-ud-Din, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this rather peculiar case are set out in the judgment of the Divisional Judge, and it is not necessary to repeat them. The parties are Bhakral Rajputs of Mauza Deir, Gujarkhan Tahsil, Rawalpindi District; the plaintiffs are collaterals of the last male owner of the estate (Pir Bakhsh) and related to the deceased in the 7th degree, while defendants Nos. 1—3 are the sister's sons of deceased, and defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are his widow and daughter, Musammats Bano and Fatima. The remaining defendants are collaterals who have not joined in the suit but are, according to plaintiffs, entitled to 19/40ths of the property.

In the answer to the plaintiffs' claim defendants Nos. 1—3 relied upon a written Will, which they alleged had been executed in their favour by Pir Bakhsh prior to his death in May 1893, and defendants Nos. 4 and 5 (the widow and daughter) pleaded that in their presence and while they were alive, plaintiffs had no right to claim possession.

The Subordinate Judge, for reasons which are not set forth in his record ignored the pleas of the widow and daughter, and finding that the alleged written Will set up by defendants Nos. 1—3 was not proved, proceeded to give plaintiffs a decree for 21/40ths of the property in accordance with their prayer.

Defendants Nos. 1—5 thereupon preferred an appeal to the Divisional Judge and in grounds (2) and (3) of their grounds of appeal, took exception to the omission on the Subordinate Judge's part to consider the pleas in bar of plaintiffs' claim urged by the widow and daughter of Pir Bakhsh. They also urged in those grounds that the suit as framed would not lie; that the alleged Will had been established and was valid; that plaintiffs were estopped by their conduct from questioning it, and that in any event, plaintiffs could not be given the property unless and until they compensated the appellants for the money spent by the latter upon the funeral expenses of Pir Bakhsh.

The learned Divisional Judge accepted the appeal and dismissed plaintiffs' suit, and from his decree (dated 15th July 1910) plaintiffs have preferred a further appeal to this Court.

After hearing Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain for appellants, we have no hesitation in holding that plaintiffs' suit for immediate possession of the property was rightly dismissed, but not on the ground upon which the judgment of the Divisional Judge would seem to be based. In our opinion the plea urged by Musammat Bano was a complete and effective answer to plaintiffs' claim. She is, admittedly, the widow of Pir Bakhsh and as such presumably entitled to hold her deceased husband's property for her life, and so long as she lives, no collateral can claim possession of that property. It is true that she is a woman of comparatively low caste, and it was presumably on this ground that she did not succeed to half the property jointly with her co-widow, Musammat Rani, who being of the same caste as Pir Bakhsh, obtained possession of the greater part of the property, Musammat Bano (and subsequently Musammat Fatima, Pir Bakhsh's daughter by Musammat Bano) getting a small share of the property by way of maintenance. But on Musammat Rani's death, Musammat Bano as the sole surviving widow of Pir Bakhsh would, in the ordinary course and apart from any special custom applicable to the parties, succeed to the whole estate for life. Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain was unable to refer us to any peculiar customary rule prevailing in the parties' tribe which would debar Musammat Bano from claiming the usual widow's life-estate as against her late husband's collaterals. The Divisional Judge has very summarily disposed of this part of the case. He remarks that if the widow of superior caste excluded Musammat Bano, the collaterals of Pir Bakhsh can equally exclude, and that in any event Musammat Bano's claim did not appear to have been urged "with persistence" in the first Court. We are unable to agree with the learned Judge. It may well be (though we do not so decide) that when a Bhakral Rajput dies, leaving two widows, one a sahu and the other of inferior caste, the widow of superior caste has a preferential right to possession of the estate for life, the other widow being entitled, as against her, merely to claim maintenance. But even if such is the rule, it by no means follows that, as against collaterals, the latter has no stronger position. If, for example, Musammat Rani had died in Pir Bakhsh's life-time and Musammat Bano had alone survived him, plaintiffs would, as we understand the customary law of this Province, have had to prove that she was not entitled to the estate for life which, in the ordinary course and as a general rule, devolves upon a widow of a sonless proprietor (see paragraph 11 of the Digest of Customary Law). Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain admitted that there was nothing on the record or in Robertson's Customary Law of the Rawalpindi District to support such a proposition, and we must assume, therefore, that the general rule obtains among the parties' tribe. The Divisional Judge's remark that her claim was not urged "with persistence" in the first Court appears to be a mere surmise based probably on the fact that her plea was not put in issue. But Musammat Bano, who appears to have been the principal appellant in his Court, expressly and emphatically in her grounds of appeal took exception to the action of the Subordinate Judge in ignoring her claim and her plea in bar of plaintiffs' suit, and it is hardly fair to her to say that she did not press her plea, when, in point of fact, she took the earliest opportunity in the Appellate Court of drawing attention to the fact that her plea had been ignored by the Court of first instance and had not been put in issue as it should have been.

In our opinion the Divisional Judge should have dismissed the suit on this preliminary objection and have held that so long as Musammat Bano lives, the collaterals of Pir Bakhsh have no right to demand immediate possession of his estate.

As a matter of fact the learned Judge has dismissed their suit, but for reasons which we are not able to understand. He rules out Musammat Bano's and Musammat Fatima's pleas in bar, and apparently holds that the pleas of defendants Nos. 1—3 (the sons of Pir Bakhsh's sisters) must prevail. But it is not easy to follow his reasoning. Defendants Nos. 1—3 expressly relied upon a written Will in their favour, which, however, they alleged they were unable to produce as it had been made over to one Lachhman Singh, an ex-patwari, who had colluded with plaintiffs and refused to produce the document. The learned Judge does not decide that such a Will was ever executed, but finds that "the balance of probability seems to be in favour of the fact of a Will, verbal if not written." In other words, he holds that there must have been some such Will, but that there is no definite proof that it was either written or oral; it must have been one or the other. He also finds "great difficulty" in rejecting the evidence of eight witnesses who depose to the existence of the alleged written Will and is reluctant to accuse them of flagrant perjury, and yet in conclusion he finds it impossible to hold definitely that there was a written Will, a conclusion which appears to us to ignore the difficulty he felt in the earlier portion of his judgment in rejecting the evidence of the eight witnesses. Having, however, arrived at the very inconclusive result that there must have been an oral, if not a written, Will, the learned Judge concludes with the remark, "On the whole I would dismiss the suit. The appeal is, therefore, accepted and the suit dismissed with costs throughout." Such vacillating and colourless conclusions are valueless and afford no assistance to this Court when it has to deal with the case on further appeal. We need not, however, discuss them further, as the sole ground upon which we dismiss this appeal is that plaintiffs' suit for possession is premature and cannot be entertained so long as Musammat Bano lives. Upon all other questions raised in the case we must decline to express any opinion, as any such expression would amount at most to obiter dictum. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Court deciding previous suit not competent to try subsequent suit, effect of.

The decision in a previous suit by a Court not competent to try the subsequent suit does not operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit.

Misir Ragho Bardial v. Sheo Baksh Singh, 9 C. 439; 12 C. L. R. 520, 9 I. A. 197; 7 Ind. Jur. 107; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 395; Rafique and Jackson's P. C. No. 70, referred to.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated 3rd April 1914, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, Unao, dated 29th December 1913.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Hari Kishen Dhaon, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. C. Bhattacharjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Jit Singh, Sital Singh and Sheopal Singh brought a suit in the Court of the Assistant Collector, under the provisions of section 108, clause 15, of Act XXII of 1886 against Ram Bakhsh Singh and Sheo Adhar, minor, on the allegation that each of the plaintiffs and defendants owned a one-fifth share in plots Nos. 157/1, area 1 bigha and 10 biswas, and 158/4, area 4 bighas and 5 biswas, in the village of Asehru, that Ram Bakhsh Singh and Sheo Adhar's father and afterwards Sheo Adhar were in possession of these two plots which they cultivated themselves, and that they, the plaintiffs, were entitled each to a one-fifth share of the profits of those plots for three years. The plaintiffs had instituted a similar suit for their shares in the profits of these two plots for the previous four years in the Court of the Tahsildar. That case was carried on appeal first to the Court of the Deputy Commissioner and then to the Court of the Commissioner, and it was decided therein that the plaintiffs could not sue for the profits of these two plots because they formed a portion of a chak of 17 bighas and 15 biswas, and that a suit could not lie for the profits of a portion only.

The Assistant Collector and the District Judge have held that the present suit is barred under the provisions of section 11, Act V of 1908, in view of the existence of the former judgment and have dismissed it accordingly.

The present appeal is preferred. I do not consider that the Courts below are right in the view which they have taken. The suit would have been barred had the matter directly and substantially in issue been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claimed, litigating under the same title, in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit. The matter now directly and substantially in issue was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit. The plaintiffs were the same. One of the defendants is the same, and the other defendant is litigating under the same title as his father who was the defendant in the previous suit. But the Court which passed the former decision was the Court of a Tahsildar, and as such, was not competent to try the present suit which is triable only by a Court of an Assistant Collector. Thus, although the matter was finally decided in the Court of the Tahsildar, the principle of res judicata does not apply to the present case. If any authority be required for this proposition it will be found, in so far as it is necessary to look for it outside the wording of the section, in Misir Bagho Bardial v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1).

As a result I allow this appeal. As the Courts below have disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point and the decree has been reversed in appeal, I remand the case under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 23, to the Court of the Assistant Collector with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register of suits and proceed to determine it. Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (Beng. Act VI of 1908), ss. 139 (6), 20 (3)—Suits for recovery of possession, when barred by s. 139 (6) -Occupancy right; acquisition of.

Section 139, clause (6), of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, bars only a suit which relates to agricultural land and is instituted by the headman of a village in his character as headman, but does not bar a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of title.

The mere fact that a raiyat, who has a right of occupancy in his agricultural lands, is at the same time the rent-collector of the village and is remunerated as such, does not deprive him of his right of occupancy.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Manbhum, dated 23rd May 1912, reversing that of the Munsif, Dhanbaid, dated 16th December 1911.

Babus Lalit Mohan Ghose and Karunamoy Ghose, for the Appellant.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Gopal Chandra Chuckerbutty, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The case for the plaintiffs is that the eleven parcels in dispute constitute their paternal permanent holding, and that they have been unlawfully evicted therefrom by the defendant. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit.

Upon appeal the District Judge has reversed that decision. He has found in favour of the plaintiffs that they have the right alleged by them in the plots in suit and that they were unlawfully dispossessed therefrom by the defendant on or about the 20th January 1911. This decree of the District Judge has been assailed substantially on three grounds.

It has been contended in the first place that the suit is barred under clause 6 of section 139 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act of 1908. That section is in these terms: "All suits by or against headmen of villages or groups of villages (whether known as mankis or pradhans, manjhis or otherwise) for a declaration of title in, or for possession of, their office or agricultural land, whether based or not on an allegation of the existence or non-existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant, shall be cognisable by the Deputy Commissioner and shall be instituted and tried or heard under the provisions of the Act and shall not be cognizable in any other Court except as otherwise provided in the Act." The contention of the appellant is that as the plaintiffs have been found to be headmen, the suit which admittedly relates to agricultural land is not maintainable in a Civil Court. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention, as clause 6 of section 139 is intended to apply only to a suit brought by a headman of a village as such. There can be no room for controversy that this is the only interpretation possible in so far as a suit for declaration of title in or for possession of the office of headman is concerned. We are of opinion that when a suit relates to agricultural lands and is instituted by the headman of a village in his character as headman, clause (6) operates as a bar, but it has no application to a case of the present description. The first contention consequently fails.

It has been argued in the second place that the plaintiffs have no right of occupancy in the land in dispute, and, in support of this proposition, reference has been made to clause (3) of section 20 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. That clause is in these terms: "A person interested in any estate, tenure, village or land, whether solely or jointly with others, as a temporary tenure-holder, ijaradar or farmer of rents or as a mortgagee in possession, shall not, during the period of his lease or mortgage, acquire by purchase or otherwise a right of occupancy in any land comprised in his lease or mortgage". This clause can have no possible application in the determination of the rights of the plaintiffs, which were acquired long before section 20 of Act VI of 1908 was framed. The predecessors of the plaintiffs, it has been found, reclaimed the lands in 1867. At that time Act X of 1859 was in force and its provisions continued to be applicable till Act VI of 1908 came into operation. Under section 6 of that Act, every raiyat who has cultivated or held land for a period of 12 years has a right of occupancy in the land so cultivated or held by him, whether it be held under pattah or not, so long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same. To this there is added an exception in favour of the private lands of proprietors, to which reference is not necessary for our present purpose. In the case before us, there is no room for controversy that the plaintiffs and their predecessors occupied the land for a period of 12 years before 1908, cultivated the same and paid rent therefor as raiyats. Consequently, they acquired, prima facie, the status of occupancy raiyats. But it has been argued that as they were ijaradars of the village from 1869 onwards, they could not have acquired a right of occupancy in the eleven parcels in suit. The application of the term ijaradar to the plaintiffs is, however, somewhat misleading in the circumstances of this case. The plaintiffs and their predecessors were headmen of the village, but they were not ijaradars in the sense in which the term is used in section 20, clause 3, of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The mere fact that a raiyat, who has a right of occupancy in his agricultural lands, is at the same time the rent-collector of the village and is remunerated as such, does not deprive him of his right of occupancy. We are of opinion that the District Judge has correctly held that the plaintiffs have acquired the status of an occupancy-raiyat.

It has been argued in the third place that the judgment of the District Judge is based on surmises, and the case should be remanded for re-consideration; in this connection reference has been made to the case of Durga Prasad Singh v. Ram Doyal Chaudhury (1). We do not express any opinion as to that decision which has plainly no application to the present case. The findings of the District Judge here are based on evidence and on the circumstances of the case, and we are unable to hold that they involve errors of law such as would justify our interference in second appeal.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu Bishesheor Nath, for the Appellants.

Babu Lachhman Prasad Varma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question involved in this appeal is one of limitation. The appellants were the plaintiffs in the Court of first instance and their suit was to recover money alleged to be due in respect of a deed of further charge, which was executed on the 17th October 1891 by the father of the defendants. There had been two previous usufructuary mortgages of the same property executed by Gauna, and it was stated in this deed of further charge that the mortgagor should not be at liberty to redeem the prior deeds without first redeeming the deed now in suit. It was further stipulated that if in the meantime the mortgagee desired to recover his money, he should be at liberty to realise it whenever he wished. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought on the 24th of February 1912, that is, more than twenty years after the execution of the deed in suit. The question, therefore, is whether under Article 132 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act the suit was within time. The learned Judge of the Court below came to the conclusion that the suit was either time-barred or premature, and he dismissed it accordingly. As regards [redacted] suit being premature, I do not find that there was any reason for a conclusion of this kind. It may be that the mortgagee is entitled to recover the money due on this bond at the time when redemption is sought of the two previous usufructuary mortgages. In such a case no question of limitation would arise, because the person entitled to the money under this bond would be the defendant in a suit for redemption. The question really is whether or not the plaintiff, having put the bond in suit in order to recover his money, has done so within the time prescribed by law. Article 132 of the Limitation Act lays down that such a suit must be brought within twelve years from the date when the money sued for becomes due, and the whole of the argument here is as to the particular point of time when the money did become due. The learned Judge referred to certain cases in which the question of limitation in suits brought on instalment bonds had been discussed. One of these cases was Sheo Narain

v. Ram Din (1), in which it was said that it was impossible to hold that money was not due merely because the creditor was not bound to enforce payment.

There is a difference, however, between cases of instalment bonds and a case like the present in which admittedly no time was fixed for payment of money. The provisions of the mortgage-deed in suit as regards payment are as follows:—"It is further agreed that if the mortgagee should in the meantime (that is before the date of redemption) desire to have his money, he shall be to all times at liberty to recover it along with interest. I, the mortgagor, shall have no objection." It is at the option of the mortgagee either to realise the money due on this bond at the time of redemption or at any time between the date of this bond and the date of redemption. The question, therefore, is at what time, in accordance with the language of this instrument, can it be said that the money became due. My opinion is that the money became due from the date of the execution of the bond. Various cases have been cited in the course of argument. In the first place there was a reference to Perumal Ayyan v. Alagirisami Bhagavathar (2), in which the money was made payable on demand. It was held that where money was expressed to be payable on demand, no demand would be necessary to make the money due and time would run from the date of the bond. Their Lordships held that the words "on demand" were technical words and signified "immediately" or "forthwith." They referred to other cases in which the stipulation was that the borrower would repay the money "if so required." They were of opinion that cases like those stood on a different footing, inasmuch as a condition was to be understood, namely, that the creditor should first call for the money. In another Madras case, Perianna Goundan v. Muthuvira Goundan (3), it was laid down as being a matter beyond doubt that under the general law money lent payable on demand is due from the date of the loan and that there is a cause of action on the date of the loan. In that judgment their Lordships referred to Article 59 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act, which lays down the limitation for money lent under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand. The limitation in such cases is three years from the date when the loan is made. Another Madras case was so referred, namely Nettakaruppa Goundan v. Kumarasami Goundan (4). In that case the covenant on the part of the debtor was that he would re-pay the money whenever the creditor should make demand. There it was held that there was a condition which made it necessary that the creditor should first ask for his money. In the present instance there are no such words as "if so required", or "when you make the demand". All that appears is what has been above stated, namely, that the mortgagee was to have the option of recovering his money at any time he chose. There appears to be no doubt that under the English Law where the time for the performance of a contract is not determined by the contract itself and where performance is due as soon as the creditor or obligee may desire it, the latter has an immediate remedy to sue. The doctrine is that in a contract like this there is an immediate duty imposed upon a promisor and that no demand on the part of the promisee is necessary in order to render performance due. The promisee does not seek to impose a conditional obligation. He merely gives notice to the promisor that he must be ready to perform the promise at any time. This doctrine seems to me to have been followed by the Indian Legislature, as is clear from a consideration of the language of Article 59 of the Limitation Act. It seems to me, therefore, that in the present instance for the purposes of determining the starting point of limitation, it must be held that the money became due immediately upon the execution of the bond. This being so, the suit was clearly beyond time. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Succession—Sister—Kureshi Sheikhs of Gohana in Rohtak District—Collateral of fourth degree not excluding sister—Presumption of following personal law in case of residents in town—Punjab Laws Act (IV of 1872), s. 5.

Where the parties belonging to a non-agricultural tribe reside in a town and do not till land with their own hands and mostly live on Government service, the presumption is that they follow their personal law in matters of inheritance, and the onus of proving any particular custom against it lies on the person asserting such custom.

The fact that among them there are instances of exclusion of daughters by sons, of sisters by brothers and of succession of widows in the absence of sons, does not raise the presumption that in all matters their personal law has been superseded

No custom among Kureshi Sheikhs of the town of Gohana in the District of Rohtak by which a collateral of the fourth degree excludes a sister from succeeding to her brother's estate was proved in this case.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hissar, dated the 19th April 1912, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, Rohtak, dated the 10th February 1912, decreeing the claim in part.

Mr. Fazl Ilahi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties in this case are Kureshi Sheikhs, of the town of Gohana, in the Rohtak District; and the sole question for determination in the appeal is whether a custom, by which a collateral of the fourth degree excludes a sister from succeeding to her brother's estate, has been established. After hearing Counsel for the appellant we concur with the lower Appellate Court in holding that the plaintiff-appellant has failed to prove the custom set up by him.

The parties, as stated above, belong to the tribe of Kureshi Sheikhs which is not one of the agricultural tribes of the district, and they are residents of a town. It is also clear that they do not till land with thier own hands and mostly live on Government service. In these circumstances, there is no presumption that the general agricultural custom applies to them and the onus is on the plaintiff who puts forward the custom to prove it to the satisfaction of the Court. It is true that there are instances in this family of the exclusion of daughters by sons, of sisters by brothers and of the succession of widows in the absence of sons. It was also held by a Division Bench of this Court in Nasib-un-Nisa v. Umed Ali (1) that among Kureshi Sheikhs of Gohana, collaterals related in the second degree excluded daughters from succession. These instances only go to prove that in some matters the personal law of the parties has been modified by custom; but there is no warrant for the presumption that, in all matters, custom has superseded the Muhammadan Law. The Full Bench judgment of this Court [Daya Ram v. Sohel Singh (2)] contains a full exposition of the law on the subject and lays down the rule for the guidance of the Courts in such cases. It is observed in that judgment that "it lies upon the person asserting that he is ruled in regard to a particular matter by custom, to prove that he is so governed, and not by personal law, and further to prove what the particular custom is. ..If he fails to do so, clause (b) of section 5 of the Laws Act applies, and the rule of decision must be the personal law of the parties, subject to the other provisions of the clause. It is not sufficient to show that in regard to certain other matters the parties are governed by custom." The onus of issue (1) which relates to custom was laid by the Court of first instance upon the plaintiff and he had every opportunity to produce evidence in support of it. There is no entry in the Riwaj-i-am in proof of the alleged custom and Counsel for the appellant admits that there is not a single instance, judicial or otherwise, in which a collateral of the fourth degree was preferred to a sister. We must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff has failed to prove the custom on which he relied and that his suit was rightly dismissed by the Divisional Judge. We decline to remand the case for further inquiry, because it is clear that in the first place the plaintiff having got opportunity to produce all his evidence is not entitled to remand, and in the second place, no useful purpose would be served by ordering a fishing inquiry into a Ordinarily a decree for the division of an entire village means that the land of the village together with all the buildings appurtenant thereto is to be divided.

Revenue Courts, however, while making a partition, have no jurisdiction to make the actual division of a house or building or the materials thereof.

Ashiq Husain v. Muhammad Jan, 22 A. 329, A. W. N. (1900) 116, followed.

Section 111 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act is confined to objections raising a question of title only and does not contemplate those relating to the jurisdiction of Revenue Courts.

If, as a matter of law, a Court has no jurisdiction to do something, such a jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon it by a failure on the part of the parties interested to raise an objection in bar of the jurisdiction.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated 2nd April 1913, upholding that of the Munsif, Hardoi, dated 27th May 1912.

Babu Jiban Krishna Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Babu Ishwari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit for declaration brought by the plaintiffs-appellants with respect to a certain house situated in the village of Masit in the Hardoi District. It is admitted that some years ago there was a partition suit between the parties brought in the Civil Court in which one of the items was this village of Masit. A decree was passed by which it was divided between the parties in equal shares. Formal possession was granted to them under the Civil Court decree, so as to enable them to apply to the Revenue Authorities for partition of the revenue-paying lands. The case for the plaintiffs is that after the Civil Court decree an application was made to the Revenue Court for partition of the various items of property including this village of Masit. It is alleged that the Revenue Court in carrying out partition divided a certain house belonging to the parties situated in this village, the result being that the defendants were put in actual physical possession of one-half of the house. The plaintiffs' claim was that the partition of the house which had been effected by the Revenue Authorities, was invalid and not binding upon them. A further point which was raised on behalf of the plaintiffs was that, as a matter of fact, the house in suit had not been included in the property the division of which was sought in the Civil Court some years ago in the manner above described. In the first Court the plaint was allowed to be amended, the Munsif being of opinion that a mere suit for declaration was not maintainable, inasmuch as it was admitted that by virtue of the proceedings taken by the Revenue Courts the plaintiffs have actually been dispossessed from one-half of the house in suit. It was held that it was necessary for the plaintiffs also to add a prayer for possession. Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit. They were both of opinion that the house in question did constitute a portion of the property, division of which was sought by the parties in the Civil Court. They were both also of opinion that it was competent to the Revenue Court to make a partition of this house. In second appeal here both these points are raised again on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants. I agree with both the Courts below in thinking that the house, which is now in dispute, did form part of the property, partition of which was sought in the Civil Court. For the appellants an attempt was made to show that this could not have been so, inasmuch as in the schedules of the property attached to the plaint in the suit which was brought in the Civil Court certain houses were mentioned specifically as being liable to partition. It was argued, therefore, that as no house in the village of Masit was included in the schedule relating to this village, it must be taken that there was no prayer for partition of any house in Masit. But it seems to me that there was special reason, as pointed out by the lower Appellate Court, for making a separate schedule of certain houses in the civil proceedings. As the learned Judge has said in his judgment, most of the houses mentioned in the schedule attached to the plaint in the civil suit are houses situated in the cities of Lucknow or Hardoi. But I agree that ordinarily a decree for the division of an entire village would mean that the land of the village together with all the buildings appurtenant thereto was to be divided. I find, therefore, against the appellants on this first point. On the second point, however, I must find in the appellants' favour. In my opinion both the Courts below were wrong in finding that a Revenue Court has any authority to make a partition of houses or buildings. The learned Judge says that it is the practice of the Revenue Courts to make such partitions, but in this I think he cannot be right. There is the clearest authority in the ruling reported in Ashiq Husain v. Muhammad Jan (1) that Revenue Courts have no jurisdiction to make a partition of buildings or the materials thereof. What the Revenue Courts have authority to do is to make a partition of the lands situated in a mahal. That this is the correct interpretation of law seems to me to be apparent from the provisions of Chapter VII of the Land Revenue Act (U. P. Act III of 1901). According to section 106 of that Act, partition means the division of a mahal or of a part of a mahal into two or more portions, each consisting of one or more shares. The only section in this Chapter which relates to any arrangements to be made by a Revenue Court in respect of houses or other buildings belonging to co-sharers is section 118, which lays down that if, in making a partition, it is necessary to include in the portion allotted to one co-sharer the land occupied by a dwelling house or other building in the possession of another co-sharer, the latter shall be allowed to retain it with the building thereon, on condition of his paying for it a reasonable ground rent to the co-sharer in whose portion it may be included. This section, however, does not justify the division of dwelling houses or buildings. On the contrary, the section is clearly intended to prevent the division of houses or buildings at the time of making partition. The exclusive possession of a house or building is to be secured to one co-sharer and compensation for his occupation of the land is according, to the section, to be awarded to the other co-sharer. It is quite wrong to lay down that section 118 confers any authority on the Revenue Courts to make an actual division of a building, as has been contended in the present case. The learned Judge seems to have thought that this plea could not be raised by the plaintiffs who were parties to the partition proceedings in the Revenue Court. He referred in this connection to section 111, which gives parties a right to object when an application for partition has been made. But section 111 deals only with objections which raise a question of title. The section says nothing at all about objections taken to the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court. Whether objection to jurisdiction be taken or not, the fact remains that if, as a matter of law, a Revenue Court has no jurisdiction to make a division of buildings, such a jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon it by a failure on the part of one of the parties interested to raise an objection in bar of the jurisdiction. I must hold, therefore, that the partition of the house in suit was made without jurisdiction and is not binding upon the plaintiffs. The result is that the plaintiffs' claim for the declaration is decreed, and with regard to the claim for possession it is ordered that the plaintiffs be restored to joint possession of the property along with the defendants, so as to place them in the position in which they stood before the Revenue Court made the division of the property in suit. The plaintiffs will get their costs from the defendants in all the three Courts.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 155, 173—Case not disposed of by order of Magistrate—Prosecution by Police under s. 211, illegal.

The applicant gave to the Police information of a non-cognizable offence. The Police obtained the authority of a Magistrate as required by section 155 of the Criminal Procedure Code to investigate the case. The Magistrate directed that the Police should report to him. No report was ever made. Meantime, however, the Police instituted proceedings against the applicant under section 211 of the Penal Code and obtained his conviction:

Held, that the conviction was bad and must be set aside. Even if the Magistrate had not directed a report to be made, section 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that it should be made. The case was one that could not be disposed of without the order of the Magistrate in some form or another.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—In this case the applicants gave information to the Police about certain alleged circumstances in relation to a woman who had just died, and this amounted to information of the commission of a non-cognizable offence. It was made to the Police, who obtained the authority of a Magistrate as required by section 155 of the Criminal Procedure Code to investigate the case. In empowering them to do this the Magistrate directed that they (the Police) should report to him. No report was ever made. Even if the Magistrate had not directed a report to be made, section 173 of the Code requires that it should be made. The case is one that could not be disposed of without the order of the Magistrate in some form or another. But no report was made to the Magistrate and no order was made by him and the case, as a matter of fact, has never been disposed of. Meantime, however, the Police instituted proceedings against the persons who had given the information and prosecuted them under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code. They obtained a conviction before the Magistrate. On application in revision to the Sessions Judge he referred the matter to us. The ground he took was that the trial which took place without the Magistrate's sanction was illegal. In substance I dare say that that is perfectly true, although technically it may be that that reason is doubtful because of the circumstance that the proceedings did not go before the Magistrate and apparently so far as the Police are concerned were not intended to go before him. I mean the proceedings of the investigation into the non-cognizable case. But however that may be, there is another objection which seems to me more fundamental and more cogent than the want of a sanction. It is that, as I have explained, the case had not come to an end, and could not come to an end without an order of the Magistrate. This being so, it is contrary to the method and the spirit, contrary indeed to the whole system of our criminal procedure, that the Police should be allowed to prosecute in the way they have done without ever having the case disposed of by a Magistrate. The point is one not of technicality, but of very great importance. One need say little to show how absolutely contrary to our system things would be if the Police were allowed, independently of the Magistrates, to take proceedings, as they have done here, in cases which had never been disposed of by a Magistrate.

For that important and fundamental defect I consider that the whole of these proceedings are bad and that the conviction must be set aside.

SHAH, J.—I concur.

476—Proceedings in execution, whether "judicial proceedings"—Sanction to prosecute—Guiding principle.

The proceedings in execution are judicial proceedings within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code till they are finally disposed of by the Court

No Court should direct or sanction prosecution unless there is a reasonable probability of conviction. The opinion of the Court should be judicial opinion based on evidence and formed after a thorough inquiry into the matter.

Criminal revision against an order sanctioning prosecution, passed by the Subordinate Judge, Wardha, dated the 1st March 1912.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B. and Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Applicants.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal (Standing Counsel), for the Crown.

Mr. V. T. Deshmukh, for the Decree-holder.

JUDGMENT.—On a warrant issued by the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Wardha, in execution proceedings in Civil Suit No. 163 of 1910 of that Court, the produce of a field said to belong to the judgment-debtors was attached. The produce consisted of 30 or 32 khandi of partially threshed juari, and was left in charge of two watchmen, each of whom was given a parwana or written order of appointment. This was on the 23rd of December 1911. On the opening of the Courts after the Christmas vacation the two watchmen presented a written report to the Court to the following effect: "About 4 P. M. on the 27th December eighteen men of Shioshankarpuri Gosain of Nagpur came to the threshing floor. Two of them took our written orders of appointment from us on the pretext of wanting to read them, and then refused to return them. They drove us out of the field, and when we went to the village we were driven out of that also. At 10 P. M. on the following day, Thursday the 28th, they came again to the field with nine or ten carts and carried off the juari." This is followed by a list of nineteen names, headed "Names of the men of Shioshankarpuri," and the first name in the list is Shioshankarpuri.

The Subordinate Judge called on Shioshankarpuri alone to show cause why he should not be prosecuted, and after considering the written statement filed and the oral arguments advanced on his behalf passed an order of which the gist is as follows: "The pleas raised by Shioshankarpuri are that he resides at Nagpur, and could not possibly have been present at the scene of the alleged offence and he is not aware of the occurrence, and that his servants did remove a certain amount of juari from the field, but they did not know that it was under attachment or that the two men there were watchmen appointed by the Court. This is an admisson that his servants removed the crop while it was under attachment, and it is impossible that they should not have known of it. That they did know of it is further proved by the large number of them that went to the field. They could not have gone there except under orders from him, and he could not have given those orders without knowing of the attachment. The eighteen servants, therefore, appear to have committed offences punishable under sections 186, 188 and 204 of the Indian Penal Code, and Shioshankarpuri appears to have abetted the same. Their prosecution is, therefore, ordered for those offences or any others which the facts proved against them may constitute."

The main ground on which the legality of this order is challenged by Shioshankarpuri and all except two of the other persons affected by it, is the contention that execution proceedings are not judicial proceedings of the kind mentioned in section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 4 (m) of that Code does not attempt to give us an exhaustive definition of a "judicial proceeding," but is content with declaring that, in addition to what are plainly and obviously judicial proceedings, that term "includes any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath." In Queen Empress v. Tulja (1) West and Birdwood, JJ., offered a definition of a judicial proceeding as one of which the object is to determine a jural relation between two parties. That a proceeding in execution is not such a judicial proceeding as is meant by sections 4 (m) and 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is based solely on the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Har Charan Mookerjee v. Emperor (2). This ruling was followed in Kanto Ram Das v. Gobardhan Das (3), but without any discussion or examination, and the learned Judges found that the result to which it led them was "to be regretted," as it was a very apparent failure of justice.

In the former case in execution proceedings a warrant for the delivery of possession was entrusted for execution to the Nazir, who went to the spot but was obstructed by the opposite party to the suit, and on his reporting the matter, the Munsif held an inquiry under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code and sent the accused to the Magistrate for trial under section 186 of the Penal Code. The matter was heard by Harington and Pargiter, JJ. Mr. Justice Harington said: "The definition of judicial proceeding includes any proceeding in which evidence is, or may be, legally taken on oath. Now in this case, as between the parties to the suit, evidence could not have been legally taken, because their rights had been finally determined by the Court. It is true that some third person might have claimed the land as against the execution-creditor, and that his claim might have had to be determined in a judicial proceeding in which evidence might legally be taken. But this would be a fresh judicial proceeding between fresh parties raising fresh issues, and the fact that this possibility exists does not, in my opinion, affect the question whether the judicial proceeding in which the rights of the decree-holder were decided had or had not determined before possession was delivered. In my opinion section 476 does not apply. 'Judicial' proceeding means a proceeding in which judicial functions are being exercised: when the final decision is given and the order for the execution of that decision has been made, the judicial proceeding is at an end because there is no question remaining for judicial determination. The officer of the Court who executes the order to give effect to the Court's decision does not exercise a judicial but a ministerial function. In my opinion the obstruction was committed in the course of a ministerial and not a judicial proceeding, and, therefore, the offence does not fall within section 476."

The opinion of the learned Judge clearly was that one judicial proceeding ended with the making of the order for the issue of a warrant. Another might commence with the filing of an objection by a third party, but the intermediate proceedings were ministerial and not judicial. I feel bound to say, with all deference, that I cannot follow the learned Judge in what seems to me to be an assumption that the evidence mentioned in section 4 (m) of the Criminal Procedure Code must be throughout between the same parties and on the same issues. Nor can I see that the fact that a judicial proceeding has reached a stage in which no more evidence is to be taken makes the rest of that proceeding non-judicial. If this were so, would not the delivery of judgment and the making of a decree in accordance therewith be non-judicial proceedings?

Mr. Justice Pargiter delivered a dissentient judgment, in which he said: "The execution case was without dispute a 'judicial proceeding,' but it is contended by the applicants that the Court had finished that case in ordering possession to be given, so that the judicial proceeding had terminated, and that the Nazir's function of carrying out that order was a separate matter and was not part of the judicial proceeding. It has not been shown to us how the execution case had terminated. It was the Court's duty in executing the decree not only to pass an order to give possession but also to see that possession was given. Its duty did not end with the mere passing of the order, nor did the execution case terminate thereat. The Nazir was the hand of the Court for the purpose of giving possession, and until possession was given the Court could not treat the case of executing the decree as completed. The resistance, therefore, to the delivery of possession, which resistance was reported by the Nazir, was an offence brought to the notice of the Court 'in the course of a judicial proceeding' within the meaning of section 476, Criminal Procedure Code."

Mr. Justice Henderson, to whom the case was referred under section 429 of the Criminal Procedure Code, apparently adopted the reasoning of Mr. Justice Harington, that the possibility of evidence being taken on an objection being raised by a third party did not bring the proceedings within the terms of section 4 (m) of the Criminal Procedure Code, but in his conclusion from that reasoning he went a great deal further and held that the judicial proceedings ended with the decree in the suit, after which there was no matter left for judicial decision between the parties, and, therefore, no part of execution proceedings can be called a judicial proceeding. This seems to me open to the same criticisms, perhaps in a greater degree, as those I have ventured to suggest on the judgment of Mr. Justice Harington. But in Bhola Nath Dey v. Emperor (4), in which the facts were exactly similar to those of the case now before us, Rampini and Mookerjee, JJ., held that the Munsif had rightly acted under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The case of Har Charan Mookerjee v. Emperor (2) was cited before them, and they seem to have doubted its soundness, though without expressly dissenting from it, and they distinguished it on the ground that there "it was held that the Munsif had passed an order for possession, which finally determined the case." If the ruling in Har Charan Mookerjee v. Emperor (2) were to be accepted, the present case could also be distinguished in the same way, as the Court still had matters in connection with the sale and money matters to determine, upon which evidence could legally be taken, and, therefore, the execution case was not finally disposed of. But I am very distinctly of the opinion of Pargiter, J., that proceedings in execution are judicial proceedings within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code till they are finally disposed of by the Court. Har Charan Mookerjee v. Emperor (2) and Kanto Ram Das v. Gobardhan Das (3) have been overruled, and Bhola Nath Dey v. Emperor (4) has been affirmed by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Shaik Bahadur v. Bradatullah Mallick (5): the learned Judges said: "We entertain no doubt that an execution proceeding is a 'judicial proceeding'; the definition in section 4, clause (m), of the Code of 1898 is clearly not exhaustive."

The principles which should guide the Court in dealing with an application for revision of this kind are well and clearly laid down in In the matter of the petition of Afamdar Husain (6). Strachey, C. J., said: "It has been held by this Court that the High Court has power in revision to set aside an order passed by a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court under section 476 of the Code; and I assume that this view is correct. Still, one must have regard to the nature of the revisional jurisdiction, and must not, in a case arising under section 476, any more than in any other case, allow what would virtually be an appeal from the order of the Court below. It is necessary, as in all other cases, to see whether there has been any error of law, any irregularity, any abuse of, or failure to exercise judicial discretion, such as would justify interference in revision. Now let us see whether there is any fault of that kind to be found in the Collector's proceeding. The condition of his acting under section 476 is his forming the opinion that there was ground for inquiring into any offence referred to in section 195. The test is his opinion, and not the opinion of any superior Court; and if he has formed a real opinion to the effect stated, he has power to act under the section, and he commits no error or irregularity in doing so, even though another Court may think the opinion erroneous. I say, if he forms a real opinion, because no doubt if a case arose in which the Court acted on merely fanciful grounds, on grounds so empty, so obviously wrong that it could not be said to have formed a serious judicial opinion at all, then this Court would probably hold in revision that there had been no such action as section 476 contemplates. The opinion spoken of by section 476 no doubt is a judicial opinion founded on evidence. If such an opinion has been formed, this Court ought not in revision to interfere merely on the ground that it disagrees with it: the case must go on."

This is also a very clear statement of the kind of basis there must be for the opinion, "that there is ground for inquiring into any offence," at which a Court must arrive before taking action under section 476. It may be said that there is always ground for enquiring into any offence, even if there is only a vague suspicion that it has been committed. But this is wrong. To give only two reasons out of many, the Courts have no time to waste over cases in which there is nothing more than a bare possibility of a conviction and one unsuccessful prosecution in a case where there is a reasonable suspicion that the accused is really guilty does more harm than abstaining from prosecution in five such cases. This was explained by the Calcutta High Court in Jadu Nandan Singh v. Emperor (7). The learned Judges said: "The principle which should guide Courts in taking action under section 195 or 476 is now well settled. No sanction should be granted unless there is a reasonable probability of conviction. It would be an abuse of the powers vested in a Court of Justice, if sanction were given or upheld on the principle that, though the conviction of the party complained against is a mere possibility, it is desirable that the matter should be threshed out, so that it may be decided whether or not an offence has been committed. No doubt the authority which is called upon to grant a sanction under section 195, or to take action under section 476, need not, and should not, decide the question of guilt or innocence of the party against whom procedings are to be instituted; but great care and caution are required before the criminal law is set in motion, and there must be a reasonable foundation for the charge in respect of which prosecution is sanctioned or directed."

We have, therefore, to see whether the Subordinate Judge in this case ever formed an opinion that there was any reasonable prospect of a conviction, and if so, whether there is any proper basis for that opinion. Both questions must, I think, be answered in the negative. The only opinion he states is that the nineteen persons accused by the watchmen have committed the offences for which he directs that they shall be tried. There is no examination or even statement of the strength of the evidence to be produced against them. There naturally could not be anything of that sort, as no inquiry whatever was held beyond the sending of a request to the Nazir to state whether the two watchmen were given orders of appointment in writing, to which he replied simply that those two men were appointed, omitting to state whether they were given written orders or not. Even, then, if the Subordinate Judge had formed any opinion such as is required by section 476, all the materials he had for it were: (a) the report by the two watchmen, obviously and naturally instigated and engineered by the decree-holder, and necessarily open to suspicion, if only on account of the very large number of people they affect to have recognised, (b) a report from the Nazir which says nothing and has been misread as establishing a point of some importance, and (c) the written statement of the one out of nineteen accused who admittedly was not present when the alleged offence was committed, which also has been misread and misconstrued and has had absolutely unjustifiable inferences drawn from it. In the words of the learned Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court quoted above, the Court, in forming whatever opinion it did form, "acted on merely fanciful grounds, on grounds so empty, so obviously wrong that it could not be said to have formed a serious judicial opinion at all."

There is yet another reason why no Court should take action under section 476 without inquiring very much more thoroughly into the matter than has been done here and being satisfied that there is what may be called a fairly good case against the accused. It is that persons complained against by a Court under section 476 are deprived of the protection given to them by section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code against frivolous and unnecessary prosecution by other complainants. I conceive that, as section 204 empowers a Magistrate to dismiss a complaint only after oral examination of the complainant, and the presiding officer of a Court who makes a complaint under section 476 is exempt from oral examination, a dismissal of such a complaint under section 203 would be illegal. Anyhow it would certainly be improper and no Magistate probably would think of doing such a thing, because it is presumed that the Court making the complaint has already taken all the proper precautions to ensure that the accused party is not being unnecessarily or wantonly or frivolously prosecuted. For all these reasons I set aside the order directing that Shioshankarpuri and eighteen others are to be prosecuted. This will not, of course, prevent proceedings being again taken against them in a legal and proper manner, if such a course is deemed advisable.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 88, 386, 439—Attachment under s 386—Revision incompetent—Claim, determination of—Criminal Courts, jurisdiction of.

No revision lies against an order of attachment made under section 386 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The principles applicable to attachments under section 88 of the Code apply equally to attachments under section 386

The Code does not contain any provision for the trial of claims which may be preferred to property distrained under section 386, and when the Magistrate has acted under it, no further proceedings in the Criminal Courts are admissible.

Queen-Empress v. Gasper, 22 C. 935, Queen-Empress v Sita Nath Mitra, 20 C 478, Queen-Empress v. Kandappa Goundan, 20 M. 88; 2 Weir 42, Secretary of State v. Sukhdeo, A. W. N. (1898) 173, referred to.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Sialkot, dated the 9th January 1913, rejecting the petitioners' application for the release from attachment of certain moveables alleged to be the property of Bir Bhan, convict.

Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, for the Petitioners.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case, so far as they concern us in the present instance, are these. The Sessions Court of Sialkot convicted one Bir Bhan of a serious criminal offence and sentenced him to imprisonment and also to a fine of Rs. 5,000, of which sum Rs. 1,000 was to be paid to the Municipal Committee as compensation; and the conviction and sentence were alike duly confirmed on appeal here. The learned Sessions Judge issued a warrant of attachment of certain moveable property belonging to Bir Bhan, under section 386, Criminal Procedure Code, and certain articles were attached. The convict, it appears, is a member of a joint undivided Hindu family, and, this being so, Hira Lal and others, as the remaining members, applied to the Sessions Court for release of the said articles on the ground that, on the authorities, proceedings cannot lawfully be taken under section 386 aforesaid against the property of such a family in which the convict has merely an undivided share.

Apparently no one denies that the family is a joint undivided one under Hindu Law and that the articles attached are part of the property of that family. The Sessions Judge, after noticing Queen-Empress v. Sita Nath Mitra (1), and the particulars in Weir's Law of Offences, 11, pages 442-3, decided not to follow those authorities, ruled that a share in moveables is moveable property and refused to release the things attached; but he went on to suggest to the petitioners that they might, if so advised, effect a partition with the convict so as to separate off his share, and for this purpose he adjourned the case for three months.

Not satisfied with this solution the petitioners have filed a further revision petition here, again contending that the order of attachment under section 386, Criminal Procedure Code, was illegal and adding that the lower Court should have followed the aforesaid authorities; but we find it unnecessary to decide the point, inasmuch as we are disposed to agree with the learned Government Advocate who has raised the preliminary objection that no revision lies. We need only refer to Queen-Empress v. Gasper (2), Queen-Empress v. Kandappa Goundan (3) and Rules and Orders of the Chief Court, Volume 3, page 133 (old Edition). The principles applicable to attachments under section 88 of the Code apply equally to attachments under section 386; and the rulings just quoted, to which we may add Secretary of State v. Sukhdeo (4), though the matter is there looked at in a somewhat different way, are sufficient authority for holding that the Code does not contain any provision for the trial of claims which may be preferred to property distrained under section 386. The Chief Court rule quoted above by implication leads to the conclusion that, when the Magistrate has acted under it, no further proceedings in the Criminal Courts are admissible. In this case the learned Sessions Judge discussed the petition on the merits and came to a decision adverse to the petitioners. Whether his decision be right or wrong, and whether he was called upon to undertake a discussion on the merits at all, it is clear to us that in any case the petitioners cannot further pursue any remedy on the criminal side. No doubt in the cases relied upon by the petitioners remedy on the criminal side was tacitly treated as open; but this question of jurisdiction was not raised in those cases, and, so far as we are aware, wherever it has been raised, it has been decided in the manner in which we decide it now.

For these reasons we dismiss this petition, merely adding that the learned Sessions Judge need not have gone out of his way to advise the objectors as to the course they should take. He should now proceed to deal further with the attached property according to law.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction for giving false evidence—Court, duty of—Prosecution, desirability of, in public interests.

In giving sanction to prosecute for giving false evidence, the Courts should not merely see that there is a good prospect of conviction, but should also consider whether the circumstances are such as to render a prosecution desirable in the public interests.

Petition praying the High Court to set aside the order of the Sessions Judge, Guntur Division, in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 27 of 1912, confirming the sanction granted by the Taluk Second Class Magistrate of Tenali, in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 1 of 1911.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. O. F. Napier, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—We do not think that this is a case in which the interests of justice call for a prosecution for perjury.

The accused is a girl of 15 years, and the perjury alleged is in her having made contradictory statements about her mother having wordy quarrels with the man who was keeping the witness. The materiality of the statements is only remote, as suggesting a motive for the offence.

We often have to notice that Courts exercise little discretion in giving sanction to prosecute for giving false evidence.

They should not merely see that there is a good prospect of conviction, but should also consider whether the circumstances are such as to render a prosecution desirable in the public interests.

We do not think the prosecution in this case is desirable. We revoke the sanction.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 302, 369—Murdered child found in well indicated by the accused who disclaimed all knowledge—Fact of stripping the child of her ornaments established—Youth of accused.

In a case of murder the facts clearly established were that the accused was last seen with the child alleged to have been murdered, and that he stripped her of most of her ornaments and sold them and that her body was next found in a well, and the accused disclaimed all knowledge of the matter, though he himself indicated the well.

Held, that the accused was guilty of a foul murder, which in spite of his youth called for the extreme penalty.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated the 29th August 1914, convicting the appellant.

Khalifa Hakumat Rai, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Wadhawa Singh, a Jat youth of 19, has been convicted of the murder of Musammat Kaki, a little girl of 7, and sentenced to death.

We find it established that the child had gone with her mother and two other relatives to Sarhali, appellant's village, to attend a marriage. The party arrived on 12th July 1914 and on 13th July 1914 the girl was missing. A search was instituted but with no result. On 14th July Mahna lambardar was told by one Kaka he had seen appellant riding with the child on a mare along the canal bank, which is a short distance from the village, whereupon Bhan Singh, the girl's uncle, Harnam Singh, the appellant's brother, and others started off for Bhilowal, whither the marriage party had gone to get the bride.

Appellant was brought back on the early morning of the 16th and taken at once to the thana. Thence the appellant led the Police and villagers to the Sikhanwala well, ¼ths of a mile from the village beyond the canal bank; in that well the body of the child was found floating.

The child when last seen was wearing several ornaments; of these appellant had sold silver anklets, silver necklet, a silver hair ornament, silver bracelets and a gold phul and chaunk to Radhu of Patti, whom the Police traced on appellant's information; he had left on the body a nath, nakaura and tikka.

Before the committing Magistrate appellant admitted kidnapping the girl and taking her ornaments, but added that she broke away from him and fell into the well, where appellant left her to drown.

Before the Sessions Court he denied all knowledge of the girl.

In this Court his Counsel admits that he kidnapped the girl and stole some of her ornaments, those recovered, but he urges that the girl fell into the well when breaking away from appellant, and that this is a probable story as the well mouth is on a level with the ground and has no parapet.

We are quite unable to accept this view, which the appellant did not urge before the learned Sessions Judge. The appellant is a youth of 19 and his victim was a little girl of seven, whom he could have overpowered with ease.

Our view is that the appellant did not take the remaining three articles of jewellery from his victim, either because of their small size, or because he was overtaken with sudden fear.

The medical evidence is that the child was throttled, not drowned, and this fact too suggests that the appellant's story is quite untrue.

Much capital is made of the fact that the diver who recovered the body, alone mentioned in the first Court that the body was weighted with a clod of earth. Before the Sessions Judge witnesses Nos. 9, 12, 13 also mention the clod. The question was probably not put to them in the first Court, but in any case as the clod had been three days in the water when the body was recovered, it is more than probable that very little of it had resisted dissolution.

The facts clearly established are that appellant was last seen with the child and that he stripped her of most of her ornaments and sold them. Her body is next found in a well and appellant disclaims all knowledge of the matter, though he himself indicated the well.

The appellant is guilty of a foul murder, which in spite of his youth calls for the extreme penalty.

We dismiss the appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

Appeal dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 335—Nose-cutting—Act importing deliberate design—Grave and sudden provocation.

When the particular act, such as nose-cutting, of which the accused is found guilty, is one which imports deliberate design, the plea of grave and sudden provocation or the excuse it implies will not have by any means the same effect as in the case of a man who in sudden and provoked anger strikes a blow, however serious that blow may be.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Our attention has been called to a number of these nose-cutting cases, and it appears to us that certain Magistrates in the Ahmedabad District do not seem to be alive to the extremely brutal character of these offences. In this particular case the person who inflicted the grievous hurt has been charged and convicted under section 335 of the Indian Penal Code, on the ground that there was grave and sudden provocation. This may be so, but the particular act of which the accused is found guilty is one which imports deliberate design. Therefore, the plea of grave and sudden provocation or the excuse it implies does not seem to us to have by any means the same effect as in the case of a man who in sudden and provoked anger strikes a blow, however serious that blow may be, because in that case there is not deliberate design as there is in the one we are considering—deliberate design too of a peculiarly brutal and cruel character.

The sentence imposed in this case is one of four months' imprisonment. We enhance the sentence to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

Sentence enhanced.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 395—Dacoity committed in Lucknow District—Trial by jury and not by assessors—Government Notification No. 1692,-VI-545 A-9.

Under Government Notification No. 1692,-VI-545A-9, dated 10th December 1884, which is in force, no person can be tried on a charge under section 395, Indian Penal Code, by the Court of Session in Lucknow, when such person has been committed to that Court by a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction in Lucknow District with respect to an offence of dacoity alleged to have been committed in Lucknow District, except by a jury.

Appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated 12th December 1914.

Mr. A. Shaw, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the three appellants were committed to the Court of Sessions on a charge under section 402 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge altered the charge into one under section 395, upon which he convicted the appellants. The trial was conducted with the aid of assessors. Under Government Notification No. 1692, VI-545A-9, dated 10th December 1884, which is in force, no person can be tried on a charge under section 395 by the Court of Sessions in Lucknow, when such person has been committed to that Court by a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction in the Lucknow District with respect to an offence of dacoity alleged to have been committed in the Lucknow District, except by a Jury. The circumstance that the Magistrate did not convict on a charge under section 395, does not affect the question. Such a case must be tried by a Jury. Thus when the learned Sessions Judge framed a charge against the appellants under section 395, it was necessary for him to empanel a Jury and to proceed with the trial as a Jury trial. The convictions and sentences in these circumstances cannot stand and must be set aside. I direct that the appellants be re-tried by the same Court and a Jury on a charge under section 395 under the same commitment order.

Re-trial ordered.

According to Muhammadan Law the occurrence of puberty determines minority and the mother's right to custody, but for the purposes of section 363 of the Indian Penal Code, regard must be had only to the definition of minority in section 3, Act IX of 1875.

Where the girl alleged to have been kidnapped was unmarried, and her father was not living, there could be no question of any guardianship other than her mother's as lawful.

The question at what stage the offence of kidnapping was completed is one of fact, and cannot be raised in the High Court for the first time

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Sessions Judge of Ramnad, Madura, in Criminal Appeal No. 36 of 1912, confirming the conviction and sentence of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Ramnad Division, in Calendar Case No. 46 of 1912.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. C. F. Napier, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The first and the fourth accused were convicted of an offence punishable under section 363 and the second and the third accused of one punishable under sections 363 and 114, Indian Penal Code.

Objection is taken first to the finding that the fourth prosecution witness, the girl alleged to have been kidnapped, was aged less than sixteen. There was evidence to justify the finding, which was purely one of fact, and I cannot interfere with it in revision.

It is urged that the fourth prosecution witness was not a minor and her mother, from whose keeping she was taken, was not her lawful guardian, because she had admittedly attained puberty and her minority and her mother's guardianship ceased under Muhammadan Law when she did so. The fourth prosecution witness was unmarried, and her father was not living. There is, therefore, no question of any guardiadship other than her mother's as lawful, and it is necessary to deal only with the question whether the fourth prosecution witness was still a minor. No doubt according to Muhamamdan Law the occurrence of puberty determines minority and the mother's right to custody. (Macnaughten's Principles of Muhammadan Law, page 63). But for the present purpose, regard must be had only to the definition of minority in section 3, Act IX of 1875. For no argument has been based and nothing turns in this case on the saving clause, section 2, or its references to capacity to act in the matter of marriag and to religious usage. In the cases cited, for instance In the matter of Khatija Bibi (1), the conflict was between the claims of the mother and husband to the custody of the minor, and section 2 was material. Here no such considerations arising, the finding in favour of the fourth prosecution witness's minority for the purpose of this case is justified by the Statute Law; and her mother's guardianship and right to custody of her person against the accused follow. This objection, therefore, fails.

It is then said that the offence punishable under section 363 is not a continuing one, and that, therefore, the accused Nos. 2 and 3, who joined the accused Nos. 1 and 4 only after the kidnapping had been completed, are not liable for abetment of it. It has not been shown that the point was taken in either of the lower Courts. The question at what stage the offence was completed is one of fact and cannot be raised here for the first time.

Though the accused's intention is not shown to have been immoral, the sentences are not excessive. The petition fails and is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 114, 302—Abetment must be complete apart from presence of abettor—Public Prosecutor, duty of, in murder case—All available eye-witnesses, production of witnesses not called without sufficient reason, whether raises inference adverse to prosecution

A conviction for murder under section 3 2 of the Penal Code, read with section 114, cannot stand where the only abetment charged necessarily required the presence of the accused, for to come within section 114, the abetment must be complete apart from the presence of the abettor.

It is the duty of the Public Prosecutor in a murder case to place before the trial Court the testimony of all available eye-witnesses.

The purpose of a criminal trial is not to support at all costs a theory, but to investigate the offence and to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, and the duty of a Public Prosecutor is to represent not the Police, but the Crown, and his duty should be discharged by him fairly and fearlessly and with a full sense of the responsibility that attaches to his position.

Where witnesses are not called without sufficient reason being shown, the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution.

Mr. Bagram, Counsel, and Babus Probodh Chandra Chatterjee and Mritunjoy Chatterjee, for the Accused-Appellant.

Mr. Donogh, Counsel, and Babu Monindra Nath Banerjee, for the Crown in both appeals.

JUDGMENT.—Ram Ranjan Roy, a zemindar in the Bankura District, Umesh Chandra Mukerjee, one of his gumastas, and Madhub Mistri, his up-country peon, have been charged with offences which resulted in the death of Dhan Kristo Laik and his nephew Bunwari Laik, tenants of Ram Ranjan. The charges against Ram Ranjan were that he on or about the 18th of March 1914 at Dejuri committed murder of Dhan Kristo Laik by striking him with a lathi and thereby killing him, and also that he committed murder of Bunwari Laik by being present and abetting Madhub Mistri in striking and thereby killing him. Umesh Chandra Mookerjee was also charged with the murder of Bunwari by being present and abetting Madhub. The charge against Madhub Mistri was that he murdered Bunwari and that he caused simple hurt to Hari Laik.

Umesh has been acquitted. Ram Ranjan has been acquitted of the murder of Dhan Kristo, but convicted of the murder of Bunwari by being present and abetting Madhub Mistry. And Madhub Mistri has been convicted of both the offences with which he was charged.

The sentence in each case has been transportation for life. Ram Ranjan and Madhub have appealed, but no appeal has been preferred by the direction of the Local Government.

We, therefore, have to assume that Ram Ranjan was not guilty of the murder of Dhan Kristo or of any offence against him of a lesser degree.

I will here state the broad features of the case for the prosecution, largely borrowing for that purpose from the first information as contained in Exhibit I.

Ram Ranjan on the 6th of March came to his village of Dejuri and put up at the Durga Mela. He was anxious to secure his tenants' assent to an enhancement of their rents, and sent for some of them with a view to discussing the matter. The zemindar's demands were resisted, and ultimately on the 8th of March he summoned Bunwari through Madhub Mistri, to whom I will in future refer as the Nagdi.

Bunwari was taken to the Durga Mela and detained there. What followed is thus described in the first information:—As he (that is, Ram Ranjan) was having him (that is, Bunwari) assaulted by the aforesaid Nagdi for his not agreeing to pay rent at an enhanced rate, Dhan Kristo Laik went to Ram Ranjan Baboo and said 'yesterday you brought away a he-goat and have kept it tied, and to-day why are you having my nephew assaulted by the Nagdi?' On this Ram Ranjan Baboo and Umesh Mookerjee gave orders to the up-country Nagdi saying mar salako, whereupon Nagdi wounded Bunwari Laik by kicking him first and then striking him with a lathi on the head. Ram Ranjan Baboo has caused grievous hurt to my uncle, Dhan Kristo Laik, by striking him on the head with a lathi which was in his hand. The wounds on Bunwari Laik and Dhan Kristo Laik are serious. There is no hope of their lives."

Besides the appellants and Dhan Kristo and Bunwari, there were in the Durga Mela at this time Umesh Chandra Mookerjee, Gosto Chatterjee and Ramanath Roy, all gomastas of the zemindar.

Even on the case for the prosecution the conviction of Ram Ranjan for murder under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, read with section 114, cannot stand, for the simple reason that the only abetment charged necessarily required the presence of Ram Ranjan, while to come within section 114 the abetment must be complete apart from the presence of the abettor. This was recognised by Mr. Donogh who has appeared on behalf of the Crown, and he conceded that all he could ask for was a conviction of abetment of murder under section 109.

We must, therefore, see whether the evidence would justify a conviction of Ram Ranjan under that section.

At the outset, we are confronted with a serious difficulty by reason of the way in which this case was conducted before the Sessions Court. Gosto Chatterjee and Ramanath Roy were admittedly eye-witnesses of the occurrence and yet the Public Prosecutor did not call them as witnesses, notwithstanding repeated requests by Mr. Norton.

The Public Prosecutor cannot shelter himself behind the suggestion that he was able to form an opinion from evidence previously given that these men would not be truthful witnesses; for they were not even examined before the Committing Magistrate.

Mr. Donogh contended that the prosecution even in a case of murder was only bound to call witnesses "in their favour," and for this he relied on a remark attributed to Sir Arthur Wilson in the report of In re Dhunno Kasi (1). But this remark appeared to me so opposed to the established rule and also to the whole trend of the judgment that I examined the original record and there found that the word used by the learned Judge was not "favour" but "power," and this is how the judgment is reported in 10 C. L. R. 151. Obviously, therefore, Sir Arthur Wilson's authority cannot be invoked in favour of the prosecution's contention, and if, as we have been told, the conduct of the Public Prosecutor is in accordance with the general mofussil practice, the sooner that practice is stopped the better. The practice, if it exists, rests on a fundamental misconception of the purpose of a criminal trial and the duty of a Public Prosecutor.

That purpose is not to support at all costs a theory, but to investigate the offence and to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, and the duty of a Public Prosecutor is to represent not the Police, but the Crown, and his duty should be discharged by him fairly and fearlessly and with a full sense of the responsibility that attaches to his position. The guilt or innocence of the accused is to be determined by the tribunals appointed by law and not according to the tastes of any one else.

It was, therefore, undoubtedly the duty of the Public Prosecutor in a capital case like the present to have placed before the trial Court the testimony of all available eye-witnesses. This duty is clearly illustrated by the case of Reg. v. Holden (2), where in a murder trial Counsel for the prosecution did not propose to call an eye-witness because she was brought to Court by the defence. On that the presiding Judge remarked: "She ought to be called. She was present at the transaction. Every witness who was present at a transaction of this sort ought to be called, and even if they give different accounts, it is fit that the jury should have their evidence so as to draw their own conclusion as to the real truth of the matter." This is no technical rule : it is founded on common sense and is dictated by humanity.

The omission of the Public Prosecutor has involved this case as it comes before us in what Mr. Donogh on behalf of the Crown has very justly described as mystery. Indeed he felt this mystery to be so embarrassing that he asked for a re-trial or at any rate for an examination of the witnesses that had not been called. But having regard to the time already occupied by the case and the expenditure incurred, this was opposed and reasonably opposed by the defence, and we must, therefore, dispose of the case on the record as it stands.

The sequence of events as described by the prosecution is improbable and unnatural and hardly accords with the connected actions of responsible human beings. There is obviously something kept back, something omitted, which is required to link up the narrative and to present a reasonable and connected picture of what occurred.

(2) (1838) 8 Car. & P. 605 at p. 609.

The papers before us, however, disclose the description given by Gosto and Ramanath shortly after the event, and it is a description that acquires some value from its correspondence with the story told by Ram Ranjan in his first information, and the statement made by the Nagdi to the Magistrate on the 9th. Correspondence of this class may be attributed to concoction, but in estimating the probability of this it has to be borne in mind that Gosto and Ramanath did not escape with Ram Ranjan but were kept prisoners by the villagers and that even when Ram Ranjan and Umesh were brought to Dejuri where Gosto and Ramanath were, they were throughout kept first under Police observation and then under arrest.

There was, therefore, no opportunity of concoction except in the presence and with the knowledge of the Police, and the evidence discloses no such concoction. Nor is the opportunity of concoction in the case of the Nagdi obvious if regard be had to the statements of the goealas, who were also kept back, and, in my opinion, wrongly kept back by the prosecution. The importance of the story thus told by the defence is that it unmistakably points to an angry irruption of the villagers into the Durga Mela.

If this be true the whole story takes a natural shape, and the improbabilities are smoothed out. Nor is there any unlikelihood in this story: on the contrary the record, with all its imperfections, discloses much that points in the direction of its truth, and supports the idea of an irruption and consequent scuffle and exchange of blows. Thus one of the prosecution witnesses says, there were villagers outside the Durga Mela before the occurrence. When the place was searched a lathi was found, and there is no suggestion that it belonged to the accused's party: there were indications of disturbance in the Durga Mela: there were injuries on the Nagdi which both assessors think, and in my opinion rightly, were genuine and these injuries are suggestive of an attack on him with a lathi.

These matters may not alone amount to proof of an irruption and scuffle, but they certainly encourage the idea that the whole story has not been placed before us and justify the application here of the view expressed by Sir Arthur Wilson in Dhunno Kasi's case (1) that where witnesses are not called without sufficient reason being shown, the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution.

I certainly infer that the prosecution has not placed before us a complete picture of what occurred, but has withheld that which would have been favourable to the accused. I do not suggest that the prosecution story is wholly false: far from it.

Thus I am convinced that it was a blow delivered by the Nagdi that caused Bunwari's death, but I am far from satisfied that the prosecution have placed before us the circumstances that immediately led up to this fatal blow.

It may be that Dhan Kristo addressed the semindar in terms which were regarded as impertinent, and that this village magnate called out maro salako or some such offensive and provocative expression. But I cannot for a moment suppose that he meant thereby to instigate the murder of his tenant, nor can I believe that the Nagdi to whom it was addressed so understood it. A cuff, a blow, or a kick was all that can have been intended, and curiously enough in the first information of the villagers it is said that after the semindar so called out, the Nagdi kicked Bunwari first and not until after this struck him with the lathi. It is true that the villager who gave this information showed an anxiety to correct it when he came to give evidence. I wholly distrust this correction; it is unlikely that the head constable would write down an expression of that kind if it was not said to him, and though his statement was read to him at the time, the villager did not then perceive the error upon which he promptly fastened in the witness-box without any apparent aid.

It is possible that more astute minds than his realised that those words might help to save Ram Ranjan and Umesh from the gallows, and that they should be explained away. It is intelligible that the villagers, already exasperated by the high-handed action of the semindar, went to their companion's aid when they heard the semindar's order and saw the kick. If there was an irruption of villagers this would be the probable sequence of events, and the treatment of the case by the Public Prosecutor has made it impossible for us to hold with the assurance requisite on a capital charge that this did not occur.

I wish to say nothing in palliation of the zemindar's conduct or of his exclamation, if in truth it was uttered by him, but I am unable, on the record as it stands, to hold him guilty of instigating Bunwari's murder or even the lathi blow which caused Bunwari's death.

Even if it be assumed that Ram Ranjan uttered the exclamation attributed to him, the only natural consequence of that was the kick described in the first information. That might have amounted to an offence, but no charge has been made in respect of it. In the circumstances, therefore, we have no option but to acquit Ram Ranjan, but it may be hoped that his experience of the 8th of March will teach him the danger of having in his train a man armed with a deadly weapon when he is dealing with his tenants: for though he is not proved to be legally responsible for the crime, I can hardly suppose him to be so callous as to contemplate without some remorse his association with the killing of two of his villagers. The Nagdi is proved to have inflicted the blow of which Bunwari died, but I do not think the case justifies a conviction under section 302. At the same time the defence has not been able to establish a plea of private defence justifying what he did. We, therefore, convict him under section 304 and pass on him a sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The appeal in respect of the offence on Hari fails, but the sentences will run concurrently.

Mr. Norton has told us of the fairness with which the Sessions Judge placed materials at his disposal for the purpose of the defence. This is as it should be, and I am further gratified with the treatment by the learned Judge of the Assessors as disclosed by the record, and his careful and conscientious use of their experience. It is much to be commended and presents a pleasing contrast with the treatment of Assessors which has sometimes come under my notice in other cases.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 203, 259, 437—Dismissal of complaint for default—Second complaint on same facts, whether entertainable—Further inquiry—Discretion.

A prior order of discharge does not bar the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to entertain a second complaint upon the same facts.

The mere fact that a complaint has been dismissed under section 259, Criminal Procedure Code, is not a sufficient ground for refusing to entertain a second complaint and dismissing it under section 203.

It is purely discretionary with a Court to order further inquiry under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code.

Application against an order of the City Magistrate, Karachi.

Mr. Hassaram Jashanmal, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. R. Bugtani, for the Opponent.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Assistant Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant has not much legitimate grievance as regards the dismissal of his complaint, for even if the Magistrate's peon did call out "Mulchand" instead of "Bulchand," he should clearly have gone up and enquired if he was not wanted. The sworn statements of the Court Sherishtedar and Naik are also, in my opinion, entitled to more weight than the affidavits filed by applicant. I see no reason, therefore, to interfere with the order of the Magistrate under section 259, Criminal Procedure Code, or his subsequent refusal to restore the complaint to the file.

But the Magistrate's order on the second complaint made the next day by applicant on the same facts is more open to question. The order dismissing the complaint is passed under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code, and the reason given for dismissal is that the Magistrate saw no sufficient reason for proceeding with another complaint on the same facts after the first one had been dismissed under section 259. But, as ruled in the cases of Dwarka Nath Mondal v. Beni

GANDA SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Madhub Banerji (1), Chinnathambi Mudali v. Salla Gurusaamy Chetty (2), Emperor v. Chinna Kuliappa Gounden (3), the prior discharge does not bar the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to entertain the second complaint, and the mere fact that the first complaint had been dismissed under section 259 is not, in my opinion, a sufficient ground for refusing to entertain the second complaint and dismissing it under section 203. It may give an additional ground for refusing to proceed upon the complaint, but by itself it seems to me insufficient, because it is not a ground which relates in any way to the merits of the complaint, more especially as the Magistrate had in this case issued process on the first complaint.

The Assistant Public Prosecutor urges that the Magistrate's order implies that the complaint itself is of a trivial and vexatious kind which should not be proceeded with, but there is nothing in his order to that effect. At the same time it is purely discretionary with this Court to order further inquiry under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, and having regard to the nature of the complaint, I do not think that such enquiry should be ordered, unless applicant (1) pays into Court any expenses incurred by Government under section 544, Criminal Procedure Code, in connection with the first complaint which was dismissed, and (2) executes a bond, with one fit surety, undertaking to pay the reasonable costs of the accused (such costs to be assessed by the City Magistrate whose decision thereon shall be final) in the event of his being acquitted or discharged, and such acquittal or discharge not being reversed on appeal or revision by a competent Court.

As a precedent for the latter condition, I may cite section 526 (5), Criminal Procedure Code.

The applicant having duly complied with these conditions (which had already been intimated to and accepted by him), I direct the City Magistrate under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, to make further inquiry into the second complaint referred to above.

Further Inquiry directed.

Sentence—Hurt caused to complainant—Conviction of accused—Defence story believed by Appellate Court—Reduction of sentence

The accused were convicted of having trespassed into the haveli of the complainant and beaten him, causing severe injuries, and then having carried him to a house of one of the accused, where they charged him of having entered the house to commit theft. The accused were sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for eight months, including one month's solitary confinement The Sessions Judge in appeal believed the version of the accused and disbelieved all the witnesses for the prosecution, but maintained the sentence.

Held, that under the circumstances the sentence originally imposed should not have been maintained, as the accused met with great provocation and could hardly be blamed for giving the would-be thief a sound beating

Petition, under section 439 of Act V of 1898, for revision of the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Amritsar Division, at Gurdaspur, dated the 14th April 1914, modifying that of the Magistrate, first Class, Gurdaspur, dated the 10th March 1914, convicting the petitioners.

Lala Dharm Das Suri, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Sessions Judge says: "The story told by the prosecution witnesses that the appellants (Ganda Singh and Harnam Singh, present petitioners) beat Makhu while he was sleeping in his haveli, and then carried him to Ganda Singh, appellant's house and shut him up there, and afterwards concocted the story that he had entered the house in order to commit theft, is to my mind a good deal more improbable than the defence theory that Makhu and two other men entered Ganda Singh's house to commit theft, and that the two other men ran away and Makhu was caught and shut up in the house."

He has then gone on to discuss the evidence, and has held that the defence theory is correct.

Under these circumstances I think that the sentences originally imposed should not have been maintained. Petitioners met with great provocation and could hardly be blamed for giving the would-be thief a sound beating.

That they did give him a severe beating is clear from his condition, even though all the prosecution evidence has been rejected by the learned Sessions Judge. I, therefore, allow the revision so far as to reduce the sentence to one of three months' rigorous imprisonment on each of the petitioners.

Revision partly allowed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 143, 341—Restraint, when amounts to offence.

The restraint, to amount to an offence under section 341 of the Indian Penal Code, must be directed to a person and not to anything else.

Acting Government Pleader v. Venkatachala Mudali, 1 Weir 341; Emperor v. Rama Lala, 19 Ind. Cas. 177; 15 Bom. L. R. 103; 14 Cr. L. J. 177, followed.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gudur, in Criminal Appeal No. 37 of 1913, preferred against that of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate of Gudur, in Calendar Case No. 408 of 1913.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—The accused were convicted of offences punishable under sections 143 and 341 of the Indian Penal Code.

It is argued here that the convictions under the former were wrong, because there was no evidence to justify a finding that all the accused had any common object. There was, however, no suggestion that the accused, who were merely present, had any other business at the spot except to assist, if necessary, those who did overt acts, and the nature of the spot, a sandy tract, used for casuarina planting, negatived any presumption that they were there for any other purpose or merely by chance. There was moreover no evidence to that effect. In these circumstances the lower Court was justified in its conclusion.

Next, it is contended on the strength of Acting Government Pleader v. Venkatachala Mudali (1) and Emperor v. Rama Lala (2), that none of the accused were guilty of using criminal force, because those directly responsible merely stopped the bullocks and carts and did not stop 1st prosecution witness or the others driving them, who were throughout at liberty to proceed. Section 341 no doubt refers only to the restraint of persons, and it is not found and cannot be assumed that 1st prosecution witness and the others were on the carts or that they were prevented from proceeding. And accordingly the convictions of an offence punishable under section 341 must be set aside.

But there remains that under section 143. It requires proof only of an assembly with the common object of obstructing the use of a right of way by means of criminal force; and the lower Court had, I think, evidence to justify a finding in favour of the existence of such object, inasmuch as it found that accused actually stopped the carts, and the natural presumption might fairly be taken to be that they wanted to stop the persons with them. This presumption is not rebutted by anything on the record, there being no evidence of anything said by the accused to distinguish between the stoppage of the carts and that of the men and no circumstances indicating that they limited their purpose to the latter. The objection to the convictions under section 143, therefore, fails.

The petition is accordingly allowed only to the extent that the convictions of an offence punishable under section 341 are set aside, and the fines of 6th, 9th, 11th, 13th, 18th, 25th and 26th accused are reduced to Rs. 40 each on that account, and the fines of the other accused convicted, to Rs. 7 each. In other respects the petition is dismissed.

Order partly set aside and partly maintained.

A member of a joint Hindu family comprising himself and a deceased tenant, if not shown to be a co-tenant with the latter, cannot, under section 48 of the Oudh Rent Act, succeed as heir to the deceased's holding, so long as the deceased's widow is alive.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated 21st April 1913, upholding the order of the Assistant Collector, Sultanpur, dated 1st November 1912.

Babu Rudra Dat Singh, for the Appellant.

Babu Hargovind Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, J. M. (November 11th, 1914)—It has been held that Lachhman Singh was an ordinary tenant. There is nothing to show that the land was given to any of his ancestors before him and presumably he was the first tenant. It is argued by the respondent that, as respondent and he were members of a joint family, therefore, respondent had an equal interest in the holding with Lachhman Singh. I cannot accept this view. The holding was Lachhman Singh's only, and there is no evidence whatever that the respondent was co-tenant with him. This being so, so long as the widow is alive, respondent cannot succeed as heir to the holding under section 48 of the Rent Act.

I would set aside the Commissioner's order and restore that of the Assistant Collector, the respondent paying costs throughout.

TWEEDY, S. M.—I concur.

Revision—Material irregularity—Judgment without considering whole evidence—Punjab Courts Act (IV of 1912), s. 70—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 31—Post card with post mark.

Where a Court passes a judgment in the following words:

"In view of the post mark of November 7th, 1908, Post of Sasoli, I do not consider the signature of Muharram Din on the deed as proved."

Held, that the judgment does not show that the evidence on the record has been fully weighed and considered, and, therefore, does not fulfil the requirements of Order XLI, rule 31, of Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and is liable to be set aside on revision.

Petition, for revision, under section 70, Punjab Courts Act as amended, of the decree of the District Judge, Kangra, at Dharmsala, dated the 25th June 1913, affirming that of the Munsif, second Class, Kangra, dated the 25th October 1912, dismissing the claim.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Qureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The main question is whether defendant No. 1 joined in executing the bond. The bond was executed on 6th November 1908. Both sides produced evidence. One piece of defendant's evidence was a post card, professedly written by him on 6th November 1908, at Chitan village, and posted on the 7th November at Sasoli Branch Post Office.

The first Court, after discussing all the evidence fully, held, mainly on the strength of this post card, that the defendant No. 1 was not at Nadaun where the bond was executed on the 6th November 1908.

The District Judge dismissed the appeal by the following curt judgment: "In view of the post card bearing the post mark of November 7th, 1908, Post Office Sasoli, I do not consider the signature of Muharram Din on the deed as proved."

Such a judgment does not fulfil the requirements of Order XLI, rule 31, to the provisions of which I would call the attention of the learned District Judge.

The decision of the lower Courts may or may not be correct, but the judgment of the District Judge does not show that he has fully weighed and considered all the evidence and I must send the case back for re-hearing of the appeal.

I may note that the District Judge seems to have assumed that the production of the post card is proof of defendant No. 1's presence at Sasoli on the 7th November 1908. Plaintiff challenges the genuineness of this post card. Apart from the possibility of defendant having written a card which he got some one else to post for him at Sasoli on the 7th November, (a theory which seems to me rather improbable) there is to be considered the possibility of this post card never having been in existence on 7th November 1908, and never having really passed through the post at all.

The connivance of a postal subordinate is all that is needed to get a card marked with any post mark desired. And in this particular case I note that the post card is addressed to a man at Bharwana, but there is no Bharwana post mark to show that the card ever reached Bharwana.

I accept this application, set aside the District Judge's decision, and return the appeal to the District Judge for re-hearing.

Petition accepted.

Alienation—Khakhi Jats of Mouza Salihan, Tahsil Muzaffargarh—Transfer of landed property to wife in lieu of shara dower, validity of—Sale—Registration—Document thirty years old—Presumption—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 90—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17.

Among Khakhi Jats of Mouza Salihan in Tahsil Muzaffargarh a sonless proprietor can validly transfer his holding to his wife in lieu of shara dower.

The wife has absolute power of disposing the property thus transferred to her, consequently a gift of it to her daughter is valid by custom and cannot be challenged by the reversioners of her husband.

A document thirty years old coming out of proper custody is to be presumed genuine under section 90 of Act I of 1872.

According to Muhammadan Law a gift by husband of landed property in lieu of dower in favour of his wife is tantamount to a sale, consequently such a deed of gift in lieu of dower below Rs. 100 does not require registration although the real value of the immoveable property thus transferred exceeds that amount and as such is admissible in evidence.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Jhelum, dated the 11th February 1911, varying that of the District Judge, Muzaffargarh, dated the 22nd May 1911, decreeing claim.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Khair Muhammad or Khairu, a Khakhi Jat of Mauza Salihan, Tahsil Muzaffargarh, settled a half of his land, which now measures 454 kanals and 7 marlas, on his wife Musammat Qaim Khatun, in lieu of dower by an unregistered deed, dated the 10th January 1876. He died in 1884 leaving his widow, Musammat Qaim Khatun, and a daughter, Musammat Wasai. Mutation of the whole land left by Khairu was made in due course in the name of Musammat Qaim Khatun and she remained in possession of it. In October 1907, she made a verbal gift of half of the land, 454 kanals and 7 marlas to her daughter Musammat Wasai, and she exchanged the remaining half of the land (i. e. 454 kanals and 7 marlas) with certain land owned by her son-in law, Muhammad Hassan in Mauza Pind Ishaq. Mutation in respect of the land exchanged was effected in the name of Musammat Wasai and in Muhammad Hassan's name, respectively, on the 9th January 1908.

On the 28th July 1908, the plaintiffs-appellants who are nephews of Khairu brought two suits to obtain declaratory decrees to the effect that the gift and the exchange in question made by Musammat Qaim Khatun in favour of her daughter and with her son-in-law, respectively, shall not affect their reversionary rights in the land so dealt with after the death of the widow. The District Judge decreed both the suits; but on appeal the learned Divisional Judge while maintaining the District Judge's decree in respect of the land which was the subject-matter of the exchange, set aside the decree relating to the land gifted by the widow to Musammat Wasai and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit regarding that land.

The plaintiffs have preferred a further appeal to this Court from the Divisional Judge's decree dismissing their suit regarding the last mentioned portion of the land.

This land is covered by the unregistered deed, dated the 10th January 1876, executed by Khairu in favour of Musammat Qaim Khatun and in regard to that deed the two questions which we have to decide are, (1) whether it is a genuine deed; and (2) whether it required registration and not being registered is inadmissible in evidence?

As regards the genuineness of the deed both the Courts below have recorded a concurrent finding in favour of the defendants. But they have differed on the question whether the deed was compulsorily registerable or not; the District Judge holds that it was compulsorily registerable and not being registered is inadmissible in evidence, while the Divisional Judge is of opinion that it did not require registration and can be admitted in evidence. The Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants has contended before us that the deed is a forgery, and he has suggested that it was forged probably shortly before his clients instituted their suits. The deed purports to have been attested by nine witnesses of whom four were lambardars, its contents afford intrinsic evidence of the deed being a genuine one; and it has all the appearance of being an old document and has been produced from proper custody. We agree with the Courts below that under section 90 of the Evidence Act this deed which is more than thirty years old must be presumed to be genuine. This presumption has, in no way, been rebutted by the plaintiffs, in fact, their own witness, Budhan lambardar, who is an attesting witness to the deed proves its execution by Khairu; and the evidence of Gaman, lambardar, produced by the defendants to prove his attestation of the deed, may be left out of account as he says that he cannot identify the impression of his seal on the deed. Taking, then, the due execution of the deed by Khairu as established the next question for decision is as to whether it required registration or not. By this deed Khairu transferred half of his moveable and immoveable property in lieu of dower; the amount of dower is not specified in the deed but it is referred to as haq mehr sharai which indisputably is less than Rs. 100. It is obvious that if the deed be regarded as a deed of gift in respect of the immoveable property covered by it, it evidences what is known in Muhammadan law as a hiba bil iwaz which is tantamount to a sale of the property gifted. By this deed, therefore, Khairu transferred half of his estate to his wife, the consideration for the transfer being haq mehr-i-sharai i.e., an amount of dower less than Rs. 100; and in these circumstances, the deed in question did not require registration under the Indian Registration Act. It follows that the deed is admissible in evidence; and this being the case, we have next to consider what rights were acquired by Musammat Qaim Khatun in the land that was gifted to her in lieu of dower by Khairu. By virtue of this gift Musammat Qaim Khatun became owner in her own right of half of her husband's estate, i. e., of 454 kanals and 7 marlas, and as neither during Khairu's life-time nor after his death was this gift ever disputed by his collaterals, Musammat Qaim Khatun had every power to deal, as she chose, with the land in question in 1907. She made a gift of it to her own daughter and had mutation effected in her name, and the present plaintiffs-appellant, as collaterals of Khairu, had no power by custom to contest the validity of that gift.

For the reasons given we agree with the Divisional Judge in holding that the gift by Musammat Qaim Khatun in favour of Musammat Wasai in respect of 454 kanals and 7 marlas was valid; we accordingly maintain the decree of the Divisional Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 50.

Appeal dismissed.

Where a part of an occupancy holding not transferable by local custom or usage was usufructuarily mortgaged by a registered document with the covenant not to surrender, and the mortgagor surrendered it:

Held, that as the encumberance is by a registered document and the surrender was without the consent of the plaintiff, the surrender is invalid under section 86 (6) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

An encumbrance on a part of a holding is an encumbrance on the whole.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter, for the Appellant.

Babu Soroshi Charan Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—The defendant No. 1 had an occupancy holding which was not transferable by local custom or usage. He gave an usufructuary lease of a portion of this holding to the plaintiff by a registered document and made an express covenant not to surrender his jote to the landlord; in breach of this covenant, however, he surrendered his jote to the landlords who dispossessed the plaintiff and settled the remaining portion of the jote with a relation of defendant No. 1; the plaintiff sued for recovery of possession with mesne profits.

The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiff holding that the surrender was collusive. The learned District Judge has dismissed the suit holding that no collusion was made out.

It is contended in second appeal before us, that even if no fraud or collusion is made out the plaintiff is entitled to succeed as the surrender made without his consent is not valid and cannot deprive him of his rights; reliance is placed on section 86 (6) of the Bengal Tenancy Act which provides "that when a holding is subject to an incumbrance secured by a registered instrument, the surrender of the holding shall not be valid unless it is made with the consent of the landlord and the incumbrancer." The learned Vakil for the respondents, on the other hand, contends that this sub-section applies only where the whole holding is under an incumbrance and could not have been intended to apply to a case like the present in which a part only of the holding is incumbered. He further contends that such a construction of section 86 (6) would offend against the express provisions of section 88 which provides that no division of a holding will be binding upon the landlord unless it is made with his consent. He relies on the cases of Rajendra Kishore v. Chandra Nath Dutt(1) and Ganga Chandra Chowdhury v. Alak Chand Shaha (2), Krishna Chandra Dutta Chowdhury v. Khiran Bajania (3). I think the contention of the appellant is sound and ought to be allowed; the incumbrance here is by a registered document and the surrender was without the consent of the plaintiff, the surrender is, therefore, invalid.

As regards the arguments addressed on behalf of the respondents I do not see how an incumbrance upon a part of a holding is not an incumbrance on the whole. A burden upon a part of a holding is a burden upon the holding taken as an undivided whole. Nor do I see how the appellants' construction of section 86 (6) offends against the provisions or the principle of section 88. It is true the landlords have after the surrender settled the part not covered by the plaintiff's serpeshgi with a third person and the effect is a division of the holding; this division, however, is one made by the landlords themselves by treating the unencumbered portion as a separate entity and assessing a separate rent upon it.

The cases relied upon do not help the respondents. The case of Rajendra Kishore v. Chandra Nath (1) was a case in which it was held that there was abandonment by the tenant. The case of Ganga Chandra Chowdhury v. Alak Chand Shaha (2) was one of the surrender of a part of a holding and section 86 (6) was not referred to in that case. In the case of Krishna Chandra Dutta Chowdhury v. Khiran Bajania (3) the usufructuary mortgage of the entire holding for an indefinite time was held to be in breach of the conditions on which the tenant held his land. None of these cases decided any question under section 86 (6). There is on the other hand our express decision of this Court in the case of Husain Bibi v. Sadir Mahmad Sircar (4) in favour of the appellant. On general principles also I think the respondents have no reason to complain. In the case of Walter v. Yalden (5), Mr. Justice Channell, lays down the law on this subject in England thus: "The law is that a lessee can only give title to his lessor by a surrender to the same extent that he could give it to another person by his assignment. If the lessee has created under-leases, the under-leases remain notwithstanding the surrender; the lessee cannot assign his term to any one else so as to put an end to those under-leases. But that I think is only an example of what he can and cannot do; the point is that he has no power to effect by surrender anything that he could not do by assignment to a third person; the reason being that he cannot convey to his landlord, any more than to any one else, anything that he has not got himself." Section 86 (6) of the Bengal Tenancy Act embodies the same principle within certain bounds and is quite consistent with justice, equity and good conscience. It was intended, no doubt, to prevent fraud and collusion and no fraud or collusion of the landlord is proved in this case, but the conduct of the tenant was certainly fraudulent and in violation of his express contract not to surrender and I have no hesitation in decreeing this appeal with costs.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

Inheritance—Suit by some heirs of deceased person against stranger—Their claim limited only to extent of their own individual shares—Estoppel—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115.

Where some of the heirs of a deceased person sue to get possession of the deceased's property they are restricted to their own individual shares if such shares can be ascertained, and they have no right to recover whole of his property even if the remaining heirs have distinctly declined to make any claim. This rule equally applies whether the contest is between two sets of the reversioners or reversioners and a stranger who is unable to establish any prima facie right at all.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Lahore Division, dated 30th May 1910, confirming that of the Sub-Judge, first Class, Lahore, dated the 30th July 1909, decreeing the claim.

Pandit Ram Bhaj Datta and Lala Tirath Ram, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Braodway, Gobind Ram and Pandit Jowala Parshad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the lower Courts have concurred in giving plaintiffs a decree in full for possession of 2,031 kanals in Mauza Paji and for a declaration protecting their rights as reversioners in respect of 229 kanals in Mauza Sunder. The land in suit belonged to Khazan Singh of Paji, who died in or about 1903 leaving a young widow aged 20 or 22 years.

Khazan Singh had no near relatives of any sort. Looking to the entries in the pedigree-table of Mauza Paji his heirs appear to be the plaintiff as to 19/48 shares and the pro forma defendants Nos. 2 to 11 as to 29/48ths shares. Even these collaterals are some sixteen degrees removed, but in the absence of nearer collaterals or of any claim to escheat on behalf of Government they would be entitled to recognition as reversioners of Khazan Singh, after the death or re-marriage of his widow.

Very shortly after the death of Khazan Singh, his widow, on the 25th August 1903, executed what is described by the lower Courts, as a deed of acquittance, but what for all practical purposes is a deed of sale in favour of Buta Singh, defendant No. 1, a resident of Sunder distant some 20 miles from Paji. This Buta Singh was a young man of 20 and he ostensibly purchased the whole large area concerned on a promise of maintenance to the widow, the value of the maintenance being taken for purposes of stamps at Rs. 1,000. As a matter of fact practically nothing can have been paid seeing that the widow herself re-married elsewhere within two months of the sale. On the strength, however, of this very suspicious transaction Buta Singh succeeded in obtaining a mutation order in his favour on the 19th May 1905, and the plaintiffs have thereupon come into Court by a suit instituted in July 1907. The case for Buta Singh is that he did not really take the land merely in his capacity of vendee so much as by right of inheritance as being a nearer collateral of Khazan Singh than latter, the plaintiffs or the pro forma defendants. Somewhat strangely this allegation of a right by inheritance was accepted by the Revenue Officer when the case came before him on the mutation proceedings of the 19th May 1905. There is really nothing to support Buta Singh's claim as an heir beyond the entirely inconclusive entries in the pedigree-table of village Paji and Sundar. It is no doubt conceivable that Buta Singh may really be descended from a somewhat less remote common ancestor of Khazan Singh than that of the plaintiffs, but the evidence to establish even that highly questionable point is entirely wanting. The pedigree-table of Mauza Sunder shows, Buta Singh descended from one Sahib Singh who had emigrated from Paji. Neither that table nor the pedigree-table of Paji gives any clue to enable Sahib Singh to be directly traced from a common ancestor of Khazan Singh by the most favourable construction of the entries —there is a gap of several generations rendering it absolutely impossible to trace Buta Singh's ancestors in the Paji's table. The whole of this part of the case has been very carefully discussed by the lower Court and we entirely agree in this conclusion against Buta Singh.

Even if Buta Singh's relationship could be established much more conclusively than it has been, we should still hold, so far as he is concerned, the case is clearly one of abandonment for such an extraordinarily long time that he could not now assert even a right of collateral succession. He and his predecessors had given up whatever connection they may once have held with village Paji for generations, going back to a period long before the introduction of British rule and it would be quite unsafe for the Civil Courts to attempt to adjudicate on Buta Singh's rights with nothing more to go on than vague tradition.

The appellant, Buta Singh, has been equally unsuccessful in attempting to prove something in the nature of either estoppel or acquiescence on the part of the plaintiffs. All this part of the case has been thoroughly discussed by the learned Divisional Judge that we need not refer in further detail to the arguments of defendant's Pleader based upon certain alleged leases and decrees of produce and on the fact that two of the plaintiffs and pro forma defendants have jointly allowed Buta Singh to redeem from them a petty mortgage for Rs. 300. It is enough to say that no sort of estoppel or acquiescence has been established.

If the matter rested there we should have no hesitation in confirming the decrees of the lower Courts in favour of the plaintiffs as against Buta Singh. But it has all along been contended by the latter that the plaintiffs are themselves entitled to not more than their 19/48ths share as by pedigree, and that there is no justification for giving them a decree in full for the whole of the land in suit. This part of the case has not been carefully dealt with by either of the lower Courts. It has not been referred to at all by the first Court, as it should have been with reference to issue 6 in the case, while it has been dealt with very briefly by the learned Divisional Judge in the last paragraph of his otherwise conclusive judgment, and no real reason has been given why the plaintiffs should succeed to the extent of more than their own share. No reference has been made to authorities bearing on the point and we are not aware of any ruling which will justify the Courts in awarding to plaintiffs more than their strict share. It is true that the defendants 2 to 11 did not admit the rights of Buta Singh and only said that they were too poor to join the plaintiffs in a suit of the kind, but nonetheless it must be taken that they are not prepared to claim their share from Buta Singh either because they are unwilling to risk the expense of suit or because they may be satisfied in their own minds that Buta Singh has some sort of status as a collateral heir even though he is unable to prove it by authentic evidence. So far as we are aware the invariable rule of this Court has been, in such cases, to give the plaintiffs only such share as they can establish in their own right. The lower Appellate Court has looked into the matter and found this share to be 19/48ths, and this has been admitted by the defendant Buta Singh in paragraph 3 of his appeal to the Divisional Court and in paragraph 10 of his appeal to this Court. We see no reason for supposing that the plaintiffs' share has been incorrectly calculated. In the ruling Kesar Singh v. Ganga Singh (1) a majority of the Judges held in a somewhat similar case that the rights of the plaintiffs are limited to their own shares if such shares can be ascertained. The same line of argument has been adopted in Civil Appeal No. 57 of 1900, decided on the 9th December 1902, and published as 51 Punjab Law Reporter 1903 [Basanta v. Indar (2)] and again in Civil Appeal No. 169 of 1906, decided on the 15th January 1908, and published as 36 Punjab Weekly Reporter 1908 [Hira Singh v. Gulab Singh (3).] We do not think that it makes any difference in the argument whether the contest is between two sets of reversioners or between the reversioners and an outsider who can establish no prima facie right at all, we must take it that the plaintiffs are restricted to their individual shares and that they have no right to recover the whole of the land where the remaining reversioners have distinctly declined to make any claim. On this point alone we differ from the lower Courts.

The result is that we must accept the appeal to that extent. The decree of the lower Appellate Court in plaintiffs' favour is set aside and in place thereof we give the plaintiffs a decree for both possession and declaration to the extent of 19/48ths share in the areas claimed. It follows, as admitted by Counsel on both sides, that the decree will be conditional on plaintiffs' paying to the defendant Buta Singh the sum of Rs. 291 being 19/48ths of the Rs. 736 to which he has been found entitled. We are informed that this Rs. 736 has been already paid to Buta Singh in full and if this is correct the plaintiffs will accordingly be entitled to recover Rs. 445 from Buta Singh when required to surrender the 29/48ths share of the land in suit, which is now decreed in his favour. As the plaintiffs have eventually succeeded to something less than half of their original claim we direct that the parties shall pay their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Family business carried on—Debt contracted for family business—Creditor not bound to inquire as to purpose of loan—Manager, implied authority of.

Where a joint Hindu family carries on a business or profession, and maintains itself by means of it, the member who manages it for the family has an implied authority to contract debts for its purposes, and the creditor is not bound to inquire into the finances of the business, as long as that business forms the purpose of the debts, in order to bind the whole family thereby, because the power to contract debts is incidental to the carrying on of the business, from which the family derives its means of subsistence and support.

Mirza Samiullah Beg, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by a mortgagee for the recovery of money due on a mortgage effected by Ramsukh in favour of the plaintiff on the 30th October 1906. The allegation of the plaintiff was that the mortgage was made for family necessity. The defence of Ramsukh was that he had borrowed the money without any family necessity and squandered it over immoral purposes. He admitted, however, that he had been carrying on business in cloth for nine or ten years and that he occasionally dealt in grain. His son and grandson, Banaraj and Chet Ram, contested the claim on the ground that the property mortgaged was ancestral and that the loan was taken for immoral purposes and was not binding on them.

The Court of first instance decreed the claim holding that a portion of the loan was taken to pay an antecedent debt, but that the rest was not taken for any family necessity. The lower Appellate Court, however, was of opinion that it was immaterial to decide whether or not the debt was tainted with immorality, and whether the family business in grain was or was not a joint business started by Ramsukh and his son a year subsequent to the loan. It inclined to the view that the evidence adduced by both the parties was extremely unreliable and that the plaintiff had failed to establish that he had made an inquiry as to the purposes of the loan. It does not appear to have been noticed that the mortgage-bond in suit stated that the loan was taken for carrying on cloth business, the existence of which was admitted by Ramsukh, and the story that the money was taken for immoral purposes was not found to be true. The material point for the decision of the lower Appellate Court was whether the necessity mentioned in the mortgage-bond existed. If the family to which the defendants belonged was carrying on cloth business in addition to any other from the profits of which its means of subsistence were derived, and if the loan in question was taken for the purposes of carrying on that business, there is no reason why the plaintiff should not be allowed a decree for the amount due on mortgage. As held in Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (1), where a family carries on a business or profession, and maintains itself by means of it, the member who manages it for the family has an implied authority to contract debts for its purposes, and the creditor is not bound to inquire into the finances of the business, as along as that business forms the purpose of the debts, in order to bind the whole family thereby, because the power to contract debts is incidental to the carrying of the business, from which the family derives its means of subsistence and support. The lower Appellate Court is, therefore, directed to determine, after taking such additional evidence relevant to the inquiry as the parties may offer,

(1) Whether the loan in question was taken for family necessity or for the purposes of family business, and if so, how much of it was so taken.

Two months' time will be allowed for a return of the finding and ten days from the date of the finding will be allowed to the parties for filing objections.

Issue remitted.

KORUKONDA JAGANNADHAM AND ANOTHER—COUNTER-PETITIONERS No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 57, applicability of.

VARDIPARTHI RAMAYYA v. KOSURUKONDA JAGANNADHAM.

Order XXI, rule 57, which provides that on the dismissal of an execution application the existing attachment on the attached property shall cease, can only apply to orders of dismissal passed after the Act came into force.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada, in Appeal Suit No. 77 of 1912, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Peddapur, in Execution Petition No. 485 of 1911 (Original Suit No. 82 of 1899 Paddapur District Munsif's Court.)

FACTS of the case appear from the following portions of the Subordinate Judge's judgment:

"The decree is dated 27th February 1899 and it became 12 years old on 27th February 1911. The last execution petition (Execution Petition No. 485 of 1911) was put in on 26th June 1911: which was nearly four months after 27th February 1911; but the record shows that the sale of certain immoveable property which was ordered by the Court in the execution of the above decree, was on 21st February 1910, stayed by an injunction issued in Original Suit No. 96 of 1910 on the file of the lower Court. Both the parties to the appeal agree that the above Suit No. 96 of 1910 was disposed of on 7th June 1911 and there is nothing on record to show that the above injunction was withdrawn during the pendency of the above suit When the injunction was not withdrawn it must be taken to have terminated at the disposal of the suit and the suit was disposed of on 7th June 1911. Ghulam Nasir-ud-din v. Har Deo Prashad (1) shows that when an injunction like the above is issued the period during which the injunction is in force should be calculated in the decree-holder's favour although during the period of the injunction it may be open to him to proceed against any other property of the judgment-debtor. By the effect of the above ruling the period between 21st February 1910 and 7th June 1911 must be excluded in computing the period of 12 years referred to in section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. If the above period be excluded in the present case, Execution Petition No. 485 of 1911, which was the last application of the decree-holder, was well within time. I hold, therefore, that the above execution petition was not barred by the 12 years' rule under clause 1 (a) of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code and that the application was within time.

"The order of the lower Court is reversed and the execution petition is remanded to it with a direction that it be restored to file and disposed of according to law. Costs in this appeal to abide and follow the result."

Mr. G. Venkataramiah, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Subordinate Judge ought to have pronounced an opinion on the question whether the attachment made in 1907 was subsisting when the new execution application for sale was made in 1911.

The District Munsif considered that that attachment, though pending on 1st January 1909 came to an end by coming into force of the new Civil Procedure Code on that date, that is, the coming into force of Order XXI, rule 57, contained in that Code. If the District Munsif was right in that view, the Execution Application of 1911 which prayed for sale of the property could not be granted (as it stood) as the petition ought to have prayed for both attachment and sale.

However, it is unnecessary to remand this case for a finding on that question, as it is a pure question of law which we could decide ourselves.

We are clear that Order XXI, rule 57, which provides that, on the dismissal of an execution application, the existing attachment on the attached properties shall cease, can only apply to orders of dismissal passed after the Act came into force.

The other ground on which the District Munsif dismissed the application as barred has been dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge, and we are prepared to follow Ghulam Nasir-ud-din v. Har Deo Prashad (1) which is relied on by the Subordinate Judge.

The Subordinate Judge was, therefore, right in remanding the execution case to the District Munsif for disposal on the merits; and we dismiss the appeal against that remand order with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Representative—Judgment-debtor, application of—Auction-purchaser, relief against—Property erroneously sold in execution—Possession, restoration of, application for—Court, discretion of.

An auction-purchaser is a representative neither of the decree-holder nor of the judgment-debtor.

Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, 19 C. 683 at p 689; 19 I. A. 166, explained.

Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib, 28 M. 87; 14 M. L. J. 474 and Manikka Odayan v. Rajagopala Pillai, 30 M. 507; 2 M.L.T. 347, 17 M.L.J. 291, dissented from.

Section 47, Civil Procedure Code, does not contemplate an application by a judgment-debtor asking as against the auction-purchaser possession of the property erroneously sold to him by the executing Court.

It is entirely discretionary for the Court to treat a proceeding under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, as a suit. An applicant is not entitled to the benefit as of right.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Appellant.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath and the Government Pleader, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Court of Wards as Manager of the estate of a lunatic named Chandrapal Singh obtained a decree for the sale of certain plots of land which had been mortgaged by Chhedi Ram to the ward. On the 23rd February 1911 an application was made for the sale of the land hypothecated and an area of 40·6 acres was sold to Rani Itraj Kuar. On the 16th March 1912, the judgment-debtor made an application under sections 47 and 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, asking that the sale should be set aside, and that possession should be restored to him, on the ground that the area sold was not the area for the sale of which a decree had been obtained.

The learned Subordinate Judge rejected this application. In appeal the learned District Judge found that the application lay under section 47 of the Code, but held that it was time barred. On appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner it was decided that the application was not time-barred, and the hearing of the appeal was remanded to the learned District Judge for a decision on the merits. Mr. Lindsay, Judicial Commissioner, in his order remitting the appeal for re-hearing clearly laid down that he did not decide whether the application was or was not barred under the provisions of section 47. He said: "In the present case, the argument has all along been, that the application which was made in this instance was one under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that is to say, it was an application relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. Indeed, the learned Judge of the Court below has conceded this position, and has held that the mere fact, that the auction-purchaser was made a party to the application, does not remove it from the category of an application which can be made under section 47. In this he has followed the ruling of the Privy Council which is reported as Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (1)."

"It appears, therefore, that the application was one which the judgment-debtor was entitled to make under the Code of Civil Procedure, and as, I have already said, looking to the allegations made in the application and sale and the antecedent circumstances, the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant, that the application is strictly one to which Article 165 applies, is irresistible." He continued, "I do not desire to say anything about the merits of the case. It is sufficient for the purpose of disposing of this appeal, to hold that the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the question of limitation is erroneous."

(1) 19 C. 683 at p. 689; 19 I. A. 166.

Thus Mr. Lindsay decided that if the application were, as the District Judge had found it to be, an application admissible under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it was not time-barred.

But he nowhere decided that the application was admissible under the provisions of section 47. He left open the question whether the application was or was not admissible under the provisions of that section. The learned District Judge has relied on the authority of the well-known case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (1), finding that their Lordships decided therein that an auction-purchaser was a representative of a party to the suit. In that case the dispute was between certain judgment-debtors and the decree-holder, the allegation being that the decree-holder entered into an agreement with those judgment-debtors not to bring their property to sale and in breach of that agreement, after having received their quota of the debt decreed, had fraudulently brought their share of the property to sale. The dispute in that case was between certain judgment-debtors and the decree-holder, and all that their Lordships decided was that such being the case, although no doubt the auction-purchaser was affected by the decision of the point, the point should have been determined as between the aggrieved judgment-debtors and the decree-holder under the provisions of section 244 which corresponds to the present section 47, without bringing the auction-purchaser before the Court, and they laid down that the fact that the purchaser who was no party to the suit was interested in the result had never been held a bar to the application of the section and should not be held to be a bar. They further stated that they were glad to find that the Courts in India had not placed a narrow construction on the language of the section. They did not, however, lay down that an auction-purchaser who had not been a party to the original suit was representative of either of the original parties. Had they laid down this proposition a considerable difficulty would arise in cases such as the present, for the majority of the High Courts in India have found that if an auction-purchaser can be considered to be the representative of either party to the suit, he must be considered to be the representative of the judgment-debtor. The property that he has purchased is the property of the judgment-debtor, not the property of the decree-holder. So if he represents either party he represents the judgment-debtor. A contrary view has been taken in two rulings of the Madras High Court, Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib (2) and Manikka Odayan v. Rajagopala Pillai (3), but that view has been dissented from by other High Courts, notably in a more recent decision of the Allahabad High Court in Anandi Kunwari v. Ajudhia Nath (4). I consider that, if an auction-purchaser is held to be the representative of either party, he must be considered to be the representative of the judgment-debtor, and upon that view a curious anomaly arises in a case such as the present which is between a judgment debtor who asserts himself to be aggrieved and the auction-purchaser, who upon this view of the case is his own legal representative. I am of opinion that their Lordships of the Privy Council did not lay down the view accepted by the learned District Judge. I could not arrive at any other decision unless I was willing to dissent from a decision of a Full Bench of this Court, which has never been dissented from since it was delivered, in Lalji v. Munnu Lal (5), which refers to a decision of the Bombay High Court in Maganlal Muljt v. Doshi Muljt Bhaichand (6). In the latter decision Jenkins, C. J., discussed the meaning of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council, and found that their Lordships did not hold that an auction-purchaser was a party or representative under the provisions of the section, and that they merely held that his interest in the result did not prevent the question being treated as one between the parties. So far from wishing to dissent from the doctrine laid down by the Judicial Commissioner's Court, I am in complete agreement with it. The case, therefore, stands

(2) 28 M. 87; 14 M. L. J. 474.
(3) 30 M. 507; 2 M. L. T. 347; 17 M. L. J. 391.
(4) 30 A. 379, 5 A. L. J. 557; A. W. N. (1908) 157.
(5) 8 O. C. 370.
(6) 25 B. 631; 3 Bom. L. R. 355.

as follows: —The aggrieved judgment-debtor asserts that the sale to the auction-purchaser was a sale not permitted by the terms of the decree inasmuch as only a very small portion of the property sold was covered by the decree and the remainder was sold without right or title, and he asks as against the auction-purchaser that such portions of the property transferred as were not covered by the terms of the decree should be restored to his possession. I am unable to find that such an application can possibly fall under the provisions of section 47. The judgment-debtor desires that a third party, who was not a party to the suit and has obtained, owing to an error of the Court executing the decree, certain property to which he is not entitled, should be dispossessed and that the property in question should be restored to him.

Obviously this is not a case falling under the provisions of section 47, and in the circumstances the judgment-debtor's application, so far as it can be considered an application in execution, must be dismissed. I have been asked by the learned Counsel for the respondent judgment-debtor to apply the provisions of section 47 (2) to the case and to treat the proceeding as a suit. I see no reason to do this. Upon the merits the judgment-debtor deserves no consideration. It would appear that he took advantage of the mortgagee in order to enter into the mortgage-deed certain numbers which he did not possess leading the mortgagee to believe that he was mortgaging numbers which he did possess, and in the circumstances I do not propose to give him anything to which he is not strictly entitled. He is not entitled to the benefit of the section as of right. It is entirely discretionary for the Court to give him that benefit, and I see no reason to do so as I do not find that he has done anything to deserve it.

I decree the appeal and direct that the application be dismissed. The judgment-debtor will pay his own costs and those of the auction-purchaser and the decree-holder in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, r. 13—Execution of decree, stay of, pending decision of appeal to Privy Council.

Under Order XLV, rule 13, of the Code of Civil Procedure, execution of a decree will not, without sufficient cause being shown, be stayed pending the decision of the appeal to the Privy Council.

Application, under Order XLV, rules 2 and 13 (c), Civil Procedure Code of 1908, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the judgment and decree of the Chief Court, dated the 30th October 1913, passed in Civil Appeal Case No. 24 of 1909, reported in 22 Ind. Cas. 134 and for stay of execution of the said decree pending decision of the appeal by the Privy Council.

Mr. Santanam, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Pestonji Dadabhai, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The plaintiff named Rukman, after losing her case in the first Court, obtained a decree from the Chief Court in full of her claim on the 30th October 1913. Certain defendants have now applied to this Court for leave to appeal to the Privy Council and they also ask that plaintiff be restrained from executing her decree pending the decision of the appeal by that Court. No objection is raised to the grant of certificate to appeal, but the plaintiff's Counsel strongly objects to any stay of execution.

We have heard arguments and we have considered the provisions of Order XLV, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code. We have also been referred to the ruling published as 234 Punjab Law Reporter 1912 [Khadam Hussain Khan v. Murad Bibi (1)] a case which, we think, is practically on all fours with the present case. Without going into details we may say at once that we do not think sufficient cause has been shown for stay of execution. The ruling aforesaid lays down certain principles which are fully applicable to the present case. At the same time plaintiff decree-holder ought, in our opinion, to furnish security and Mr. Pestonji says that he has no objection to this. We, therefore, grant the usual certificate of leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. We also allow at the same time the decree appealed from to be executed, directing that such security shall be taken from the respondent as the Court executing the decree thinks fit for the due performance of any order which His Majesty in Council may make on the appeal. We make no order as to costs.

Leave granted; Execution allowed.

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Bombay District Municipalities Act (Bom. Act III of 1901), ss. 82, 83, 86—Bill to recover arrears—Statutory requirements not fulfilled—Failure to pay—Distress warrant, whether legal.

A bill to recover the arrears of house-tax served upon a person by a Municipality does not fulfil the requirements of section 82 (2) (b) (ii) of the District Municipalities Act, 1901, if it does not specify the time within which an appeal may be preferred under section 86 of the Act and in such a case the issue of a distress warrant on failure to pay the arrears is illegal inasmuch as the right of distress depends upon the observance of the statutory formalities, it being a right conferred only by the Statute upon those conditions.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Surat, in Appeal No. 57 of 1911, modifying the decree passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge at Surat, in Civil Suit No. 86 of 1908.

Mr. Jardine, acting Advocate-General (with him Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader), for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Surat City Municipality against the decree of a District Judge, varying the decree of the first Court and holding that the plaintiff was entitled only to a sum of Rs. 23-13-0 in respect of moneys paid by him under protest to release certain property which was destrained by the Municipality in respect of arrears of taxes for a portion of the house in his possession. The money was recoverable by the plaintiff as having been paid under protest if he was able to show that the distress was not in accordance with law.

Now the power of the Municipality to levy distress upon the moveable property of a person from whom a tax is claimable depends upon the provisions of Chapter VIII of the District Municipal Act (Bom. Act III of 1901). It provides that: "When any amount, which is claimable as an amount on account of any tax which is now imposed in any Municipal District, shall have become due, the Municipality shall, with the least practicable delay, cause to be presented to the person liable for the payment thereof, a bill for the sum claimed as due, and every such bill shall specify the period for which and the property in respect of which the sum is claimed, and shall also give notice of the liability incurred in default of payment, and of the time within which an appeal may be preferred as hereinafter provided against such claim;" and clause (3) of section 82 provides that: "if the sum for which any bill has been presented as aforesaid is not paid within fifteen days from the presentation thereof, the Municipality may cause to be served upon the person liable a notice of demand;" and under section 83: "if the person liable for payment does not, within fifteen days from the service of the notice of demand, pay or show cause why he should not pay or prefer an appeal, such sum may be levied under a warrant by distress." Therefore, the notice of demand upon which the right of distress is based depends upon the previous presentation of a bill complying with the statutory provisions set out in section 82, clause (2).

It is not disputed that in this case the bill did not fulfil all the statutory requirements in that it did not state the time within which an appeal might be preferred under section 86 of the Act. The procedure followed, therefore, was not a legal procedure. The whole right of distress depends upon the observance of the statutory formalities, it being a right conferred by the statute only upon those conditions. We, therefore, agree with the first Court in this respect, and without deciding the other questions which have been raised as to whether the amount of tax was claimable under the new Act of 1901, or whether any portion of the claim was barred by the Law of Limitation, we can dispose of the appeal upon the ground that the distress was illegal for the reasons above stated. We, therefore, hold that the decree appealed against was right. We have been asked to give relief to the respondent upon a cross-objection that certain costs in the way of proof of documents which have been incurred are not sufficiently covered by the order for costs in proportion to the sum awarded; but we have no materials which justify us in altering the order of the lower Court as to costs. We confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal and the cross-objections respectively with costs.

Decree confirmed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120—Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act (I of 1900)—Suit for declaratory decree setting aside a Will, incompetent during life-time of testator—Limitation—Six years.

A suit will not lie for a declaratory decree setting aside a Will during the life-time of the testator.

Musammat Badho Bai v. Chatta Ram, 111 P. R. 1880, referred to.

Chukhun Lal Roy v. Lolit Mohan Roy, 20 C. 906, distinguished.

A declaratory suit for setting aside a Will is governed by Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. The Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act, 1900, does not apply to such suits.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Attock Division, at Campbellpore, dated the 8th June 1912, reversing that of the District Judge, Attock, dated the 29th February 1912, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Oertel, for the Appellants.

Mr. Fasal-i-Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Ghulam Muhammad, an Awan of the Talagang Tahsil of the Attock District, executed a Will on the 2nd of April 1894, by which he bequeathed the whole of his property, including his reversionary rights in the estate of his cousin's widow, to Muhammad Nawaz Khan, defendant-appellant, his daughter's son. The Will was duly registered. Ghulam Muhammad died on the 17th March 1900, leaving a widow, Musammat Bakhtawari. Mutation of deceased's estate was sanctioned in favour of Muhammad Nawaz Khan on the 13th May 1900, with the consent of the widow. On the 24th of May 1911, the plaintiffs, who are nephews of Ghulam Muhammad, brought the present suit for a declaration to the effect that their reversionary rights should not be affected by this Will, on the ground that it was invalid according to custom. The first Court held that the suit was within time and that the Will was invalid according to custom, and decreed the plaintiffs' claim. On appeal the Divisional Judge held that the suit was time-barred, cause of action having arisen on the date when the Will was executed, viz., the 2nd of April 1894, and the period of limitation under Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act having expired before the Punjab Act I of 1900 came into force. On the question of custom he agreed with the first Court, but having regard to his finding on the question of limitation dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal in this Court.

Now, the first point for our decision is whether the Divisional Judge is correct in his view that the cause of action arose on, and the period of limitation ran from, the 2nd April 1894. In our opinion his view is incorrect. In Musammat Badho Bai v. Chatta Ram (1), it was held that a suit will not lie for a declaratory decree setting aside a Will made by a Hindu widow, still living, and purporting to dispose after her death the immoveable property of her husband. In the judgment the learned Judges remarked: "We have heard the plaint and the Will on which it is based, and find that the document is nothing but a Will, and can take no effect until testator's death, and, as it is by its nature a revocable instrument, it may never take effect at all. There is, therefore, nothing which amounts to alienation of the property, or of any interest therein, and in the absence of such an alienation the plaintiffs' cause of action does not arise until the widow's estate comes to an end." Applying this principle we hold that plaintiffs had no cause of action to sue for a declaration in regard to the Will while Ghulam Muhammad was still alive. He had power to revoke the Will at any time, and it was, therefore, not certain until his death that it would take effect at all. We hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs' cause of action arose upon the death of Ghulam Muhammad, i. e., on the 17th of March 1900.

The next question is whether the limitation is governed by the Punjab Act I of 1900. The first column of the Schedule to this Act gives a description of the suits to which the Act applies. It is as follows: "Suit under the Customary Law of the Punjab, by a son or reversioner of a male proprietor, to have an alienation of ancestral land made by such proprietor declared void, except for the life of the alienor." Now, as a Will only takes effect after the death of the testator, a suit for a declaration in regard thereto would not be included in this description. The third column of the Schedule also shows that such a suit would not be governed by this Act, for it gives the time from which the period begins to run as dependent on the date when possession is given or is agreed to be given. Now, under a Will possession is neither given nor agreed to be given during the life-time of the testator. It is, therefore, clear that this Act does not apply to the present suit. The General Limitation Law as contained in the Indian Limitation Act is, therefore, applicable, and the present suit is governed by Article 120 of the second Schedule of that Act. The period under that Article is six years and the suit is, therefore, clearly barred by time.

Mr. Oertel, on behalf of the appellants, has referred us to Chukhun Lal Roy v. Lolit Mohan Roy (2). But the facts of that case are clearly distinguishable from those of the present. That case related to the construction to be given to a Will and was for a declaration of the plaintiffs' rights under it. The present case, on the other hand, is for a declaration that the Will shall not affect the plaintiffs' reversionary rights. The plaintiffs-appellants may, no doubt, have a fresh cause of action to sue for possession of the land after the death of the widow, but we are clear that the present suit for a declaration is barred by time. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against an order of the Additional Judge, Lucknow, dated 1st April 1913, modifying that of the Officiating Munsif, North Lucknow, dated 31st August 1912.

Mr. Mumtaz Husain, for the Appellants.

Babu Baslev Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises are as follows:—

A certain Muhammad Husain Khan mortgaged with possession in 1884 plot No. 192 in village Muhammad Nagar to Mendai Lal. Mendai Lal permitted Muhammad Husain Khan to remain in possession of the plot as his tenant, and in 1886 Muhammad Husain Khan planted trees on the plot. On the 16th March 1896 Muhammad Husain Khan mortgaged with possession 5/8ths of his 5-annas 4-pies share in the village to Ram Prasad. According to the terms of the mortgage of 1896 it appears that the 5/8ths share was separated off and that it was the intention of the parties that the share so separated should be given into the possession of the mortgagee. The deed refers to a list in which the specific plots mortgaged are entered. That list is not before the Court. There is no evidence of value to show whether plot No. 192 was or was not included in the property mortgaged by the deed of 1896. But granting for the sake of argument that it was so included, it is clear that Ram Prasad would not have obtained, by virtue of his mortgage, any rights with regard to plot No. 192 other than the rights of a subsequent mortgagee. Later on Mendai Lal brought a suit on the foot of his mortgage-deed and obtained a decree. Ram Prasad was not a party to that decree. In execution of the decree the land in No. 192 was brought to sale and purchased by Maulvi Muhammad Husain in 1900, and in 1902 the vendee transferred his rights in the land of the plot in question to Musammat Chhoti Begam. Ram Prasad brought a suit on the foot of the mortgage of 1896 and obtained a decree in 1910. He did not make Chhoti Begam a party to that suit. In execution of the latter decree Ram Prasad purchased the mortgaged property. Ram Prasad subsequently sued in the Court of the Munsif of North Lucknow for possession of plots Nos. 192 and 193 (which he described as groves) and for mesne profits on account of the produce of the groves for two years, and costs, and asked that if any charge should be found upon any of the lands he should be allowed to take possession after payment of the charge. The learned Munsif decided that Ram Prasad could not obtain possession of plot No. 192, as his only possible right with regard to that plot could be the right of a subsequent mortgagee, and decided that a suit for redemption should not be included in a suit for possession. He further found that the amount of mesne profits, if any, was not proved. He, therefore, gave the plaintiff a decree for possession of No. 193 only. The learned Additional Judge on appeal modified the decree by the addition of a relief of Rs. 100 on account of mesne profits and of possession of No. 192 subject to the redemption of the mortgage of 1884.

In the present appeal it is prayed that the decree of the learned Additional Judge be set aside and the decree of the learned Munsif be restored. This appeal is not concerned with No. 193. With regard to the question of mesne profits I find that there is evidence on the record on which a decree for mesne profits can be passed. I consider that the learned Munsif was right in refusing to go into the question of redemption. The plaintiff sued as owner of No. 192 and as having been kept out of possession by the defendants. I do not consider that he could be permitted to join to this relief, the alternative relief for redemption. The two cases were inconsistent and contradictory. He certainly had no right to join these two reliefs, and, the learned Munsif rightly refused him permission to include both causes of action in the same plaint. On the materials before me, it would not be possible to decide whether Ram Prasad has or has not a right to redeem a 5/8ths share of No. 192. Nor is it even possible to decide whether Chhoti Begam has title to the trees standing on the ground or any portion of them. I am in no position to determine the question of redemption, and if I referred the matter to the Courts below, I should be practically commencing a new case. There can be no doubt as to the fact that Ram Prasad is not entitled to a decree for possession. Possession of No. 192 was originally with Muhammad Husain Khan who planted the trees. From Muhammad Husain Khan it passed to Mendai Lal, from Mendai Lal it passed to Maulvi Muhammad Husain, and from Maulvi Muhammad Husain it passed to Chhoti Begam. Possession cannot be obtained by Ram Prasad unless he has a right of redemption, and then only, when he has obtained redemption, either by private arrangement or through the Court. As I have already stated I do not consider that he can be allowed to have the question of redemption decided in this case.

Thus the appeal succeeds on every point. I decree the appeal accordingly and direct that the decree of the learned Additional Judge be set aside and the decree of the learned Munsif be restored. The respondent will pay his own costs and those of the appellants in this and the lower Courts. He will still have the remedy of instituting a suit for redemption, and the matter, should he institute such a suit, will come up as res integra. I have decided nothing, one way or the other, which can affect the decision of such a suit.

Custom or Muhammadan Law—Succession—Arains of Lahore depending on agriculture.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated the 12th January 1912, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Lahore, dated the 20th July 1910, decreeing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K.B., for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain and Lala Parduman Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are fully stated in the judgments of the Subordinate Judge and the Additional Divisional Judge and need not be repeated. The parties are Arains by caste and though they actually reside in Lahore City, they own land in the neighbourhood of that City and admittedly depend entirely upon agriculture for their living. The first and most important question before us is whether in matters of succession, they are governed by Muhammadan Law or by the rules of customary law which generally prevail among agriculturists of this Province. If it be found that among them custom and not the Muhammadan Law prevails, then it is not denied that plaintiffs as grandsons would be entitled to succeed to ⅛th of the landed property left by their grand-father, Sadar Din, and would have the right, quite apart from any question of gift, to redeem the mortgage effected by Sadar Din in 1882 in favour of Musammat Nathi, who is now represented by her assignee, Muhammad Bakhsh.

Both the Subordinate Judge and the Additional Divisional Judge are agreed in holding that the parties are governed by custom and after hearing Mr. Shafi on behalf of appellants, we are satisfied that this finding is correct. The principal appellant, Muhammad Din, frankly admitted before us that his family are agriculturists in the strict sense and that they cultivate their own lands and make their living by agriculture. In these circumstances, seeing that the parties are members of a large agricultural tribe, we can find no justification for differing from the concurrent finding of the Courts below upon this point, especially as plaintiffs have been able to cite at least three instances (those numbered as 2, 3 and 4 at page 9 of the paper-book) where among Arains of this class and residents of Lahore City, the customary rule of representation was recognized in matters of succession, grandsons succeeding along with sons. Furthermore, in Imam Din v. Dulo (1) which was a case relating to Arains of Muzang (a Lahore suburb), it was conceded in this Court that custom and not the shara governed the parties. Mr. Shafi, on behalf of appellants, relied upon three rulings of this Court, Miran Bakhsh v. Musammat Allajawai (2), Shib Dyal v. Musammat Chiragh Bibi (3) and Musammat Fakhur-un-Nissa v. Malik Rahim Bakhsh (4) but none of these cases are in point.

In Miran Bakhsh v. Musammat Allajawai (2) and Civil Appeal No. 353 of 1904, the parties were Arain flower-sellers, resident in Lahore and Amritsar, and as observed in those judgments, were in no sense agriculturists. In Musammat Fakhur-un-Nissa v. Malik Rahim Bakhsh (4) the parties were by origin Punjabi Arains but had for many generations lived amongst, and gave themselves out as being Muhammadan Sheikhs of Sabzi Mandi, a suburb of Delhi; they owned agricultural land but merely as market-gardners and capitalists and were (as Chatterji, J., remarks): "too well off to be actual cultivators themselves." Obviously this case is no authority for holding the present parties who are true agriculturists and actually cultivate their own lands, to be bound by Muhammadan Law simply because as a matter of convenience to themselves they live in Lahore City In point of fact, the ruling cited is against appellants, as at page 106 of the report, Chatterji, J. observed, " If they are really Arains, I should be inclined to give considerable weight to the argument that we should start with the presumption that they continued to follow the customs by which they were governed while in the Punjab." Again at page 121 the learned Judge points out that the circumstances of the Arains with whom he was dealing were peculiar and that they could not be regarded as ordinary agriculturist Arains.

We have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that appellants have failed to prove that the lower Courts are wrong in finding them to be governed by custom. Upon this we must further hold that plaintiffs were entitled to redeem the mortgage in question, and indeed Mr. Shafi admitted that this consequence must ensue if once we hold that custom and not Muhammadan Law applied.

The next question is whether plaintiffs are bound to repay appellants the whole or any part of the sum of Rs. 1,000 which the latter claim to have paid, out of their own pockets, to redeem the additional mortgage charge effected by Sadar Din on the 2nd May 1893. This was a charge upon the whole of the land belonging to Sadar Din and if appellants could satisfy us that they actually paid off the charge out of their own pockets, we would be inclined to hold that under sections 69 and 70 of the Indian Contract Act, they would have a right to be reimbursed by plaintiffs to the extent that the $\frac{1}{4}$th part of the mortgaged property (which is plaintiff's share) has been relieved of the charge upon it But the Additional Divisional Judge has found that the sum of Rs. 1,000 which was paid to the mortgagee in or about January 1909, when Sadar Din was alive, was paid from the joint family funds and not from appellants' own purse, and nothing has been said in appeal to show that this finding is incorrect. This mortgage charge was certainly paid off and according to the endorsement on the mortgage-deed, the payment was made by appellants, "Babat Sadar Din." The lower Appellate Court reads this endorsement as meaning that appellants made the payment but that the money came from Sadar Din, and the probabilities are all in favour of that supposition. There is admittedly no other property belonging to the family than that left by Sadar Din and as long as he lived, appellants had no independent source of income, so that presumably the money paid to the mortgagee came from the family funds then in the hands of Sardar Din.

As a result we agree with the conclusions of the lower Appellate Court and we accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case brought a suit to have it declared that they were entitled to have their water carried down a certain channel for the purpose of irrigation of the lands, and they also prayed for an order that if the defendants do not remove the bund which they have built, it may be removed by the Court. The Courts below have ordered that the obstruction shall be removed. The intention of the Judge in doing this was that the parties should, as far as the irrigation is concerned, be put in the same position in which they would have been before a partition which took place had they then been separate; that is to say, the removal of the bund should cause the plaintiffs' land to be irrigated as it was previously, to the partition. It is argued that the Judge ought to have gone further, and to have framed an issue to see whether the complete removal of the bund was necessary for this purpose. Such an issue might have been framed under the pleadings as they stand ; it was not framed, however, and the lower Court on being asked to frame it, declined. In our opinion if he considered that the determination of that issue was necessary for the right decision of the suit it was his duty to frame such an issue. It does not, however, appear to us clear that such an issue was necessary for the right decision of the suit. The facts of the case not clearly indicating that this was so, the intention of the Judge, as we have said, was to restore the state of things as existed before the partition, and we cannot hold that it was necessary to frame the issue in order to produce this result. We accordingly cannot accede to the argument that the Judge has erred in point of law in not framing the issue. At the same time we must not be understood as taking the view that the Judge has finally decided that the removal of the bund will restore the state of things which had existed before.

The appeal is therefore, dismissed with costs

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Mortgage—Suit for interest on bond executed after mortgage—Consideration—Abstention from suit—Suit to defeat provisions of any law.

The plaintiffs sued for interest due on a mortgage but later on obtained from the mortgagor bonds for further sums of interest, and then sued for the amounts due on those bonds. The first Court decreed the claim, but the Appellate Court held that as the mortgagees had no rights left which they could enforce under the mortgage, the bonds were without consideration:

Held, that the bonds were executed in return for plaintiffs' abstaining to sue for the interest, and that in view of the fact that the bonds were executed before the case of Chaudhri Kundan Mal v. Sardar Allah Dad Khan, 5 Ind. Cas. 821, 19 P. R. 1910, 36 P. W. R. 1910, 167 P. L. R. 1910, had been decided, the plaintiffs were under the bona fide impression that their suit would succeed, if brought, and that, therefore, section 23 of the Contract Act did not apply.

A claim which is barred by Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, is not on exactly the same footing as a time-barred claim. A Court is bound to dismiss a time-barred suit, even though limitation be not pleaded by the defendant but a Court is not bound to take up proprio motu the question of a suit being barred by Order II, rule 2. The rule is a provision in favour of a defendant of which he may or may not choose to avail himself, the option lies with him.

Muhammad Nur v. Musammat Mahroia, 37 P. R. 1885, referred to.

If an intending litigant bona fide forbears a right to litigate a question of law or fact which it is not vexatious or frivolous to litigate, he does give up something of value. It is a mistake to suppose it is not an advantage, which a suitor is capable of appreciating, to be able to litigate his claim, even if he turns out to be wrong.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Respondent.

GOPAL DAS v. GHULAM MOHY-UD-DIN.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are as stated by the learned Divisional Judge, namely, that the plaintiffs, having sued for interest due on a mortgage, later on obtained from the mortgagor bonds for further sums of interest, and now sue for the amounts due on those bonds. The first Court decreed the claim, making, however, some reduction in the amount claimed as interest on the bonds. The learned Divisional Judge held that there was no consideration for the bonds and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appeal to this Court, asking that the decree of the first Court should be restored. The plaintiffs had in the Divisional Court lodged cross-objections as regards the reduction in the interest made by the first Court but all that is asked in this Court, is that the decree of the first Court should be restored.

Two questions only have been argued before us.

(1) Whether the contract is void for want of consideration, and

(2) Whether it is void on account of the consideration being opposed to provisions of law.

It is admitted by the learned Advocate for the appellants that in the absence of the bonds a suit to recover the principal sum due under the mortgage or the interest for which the bonds were executed would be barred by Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned Divisional Judge holds that as the mortgagees had no rights left which they could enforce under the mortgage, the bonds are without consideration. The following rulings are quoted by the Divisional Judge; Alimoodden v. Wazeer Ali (1), Banda Ali v. Banspat Singh (2), Ram Lal v. Makhan Mal (3). The first of these is a case in which it was held that to refrain from bringing a suit which, if brought, would be dismissed as time-barred, is no consideration. This ruling was, of course, passed before section 23, sub-clause 3, of the Contract Act, as it now stands, was made law. The Allahabad ruling does not seem to us to be of much assistance; the plaintiff's suit was dismissed because it was held that the bond on which he sued was executed under duress. The Punjab ruling lays down that the withdrawal of a suit, which the plaintiff knew to be a claim to recover monies due on a wagering contract, is no consideration for a hundi.

None of these rulings seem to us to be exactly in point. We are not prepared to admit that a claim which is barred by Order II, rule 2, is on exactly the same footing as a time-barred claim. A Court is bound to dismiss a time-barred suit, even though limitation be not pleaded by the defendant, while there is authority for the proposition that a Court is not bound to take up proprio motu the question of a suit being barred by Order II, rule 2 [See Muhammad Nur v. Musammat Mahroia (4).] As to the Punjab ruling, we note that a wagering transaction is clearly a matter opposed to public policy.

Moreover, there seems to us to be another substantial difference between the above quoted cases and the present one. The above cases are cases in which it seems to have been clear that the plaintiff knew that he had no right to bring a suit, and that if he did sue, his suit would inevitably be dismissed; to refrain from bringing such a suit is, therefore, held not to constitute consideration. But in the present case can it be said that the parties thought at the time when these bonds were executed that the plaintiffs were debarred from recovering the interest due by suit? We may even go further and ask whether it can be said that such a suit, if it had been brought, would have been dismissed. No doubt the law on the subject is now understood to be as laid down in Chaudhri Kundan Mal v. Sardar Allah Dad Khan (5), but this interpretation of the law is modern (we do not, in saying this, intend to cast doubts on the correctness of the interpretation) and we feel sure that when these bonds were executed both parties were under the bona fide impression that the plaintiffs could have sued for their interest. And we go further and say that if plaintiffs had sued for their interest, their suit would very probably have been decreed. We doubt very much whether the applicablity of Order II, rule 2, would have occurred to the mind of either litigant or to the Court. The remarks on page 153 of Pollock's Indian Contract Act, 3rd Edition, seem to us appropriate. We read here: "Every man who honestly thinks he has a claim deserving to be examined is free to bring it before the proper Court, and have the judgment of the Court on its merits, without which judgment it cannot be certainly known whether the claim is well-founded or not, for the maxim that every man is presumed to know the law... is clearly inapplicable here. That which is abandoned or suspended in a compromise is not the ultimate right or claim of the party, but his right of having the assistance of the Court to determine, and, if admitted or held good, to enforce it. 'If an intending litigant bona fide forbears a right to litigate a question of law or fact which it is not vexatious or frivolous to litigate, he does give up something of value. It is a mistake to suppose it is not an advantage, which a suitor is capable of appreciating, to be able to litigate his claim, even if he turns out to be wrong.'"

That the bonds were executed in return for plaintiffs' abstaining to sue for the interest we have no doubt, and further we are of opinion that the plaintiffs were under the bona fide impression that such a suit would succeed if brought. We hold, therefore, that there was consideration for the bonds.

As to the plea that the consideration was of such a nature as to "defeat the provisions of any law," we note that in this case the consideration was the abstaining from bringing a suit to recover the interest. Now assuming for purposes of argument that to bring such a suit is forbidden by Order II, rule 2, it certainly cannot be said that there is any provision of law forbidding plaintiffs from abstaining from bringing such a suit. Further, we may add that in our opinion Order II, rule 2, is a provision in favour of a defendant of which he may, or may not, choose to avail himself; the option lies with him. We are, therefore, of opinion that section 23 of the Contract Act is in no way applicable to the present case.

We accept this appeal and reversing the decision of the lower Appellate Court we restore the decree of the first Court. The defendant will pay costs, calculated on Rs. 650, in all Courts.

Appeal accepted.

As a general rule, the right of foreclosure and the right of redemption should be co-extensive, and every agreement by which the right of redemption is fettered for the benefit of the mortgagee without any corresponding advantage to the mortgagor must be examined with close scrutiny.

Thus, where a mortgage-deed contained onerous and one-sided conditions, the effect of some of which was to permit the mortgagee to call in the mortgage-money together with the money spent by him in making improvements on the mortgaged property at any time he liked, and to postpone redemption till the expiry of 60 years from the date when the mortgage would be converted from simple into usufructuary.

Held, that the covenant postponing redemption was an unreasonable fetter on the equity of redemption and could not be enforced, so that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem irrespective of that fetter.

The onus of proving want of consideration lies heavily on the party alleging it, but where it is found that he is a man weak in intellect and hard of hearing who played the part of an irresponsible puppet in the hands of the opposite party, the onus is mitigated to some extent in this way that the Court may for its own satisfaction demand from the opposite party, if it thinks proper under the circumstances of the case, reliable evidence of the fact that there was no want of consideration as alleged.

In the absence of corroborative evidence, no reliance can be placed on the entries of oral loans as appearing in a lakha bahi, inasmuch as it is not a regular account-book kept in the ordinary course of business from day to day.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen and Syed Amjad Ali, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for redemption of a mortgage effected by Zalim Singh in favour of Shankar Singh on the 14th November 1895, and of a deed of further charge executed by Zalim Singh in favour of the same person on the 5th June 1896. The property mortgaged comprised a 5 biswas share in the village of Tajpur including sir plots belonging to the mortgagor. The mortgage purported to have been made in lieu of Rs. 5,000 out of which Rs. 2,131 were left with the mortgagee for payment of certain prior incumbrances due to him and another person named Balwant Singh, Rs. 219-6-0 were left for payment to Chunni Lal on account of a promissory-note dated Magh Sudi 5th, Sambat 1951, Rs. 511-10-0 were left for payment of an unregistered bond held by Sardar Singh dated the 14th September 1895, and Rs. 1,912-8 were stated to have been credited towards some money due on account of books, and balance to have been paid partly for the purchase of stamp and partly at the time of execution and registration. The deed of further charge purported to have been executed in lieu of Rs. 100 out of which Rs. 90 were credited towards money said to have been due to the mortgagee on account books, and the balance was stated to have been paid in cash partly for the purchase of stamp and partly before the Sub-Registrar. The mortgage deed provided that the mortgagee shall pay Rs. 2,131 on account of prior mortgages due to the mortgagee and Balwant Singh jointly when those mortgages became payable 4 years and 4 months later and obtain possession over the mortgaged property, that till such payment and the recovery of possession, the balance of the mortgage money was to bear interest at annas twelve per cent. per mensem, compoundable annually, that from the date of possession the profits of the mortgaged property were to be appropriated in lieu of interest, and that if the mortgagee wanted to recover his money he would be entitled to do so at any time after giving a month's notice to the mortgagor, but the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem the mortgage for a period of 60 years from the date of the recovery of possession by the mortgagee of the mortgaged property. The allegations of the plaintiff were that he did not receive anything more than Rs. 1,451-5 out of the consideration specified in the mortgage of the 14th November 1895, and Rs. 9/8 out of the consideration specified in the deed of further charge dated the 5th June 1896, and that the mortgagee, taking undue advantage of the fact that he was an old banker (Mahajan) of the plaintiff and that the plaintiff was hard of hearing, fraudulently got unreasonable and unconscionable conditions entered in the mortgage deed and got sixty (sath) years entered instead of seven (sat) years as the period for which redemption was to be postponed from the date of the recovery of possession. The suit was filed on the 31st May 1912, and it is admitted by the parties that till that date the mortgagee had not paid the sum of Rs. 2,131 left with him for payment of the prior mortgage and deed of further charge due to him and Balwant Singh, or recovered possession over any portion of the mortgaged property. It is in fact conceded that a suit for redemption of the said mortgage and the deed of further charge was then pending on behalf of the heirs of Shankar Singh, who had died meanwhile, against Balwant Singh, the co-mortgagee, for possession of a two and a half biswas share comprised in the mortgage and deed of further charge, held by Sankar Singh and Balwant Singh jointly, and that the money due on the said mortgage and deed of further charge was not paid to Balwant Singh till the 16th May 1912.

The main defence, so far as it is material for the purposes of this appeal, was that the plaintiff had received the full amount of consideration specified in the deeds of mortgage and further charge, that the allegations of fraud and undue influence were incorrect, and that the suit for redemption was premature and not maintainable. The pleas of fraud and undue influence were given up during the hearing of the suit in the Court below. The learned Subordinate Judge found on the other issues that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he had not received the consideration money specified in the deeds of mortgage and further charge, that the covenant, postponing redemption for a period of 60 years from the date of the recovery of possession, operated as an unreasonable fetter on the equity of redemption and was not enforceable. He gave a decree accordingly for redemption of the mortgage and deed of further charge in question on payment of Rs. 10,777-7-0 to the mortgagee. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 who are the heirs of Shankar Singh have appealed from that decree, contending that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for redemption and that the amount of mortgage money awarded by the Court below was inadequate. The plaintiff has filed cross-objections, impugning the finding of the Court below in regard to the payment of the disputed consideration money and the amount adjudged as payable to the mortgagee.

In view of the onerous and one-sided conditions contained in the mortgage deed, the effect of which is to permit the mortgagee to call in his money at any time he likes and to postpone redemption till the expiry of 60 years from the date of the recovery of possession, we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the covenant postponing redemption was an unreasonable fetter on the equity of redemption. As a general rule the right of foreclosure and the right of redemption should be co-extensive, and every agreement by which the right of redemption is fettered for the benefit of the mortgagee without any corresponding advantage to the mortgagor must be examined with close scrutiny. The mortgage deed in this case provided for the conversion of a simple into a usufructuary mortgage on payment of the money left with the mortgagee on account of certain prior incumbrances when they fell due, thereby securing to the mortgagee the fullest possible opportunity of realizing his interest from the profits. Yet it allowed the mortgagee to call in his money at any moment he liked giving a month's notice to the mortgagor and restrained the mortgagor from seeking redemption before the expiry of 60 years from the date of possession and further burdened him with an obligation to pay the arrears of rent and takavi which may be then due by the tenants and the costs of wells constructed, partition obtained or suits instituted by the mortgagee for any purpose whatsoever in augmentation of the principal and interest due on the mortgage. If a mortgagee constructs wells, obtains partition or files suits against tenants for arrears of rent, enhancement or ejectment, he does so evidently for his immediate benefit, or in other words, to increase his profits from the mortgaged property. It would be unreasonable under the circumstances to allow him to enjoy the benefit of the increased profits for an unduly long period and also to recover the money spent in making improvements from the mortgagor at the time of redemption. Section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act defines the purposes for which a mortgagee in possession may spend money and add it with interest thereon to the principal sum secured by the mortgage. The covenants contained in the mortgage deed thus enable the mortgagee by heavy outlays on improvements to prevent redemption for a much longer period than 60 years. The principle laid down in Sayad Abdul Hak Sardar Dilor Jung Bahadur v. Ghulam Jilani (1) and Sari v. Motiram Mahadu (2), which was followed by this Court in Durga Singh v. Nawab Mirza Muhammad Rasa Husain Khan (3), applies to this case and the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the mortgage irrespective of the fetter which the mortgage deed seeks to impose.

The term of 60 years provided for redemption does not moreover begin till the mortgagee succeeds in obtaining possession from the prior mortgagees of the mortgaged property. The suit was filed before the mortgagee had succeeded in obtaining possession, or in other words, before the term of 60 years had begun to operate and it cannot therefore in either view of the case be regarded as premature.

The finding of the Court below as to the amount of the mortgage money payable by the mortgagor does not, however, appear to be satisfactory. The learned Subordinate Judge rightly held that the onus of proving want of consideration lay on the plaintiff. But in view of his subsequent findings the onus does not appear to lie on him as heavily, as the learned Subordinate Judge supposed, for he found from the impression made and the conduct of the plaintiff in the witness-box that the plaintiff was a man of weak intellect and hard of hearing, and that he had played the part of an irresponsible puppet in the hands of the mortgagee in this transaction. The learned Subordinate Judge further found that the plaintiff was not even capable of deposing to the facts mentioned by him in his deposition and that they too had most probably been put into his mouth by some interested persons before he stepped into the witness-box. He was not even satisfied as to how the documents were obtained and the plaintiff made to set his hand on them. On these findings, it was obviously dangerous for the Court below to have accepted, as it would be unsafe for us to accept, the statements made by the defendants as to the payment of the consideration, unless corroborated by reliable evidence. The first item credited in the mortgage deed, dated the 14th November 1895, is a sum of Rs. 1,912-8-0 said to have been due on a book account. The account book containing this is a mere ledger, the first three pages of which purport to bear the plaintiff's accounts, authenticated by his alleged signatures. Those signatures were not shown to the plaintiff in the course of his examination, and if the evidence of Beche Lal, one of the attesting witnesses of the mortgage deed in suit, be true the entries were made in the account book, and the signature of Zalim Singh taken either at the time of execution of the mortgage deed or about a month or so prior to its execution. The plaintiff was at that time on bad terms with Balwant Singh and was evidently at the mercy of those who fed and supported him. Beche Lal says that Shankar Singh was feeding and supporting Zalim Singh, but whether the latter was being fed and supported from the income derived from his sir lands or from money borrowed from others, the evidence does not make clear. The accounts entered in the lekha bahi comprise various items of oral loans said to have been advanced between the 18th October 1894 and the 15th February 1896. But in the absence of corroborative evidence, apart from the alleged signatures of the plaintiff, the authenticity of which has been left undetermined, no reliance can be placed on the lekha bahi, inasmuch as it is not a regular account book, kept in the ordinary course of business from day to day. The other items of consideration mentioned in the mortgage deed in suit relate to monies said to have been left for payment to Chunni Lal and Sardar Singh on account of a promissory-note stated to have been due to the former and an unregistered bond held by the latter. But the promissory-note and the bond aforesaid have not been filed or otherwise proved by independent evidence. Chunni Lal is admittedly at present in the service of the defendants, and Sardar Singh was the father of defendant No. 2. The Court below did not definitely find whether any money was actually due by the plaintiff to Chunni Lal and Sardar Singh. It did not determine one way or the other whether the money entered as credited towards the bahi debt in the mortgage deed in suit and the deed of further charge dated the 5th June 1896, was actually due, and in view of the circumstances of the case, we do not consider ourselves justified in coming to a finding on the question of consideration without giving the contesting defendants an opportunity of establishing, by such evidence as they may possess, that the items credited in the deeds of mortgage and further charge or left with the mortgagee for payment to Chunni Lal and Sardar Singh, were actually due and that the entire consideration was paid in the manner described in the said deeds. We are not in any way relieving the plaintiff of the burden that lay on him of proving that he had not received the consideration. But we consider it desirable that we should have more definite materials placed at our disposal either by the plaintiff or by the defendants, to enable us to determine whether the items of consideration entered in the deeds in suit are genuine. The award of interest by the learned Subordinate Judge on the profits of the sir plots which remained in the possession of the mortgagor, also seems to be questionable, for the defendants have already been allowed interest on the sum of Rs. 2,869 claimed to have been paid by the mortgagee from the date of the mortgage till the 16th May 1912. The mortgagee was either entitled to the profits of the mortgaged property, or if possession was wrongfully withheld from him to interest on the amount actually paid by him, but not to both. The mortgagor having failed to deliver possession over sir plots, the mortgagee was entitled to recover interest on the money paid by him till the date on which he recovered possession over the mortgaged property. The mortgagee rights held by Bhup Gir were assigned to Shankar Singh and Balwant Singh by a sale deed dated the 15th August 1881. The portion of the mortgage money due to Balwant Singh is stated to have been paid, but that due to Shankar Singh is stated to be still recoverable. The plaintiff, however, alleges that he had paid both the assignees, but the Court below has recorded no finding on the point.

Before determining the amount due to the mortgagee, we direct the Court below accordingly to take evidence on the following matters and report its findings to this Court within two months from this date.

1. Whether any money was due by the plaintiff to Shankar Singh on the book account, as entered in the deeds of mortgage and further charge in suit and, if so, how much ?

2. Whether any money was due to Chunni Lal and Sardar Singh by the plaintiff as described in the said deeds and whether Shankar Singh paid the same and, if so, when and how much ?

3. Whether a sum of Rs. 25-8-0 was paid to the plaintiff at the time of the execution of the mortgage deed in suit ?

4. What is the amount of the mortgage money payable by the plaintiff for the redemption of the deeds of mortgage and further charge in suit, taking into account the amounts admitted to have been received by the plaintiff or proved to have been paid by him ?

5. Whether the mortgage-money due to Bhup Gir was paid by the plaintiff and, if so, how much and when ?

Ten days from the date of the finding will be allowed to the parties for filing objections.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 107H—Muafi, heritable but not transferable—Transferee from muafidar, right of—Under-proprietary rights, non-accrual of.

A transferee from a muafidar who has only a heritable but not a transferable interest in the muafi, cannot claim under-proprietary rights under section 107H of the Oudh Rent Act.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated the 8th April 1914, upholding the order of the Deputy Commissioner, Bara Banki, dated the 14th July 1913, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, Bara Banki, dated the 12th May 1913.

Mr. Sarju Prasad Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. H. Thomas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Commissioner has found, as a matter of fact, that Narbadapuri was dispossessed for a time between 1893 and 1896; and that he must, therefore, be holding under a new grant since that time; and that consequently he has not held rent-free continuously for fifty years. This finding of fact cannot be disputed in third appeal. Appellant then urges that the land was acquired by him, in perpetuity, by written instrument and for a valuable consideration, and that, therefore, he must, under section 107H, Oudh Rent Act, be held to be an under-proprietor,

The flaw in this argument, however, is that appellant, who professes to have purchased Narbadapuri's rights from Ajudhia Prasad, who purchased them at auction sale, cannot have a better title than his predecessors-in-title. At Settlement, in the wajib-ul-arz, it is distinctly recorded that the muafidar had a heritable, but not a transferable, interest in the muafi: and there is absolutely nothing to show that this condition has ever since been amended.

Ajudhia Prasad and appellant, therefore, purchased what Narbadapuri had not the right to sell. They have not, therefore, acquired a right under section 107H, Oudh Rent Act.

I, therefore, uphold the Commissioner's order and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage before 1st January 1902, effect of, upon sir—Sir, when ceases to be so—Ex-proprietary rights, how surrendered and extinguished—Abandonment, actual—Limitation for claim of ex-proprietary rights—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 7A.

A mortgage with or without possession before 1st January 1902 has no effect whatsoever upon sir, so that a sir thus mortgaged does not cease to be so.

A holder of sir when his proprietary rights are transferred cannot surrender his ex-proprietary rights except by actual abandonment.

If a sir-holder fails to take up his ex-proprietary rights, in Agra within six months, and in Oudh within a year, after their accrual, they are extinguished.

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated the 26th May 1913.

Mr. J. Jackson, for the Appellant.

Babu Pertab Chandra Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

TWEEDY, J. M.—This is a third appeal under section 36 of Act III. The admitted facts are that the father of the respondent gave a usufructuary mortgage of his sir in 1871 and the mortgagee remained in possession until 1907, when he obtained a decree for foreclosure and the property was sold. The sale was ultimately confirmed in December 1910. No application for mutation seems to have been made by the purchaser for some time, and it was not until April 1912 that the Tahsildar instituted a case under section 36 and the respondent then claimed occupancy rights. It is important to note that until the Tahsildar called the attention of the respondent to the fact that ex-proprietary rights had arisen he made no attempt to claim them.

The first Court held that the claim was time-barred as the rights were created in December 1910 and no attempt was made to take them up until April 1912, while the respondent admits that he has been out of possession of the sir since 1871. In first appeal the Deputy Commissioner upheld the finding of the Deputy Collector but apparently on totally different grounds. He held that the land ceased to be sir when it was transferred by mortgage in 1871. This view is clearly wrong, and it has been repeatedly held by the Board that a mortgage with or without possession before 1st January 1902 has no effect whatever upon sir. In second appeal the Commissioner cancelled the erroneous view of the Deputy Commissioner, but found that the Court of first instance was wrong in holding that the claim was time-barred as it was made not under section 7A of the Rent Act, but under section 36 of Act III. This is a mistaken idea as no rights arise under section 36, which is purely mandatory. It prescribes the procedure which the Revenue Authorities must adopt when occupancy rights have been created in Agra under section 10 of Act II and in Oudh under section 7A of the Rent Act. It is perhaps misleading as it is couched in too general terms, and directs the Collector when rights of occupancy have been created to mark off the area in which such rights exist, and to fix the rent. It omits to state that, the Collector during the course of the inquiry must ascertain not only that the rights arose, but are still alive. It is settled law that a holder of sir when his proprietary rights are transferred cannot surrender his ex-proprietary rights except by actual abandonment. In Agra if he fails to take them up within six months they are extinguished, and in Oudh section 129 bars their recovery after a year has elapsed. The unpublished ruling of the Board quoted by the Commissioner does not touch this point at all. It is clear then that section 36 must be read along with section 129 and that in the present instance as the rights arose in December 1910 and were not claimed until April 1912, they were dead and gone when the case under section 36 was instituted. There can be no reasonable doubt that the respondent had no intention of claiming these rights until the Tahsildar put the plea for their existence into his mouth.

I would decree the appeal with costs and reversing the decision of both the lower Appellate Courts would restore the finding of the Assistant Collector.

BAILLIE, S. M.—I concur.

Every Revenue Court in Oudh has the power of review—the Courts subordinate to the Board having only a limited power in that respect, as provided by section 114 and Order XLVII, Civil Procedure Code, while the Board having a special and wider power as provided by section 120A of the Oudh Rent Act.

A decree which is based on and solely due to fraud by a party can be held to be a nullity, even though it cannot be said to have the effect of preventing an opposite party from placing his case properly before the Court.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Appellants.

Babu Lachhman Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Although I have made up my mind that the Commissioner's finding of fact that no fraud has been proved, cannot be disturbed in this second appeal, there are several features connected with this case which make it desirable to remark on the proceedings which have taken place at some length.

Appellant had issued a notice of ejectment against the respondent. The latter contested the notice on the ground that he had ex-proprietary rights and produced a sale-statement dated dated 21st July 1885. This, as it stood, showed that ex-proprietary rights had been reserved in favour of respondent's father in the whole of certain sir lands which were then being sold by auction. The result was that a decree was given in respondent's favour cancelling the notice and upheld on appeal by the Commissioner. An application for review was subsequently presented in the Commissioner's Court, in which it was alleged that the copy of sale-statement filed by the respondent was incomplete and that endorsements on the back of the sale-statement showed that the order reserving ex-proprietary rights in the entire area had been withdrawn and rights reserved only in an area of 1 bigha 10 biswas 10 dhurs. The Commissioner recorded that the correct copy then submitted made it clear that the decree was wrong and that appellant had not got ex-proprietary rights in the entire area in question but only in one number. He held, however, that he was not under the law in Oudh entitled to review his judgment under section 114 and Order XLVII of the Civil Procedure Code. The line of argument taken was as follows.

The Civil Procedure Code applies in Oudh where not inconsistent with the Rent Act. Section 120A of the Rent Act provides power of review for the Board of Revenue, but there are no sections providing for review by other Courts. The Rent Act, therefore, did not contemplate review by other Courts and the Civil Procedure Code in this matter must, therefore, be considered to be inconsistent.

It appears to me clear that this argument is entirely fallacious. The power of review given to the Board by section 120A is of a special character and very much wider than the power given to Courts in general by the Civil Procedure Code. To confer this power a special section was necessary. No special section was necessary to give Courts the powers contemplated by the Civil Procedure Code. There is, in my opinion, no inconsistency between the provisions of the Rent Act and the exercise of powers of review by Revenue Courts in Oudh. The matter is made to my mind absolutely clear when it is considered that section 120A was inserted by Act XX of 1890. If the line of argument taken by the Commissioner is accepted, Revenue Courts in Oudh had powers of review till Act XX of 1890 was passed. There was certainly up to that date nothing to suggest that they had no such powers. Is it possible to conceive that the Legislature then by adding the section giving special powers of review to the Board intended to take away the powers of review enjoyed by other Courts and did not in any way express its intention in so many words. There appears to be no doubt whatsoever that Revenue Courts in Oudh have the power of review allowed to Civil Courts. It would be impossible to conceive they are not being given such powers and being unable to correct any error however obvious in a judgment recorded by them.

This matter does not, however, affect the case before us. Review was refused and the order giving respondent ex-proprietary rights in all the land sold was maintained. In the present case it was maintained that the previous decree was a nullity because it had been obtained by the fraud of the respondent. The Court of first instance accepted this view, thereby giving respondent only the land which he was in fact entitled to. The question whether any decision obtained by means of fraud could be treated as a nullity was argued at some length before me. For appellant, I have been referred to Bansi Lal v. Dhapo (1), Barkat-un-nissa v. Fazal Haq (2) and Lakshmi Charan Saha v. Nur Ali (3). For respondent it was urged that the fraud which made a judgment a nullity must be such as to prevent an opposite party from placing his case properly before the Court and Mahomed Gulab v. Mahomed Sulliman (4) and Mohesh Chandra Bose v. Radha Kishen Bhattacharjee (5) were cited in support. Having considered all the rulings referred to, there appears to me to be no doubt that a decree which is based on and solely due to fraud by a party can be held to be a nullity, even though it cannot be said to have the effect of preventing an opposite party from placing his case properly before the Court.

The ground, however, on which the Commissioner decided was that fraud by the respondent had not been proved. It is certain that respondent's father was well aware that ex-proprietary rights had been retained only in a limited area. It is extremely unlikely that respondent himself in examining the file regarding the sale case and obtaining a copy of sale-statement did not become aware that the sale-statement really restricted the area of ex-proprietary land, but I am not prepared to say that the Commissioner's finding is untenable, more specially because the ex-proprietary lands and the lands held without such rights have been included in a single holding in the patwari's papers and the difference between the two tenures therefore obliterated. It is within the bounds of possibility that respondent did not know that the copy he produced was incomplete, and on this ground I decline in second appeal to interfere with the Commissioner's decision.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed, but in view of the fact that respondent got the land to which he is clearly not entitled, I pass no orders as to costs.

CHANDA—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Second Appeal—Finality of order passed on appeal by judgment-debtor against order refusing to set aside auction-sale of his immoveable property to decree-holder—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2, 47, 104, O. XXI, rr. 90, 92, O. XLIII, r. 1 (j)—Revision—Punjab Courts (Amendment) Act (IV of 1912), s. 70—Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 44.

An order of the Appellate Court in appeal by the judgment-debtor, under rule (1) (j) of Order XLIII of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, against the order of the Court executing the decree refusing, under rule 92 of Order XXI, to set aside, on his application under rule 90 of the said Order, the auction-sale of his immoveable property to the decree-holder, is not a decree within the meaning of sections 2 and 47 of the said Code, and consequently, under the force of sub-section (2) of section 104 of the Code, no second appeal lies therefrom to the Chief Court.

The Chief Court is not bound to interfere on revision with an order which is not so unjust or so perverse that it should not be allowed to stand.

Second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 1st October 1913, accepting the application for review of his own order, dated the 30th June 1913, and holding that the sale is invalid, thus reversing the order of the Munsif, 1st class, Delhi, dated the 19th March 1913, who sanctioned the sale.

Lala Madan Gopal, for the Appellant.

Bukhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Pleader for the respondent urges as a preliminary objection that no appeal lies to this Court in this case. The material facts are these. On the 8th February, 1913, the respondent's property was sold in execution of a decree which the appellant had obtained against him. On the 12th February he (the respondent) made an application to the executing Court, that of a Munsif, 1st class, Delhi, under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code, praying that the auction-sale be set aside on the ground of a material irregularity in publishing it, the result of the alleged irregularity, according to the respondent, being that his property, which was said to have been of the value of about Rs. 2,000, was sold to the decree-holder himself for Rs. 140. The Munsif disallowed the application on the 17th March, holding that no material irregularity had taken place in respect of the auction-sale in question; and he confirmed the sale on the same date. From the order of the Munsif, which was one passed under rule 92 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, the respondent preferred an appeal to the District Judge; the District Judge agreed with the Munsif that no material irregularity in the conduct of the sale had been proved and he dismissed the appeal on the 30th June 1913. On the 23rd July the respondent made an application for review of the order of the District Judge, dated the 30th June, urging inter alia that the auction-sale was invalid under Order XXXIV, rule 14, Civil Procedure Code, because the decree-holder (the present appellant) was mortgagee of the property sold in execution of his decree and the decree was for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage. The District Judge accepted the application for review and holding that the auction-sale was invalid, set it aside. This order is dated the 1st October 1913.

The decree-holder has preferred an appeal to this Court from the last-mentioned order under section 40 of the Punjab Courts Act, as it stood before its amendment by Act III of 1914, the order in question being treated by him as a decree. The respondent's Pleader urges by way of a preliminary objection that the order appealed from is not a "decree" within the meaning of sub-section (2) of section 2, Civil Procedure Code, but is an order not amounting to a decree, inasmuch as it has been passed by the District Judge upon an appeal preferred to him under Order XLIII, rule 1 (j), from the order of the Munsif under rule 92 of Order XXI of the Code refusing to set aside the auction-sale. It is contended that the District Judge having passed his order on an appeal properly filed in his Court under clause (j) of rule 1 of Order XLIII, read with section 104 of the Code, under sub-section (2) of the said section 104 no further or second appeal is competent to this Court from the order passed by the District Judge, it being perfectly immaterial for purposes of the competency of the appeal whether or not the grounds upon which the District Judge's order was based are covered by rule 90 of Order XXI of the Code. To this argument the reply of the appellant's Pleader is two-fold. In the first place, he says that an appeal lies from the District Judge's order under rule 7, Order XLVII, Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as there was no sufficient reason for granting the review within the meaning of the rule, read with rule 4 (2) of Order XLVII and, therefore, the application for review, which was in contravention of the provisions of rule 4, should not have been granted. In the second place, he urges that the order of the District Judge falls within section 47 of the Code and is tantamount to a "decree" and not an order, within the the meaning of section 2, sub-section (2), of the Code, the decision of the District Judge not being an adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order. In my opinion the first contention of the appellant's Pleader has no force. The respondent's application for review in the District Judge's Court did not contravene the provisions of rule 4 of Order XLVII, Civil Procedure Code, the provisions referred to in rule 7 (1) (b) being those contained in the proviso to rule 4 (2) and having no connection whatever with rule 1 of Order XLVII. The argument that the said rule 1, must be read, by necessary implication, into rule 4, sub-rule (2) is, in my opinion, unsound, and I must reject it; and it, therefore, follows that the application for review which the respondent had made to the District Judge did not contravene the provision of rule 4 of Order XLVII of the Code, and that no appeal lies to this Court from the order of the District Judge under rule 7.

The second contention of the appellant's pleader is, in my opinion, equally untenable. It is clear that the respondent made his application in the Munsif's Court under rule 90 of Order XXI of the Code, and the Munsif disallowed it under rule 92 of the said order. That order clearly was not a "decree" within the meaning of section 2, sub-section (2), of the Code, inasmuch as an appeal lay from that order under section 104, sub-section (1), read with Order XLIII (1) (j). An appeal was accordingly preferred from the said order as an order by the respondent to the District Judge, and the District Judge heard the appeal as an appeal from an order; and although he at first dismissed the appeal, he afterwards accepted an application for review of his own order and accepting the appeal held that the auction-sale was invalid and set it aside. To this order of the District Judge, on whatever grounds it was based, sub-section (2) of section 104 of the Code applies with full force, the words of the section being: "No appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal under this section." The expression "any order" is wide enough to include an order of the kind passed by the District Judge on the 1st October 1913, and with reference to the facts of this particular case, it means the order setting aside the auction-sale—the grounds upon which the order is based being a matter of no importance as regards the application of the said sub-section (2) of section 104. In my opinion it would be anamolous to hold that, although the order of the Munsif, which was one admittedly passed under rule 92 of Order XLI, was an "order" not amounting to a decree and was, therefore, appealable as an order to the District Judge under section 104 (1) read with Order XLIII (1) of the Code, the order of the District Judge passed in appeal was a "decree" within the meaning of section 47 read with section 2, sub-section (2), of the Code, and was appealable to this Court, notwithstanding the express provisions of sub-section (2) of section 104. In my opinion the order of the District Judge is covered by the terms of the said sub-section (2) of section 104 and no appeal lies from it.

For the reasons given, my conclusion is that no appeal lies to this Court from the order of the District Judge, dated the 1st October 1913. Next, the decree-holder's

CARL FORSTMANN v. H. T. S. FORREST.

Pleader prays that the memorandum of appeal may be treated as a petition for revision under section 70 of the Old Punjab Courts Act, or under section 44 of the new Act, because the District Judge has acted with material irregularity in setting aside the auction-sale upon a ground not covered by rule 90 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, and not urged by the respondent in his first application, dated the 12th February 1913. As I am not convinced that the order passed by the District Judge is so unjust or so perverse that it should not be allowed to stand, I am not prepared to interfere with it on the revision side. I accordingly dismiss the appeal. In the peculiar circumstances of the case, I leave the parties to pay their own costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 401 OF 1912.

May 19, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Holmwood and Mr. Justice Chapman.

CARL FORSTMANN, PROPRIETOR, BEECHWOOD ESTATE, DARJEELING—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

H. T. S. FORREST—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Malicious prosecution—Plaintiff accused of theft of electricity and acquitted—Dishonest conduct—Suit for damages—Liability of defendant, when arises—Malice in law—"Mains," use of, effect of—"Dishonestly" in s. 39, Electricity Act, meaning of—Electricity Act (III of 1903), s. 39—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379.

The plaintiff made certain alterations in the electric wires on his estate, which had the result of conducting the current directly from wires conveying the current supplied by the Municipality without passing through the meter supplied for the purpose of measuring the amount of energy consumed on his estate. The Chairman of the Municipality charged him for theft of electricity under section 39 (5) of the Electricity Act, but he was acquitted of all charges. He then sued the Chairman of the Municipality for damages for malicious prosecution:

Held, that the plaintiff may have been honestly mistaken in his views of law, but he cannot as a reasonable man have been ignorant of the fact that his alteration of the wires would cause wrongful loss to the Municipality and that on the principle that a man's intention should be held to be the reasonable and probable consequence of his acts, his conduct was dishonest within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code;

Held, further, that as the defendant had reasonable and probable cause for directing the prosecution of the plaintiff, there was no malice in law in his conduct and he was not liable for damages.

The use of the word "mains" for the words "any electric supply-line through which energy is supplied by the licensees" in section 39 of the Electricity Act in a notice issued by a Municipality Engineer to an accused, would operate as an admission against the Municipality and would be a good defence to a criminal charge under section 379, Indian Penal Code.

Where the word 'mains" is qualified by such words as "outside your meter," the accused gets full notice that he must not take current except through the meter.

The word "dishonestly" as used in section 39 of the Electricity Act is a legal expression having the same sense as that in which it is used in the Penal Code Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 28th June 1912.

FACTS.—The plaintiff is the owner of the Beechwood Estate, including the building called the Rink, at Darjeeling; and the defendant was the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling as well as the Chairman of the Municipality when the cause of action arose.

On the 7th June 1910 the Municipal Engineer submitted a report to the defendant as Chairman from the Assistant Electrician to the effect that he had discovered that the plaintiff had made certain alterations in the electric wires on his estate, which had the result of conducting the current directly into the Rink from wires conveying the current supplied by the Municipality without passing through the meter supplied for the purpose of measuring the amount of energy consumed on the Beechwood Estate, the consequence being that electricity could be used in the Rink without the Municipality having any means of checking the amount consumed. The report further stated that, as a matter of fact, electric light had been used in the Rink on the night of the 4th June and that the amount consumed on the occasion had necessarily not been recorded, there being no meter to do so.

The Engineer added this note on the report: "Chairman, this amounts to a charge of dishonestly abstracting energy and under section 29 of the Indian Electricity Act, this is deemed to be theft within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code."

CARL FORSTMANN v. H. T. S. FORREST.

The defendant as Chairman then saw the Engineer personally and having, from his explanations, grasped the situation, recorded this order on the report, 'Assistant Electrician to lay a First Information under section 379, Indian Penal Code, at the Sadar Thana—H. F. Ch. 7-6.'

This was done and on the 10th June the plaintiff was put under arrest by Inspector Daly, who took him to the katchery before a Magistrate where he was admitted to bail. The plaintiff was then tried on charges of theft of electricity on two occassions viz., the 2nd and the 4th June, and under section 39 (5) of the Indian Electricity Act, but was finally acquitted of all the charges on the 18th July 1910. Upon this the plaintiff sued the defendant for damages for malicious prosecution on 20th February 1911.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Mr. G. Sircar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R Das, Counsel, and Babu Ram Charn Mitra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge of Darjeeling dismissing the plaintiff's suit for damages for malicious prosecution. The learned Judge in a long and a very careful judgment has set out all the facts alleged and proved on both sides, and we need not recapitulate them here.

The plaintiff is a foreigner and seems to have exaggerated ideas of his own capacity as a lawyer. But we are unable to find that he has been able to establish any case that the defendant acted without reasonable and probable cause in directing his prosecution under section 39 of the Indian Electricity Act read with section 379, Indian Penal Code. Mr. Forstmann may have been honestly mistaken in his views of the law, but he cannot as a reasonable man have been ignorant of the fact that his alteration of the wires would cause wrongful loss to the Municipality and on the principle that a man's intention must be held to be the reasonable and probable consequence of his acts, his conduct was therefore dishonest within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code. It would, therefore, fall within the purview of section 379, Indian Penal Code, read with the connected sections of the Electricity Act. The only indignity to which Mr. Forstmann was put in consequence of his misconduct in helping himself, as the learned Judge puts it, to what did not belong to him was the unfortunate arrest by Inspector Daly and the parading of Mr. Forstmann through the streets of Darjeeling in Police custody. This, however, though a matter for which we think the head of the Police might well have expressed regret afterwards was, not an illegal act. That at most was an indiscretion on the part of the Inspector, Mr. Daly, no responsibility for which has been traced to anybody else, far less to the defendant; for we do not think that we can accept the statement which Mr. Forstmann says the Inspector Mr. Daly made to him to excuse his own conduct, namely, that the arrest was by order of Mr. Forrest. There is no evidence that Mr. Daly had any authority for making this statement or that in fact it had any foundation. Mr. Forrest was bound on the facts reported to him to hold that Mr. Forstmann had been dishonestly taking the Municipal supply of electricity without making any provision for paying for it; and as a matter of fact the Municipality did suffer loss which could not, owing to the plaintiff's conduct, be ascertained, and Mr. Forrest, therefore, had a reasonable and probable cause for his action. There was, therefore, no malice in law in Mr. Forrest's proved conduct. The plaintiff may have had his own private reasons for supposing hostility. But nothing has been averred or proved against Mr. Forrest which would indicate malice in fact, and indeed malice in fact is irrelevant in a case of this nature.

It is contended that Mr. Forstmann made a bona fide mistake of fact with reference to the meaning of the word 'mains' and was justified in making connection with the supply line, which he had originally laid himself but which was then outside his meter and used by the Municipality as the supply line for his premises. As a matter of fact the Engineer made a mistake in his letter Exhibit 6 in using the expression 'mains' instead of the words used in the law in section 39, 'any electric supply line through which energy is supplied by the licensees'. It might be that the misuse of the word 'mains' would operate as an admission against the Municipality and would be a good defence to a criminal charge under section 379, Indian Penal Code. But the qualification of the word 'mains' by the words 'outside your meter' gave the plaintiff full notice that he must not take current, except through the meter which would show the consumption for which payment had to be made.

As regards the argument that Mr. Forstmann's conduct was not dishonest in intention, using dishonesty in its everyday sense, it is only necessary to say that the word 'dishonestly' as used in section 39 is a legal expression having the same sense as that in which it is used in the Penal Code. While, therefore, the Criminal Court which heard the case might well have exercised its discretion in recording any conviction which was necessary under clause (5) of the section, which directly applied, rather than under clause (1) which involves the stigma of theft, there is no doubt that the prosecuting authority was bound to lay its charge strictly according to the letter of the law. As a matter of fact for reasons which do not commend themselves to us, the Magistrate gave the plaintiff the benefit of the doubt and acquitted him altogether. The learned Magistrate appears to have fallen into the same errors of law as the plaintiff himself. But the fortunate result to Mr. Forstmann, so far from inducing him to enter upon this retaliatory litigation, should have taught him the advisability of meddling no further with law.

We are unable to find either in law or in fact that the plaintiff can maintain any action for malicious prosecution, and the appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Revision—Finding of fact without fully considering evidence of parties—Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 44.

A finding of fact arrived at by an Appellate Court without fully considering and discussing the evidence of the parties is liable to be set aside in revision under section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act III of 1914.

Petition, under section 70 of Act IV of 1912, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 26th February 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Sialkot, dated the 21st December 1912, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

Lalas Moti Lal and Dharm Das Suri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are stated in the judgments of the Courts below. The Honorary Civil Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that it was not proved that the goods, of which the price was claimed by the plaintiff, had been actually delivered to the defendant, although the latter had ordered the goods as evidenced by the entry made by him in the plaintiff's book. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff's claim was clearly proved, because the defendant had ordered the goods, the goods were consigned to the defendant by rail, the defendant had refused to accept the Railway receipt, and he had made contradictory statements in Court when questioned as to whether the order in the plaintiff's book regarding the goods in question was in his handwriting or not.

The Honorary Civil Judge discussed in some detail the evidence of the parties as to the alleged delivery of the goods to the defendants; while, on the other hand, the Subordinate Judge has altogether omitted to consider that evidence and has contented himself with remarking that the evidence in support of the plaintiff's claim is sufficient and the claim has been clearly proved. It is admitted before me that the goods were not consigned by the plaintiff direct to the defendant's address, but that in the railway receipt plaintiff himself was entered as consignee, the receipt being endorsed in favour of the defendant. The receipt was sent per value payable post to the defendant, but he refused to accept it. The goods were then received from the Railway by the plaintiff's son; and it is alleged that he took the goods to the defendant's shop and delivered them to the latter. There is only oral evidence in support of this allegation, and the Honorary Civil Judge has given certain reasons for holding that evidence as unreliable. The Subordinate Judge does not discuss that evidence at all, and holds it to be reliable, simply on the ground that the defendant's statement regarding the order in the plaintiff's book is not straightforward and, therefore, no reliance can be placed on his word. This is not a sufficient ground for decreeing the plaintiff's claim, and the Subordinate Judge should have fully considered the evidence of the parties as to the alleged delivery or non-delivery of the goods in question and then come to a decision in the case.

I set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and send the case back to him for re-decision. The costs will abide the event.

A razinama executed by a mortgagor in favour of his mortgagee relinquishing occupancy rights in the mortgaged land and the complementary kabuliat given by the mortgagee operate to transfer the equity of redemption from the mortgagor to the mortgagee.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we have no doubt that the razinama and the kabuliat (assuming that we cannot look at the document Exhibit 37, which was contemporaneous with them) operate to transfer the equity of redemption to the mortgagee, in whose favour the Court had found that a sum of money was payable by the mortgagor. The case is not distinguishable from Tarachand Pirchand v. Lakshman Bhawani (1) and Vishnu Sakharam Phatak v. Kashinath Bapu Shankar (2). The words are apt to declare the relinquishment of all the rights of the mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee, and the transaction was such as was contemplated by the terms of the old section 74 of the Land Revenue Code. We reverse the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the original Court with costs throughout upon the plaintiff.

THE LIQUIDATOR OF THE LAHORE BANK, LTD., IN LIQUIDATION—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 214—Liability of Director, grounds of—Onus—Position of Director.

Section 214 of the Companies Act applies to the conduct of a Director as such, and anything done by him during the period of his directorship in his capacity as a debtor cannot be made a ground of liability under the section.

The onus is on the applicant to prove the facts which bring the case within the section.

Cavendish Bentinck v. Fenn, 12 A. C. 652 at p. 661; 57 L. J. Ch. 552; 57 L. T. 773; 36 W. R. 641, followed.

HANS RAJ BHANDARI v. LIQUIDATOR OF THE LAHORE BANK.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 27th April 1914, directing the appellant to pay to the respondent the sum of Rs. 79,720-13-10 and interest at Rs. 9 per cent. until payment in full.

Messrs. Bhagat Ram Puri and Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. C. Bevan Petman and Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case arises upon an application made in the winding-up of the Lahore Bank, Limited, under section 214 of the Indian Companies Act, VI of 1882; the respondent, who is the Liquidator of the Bank, claiming under that section that the appellant, Mr. Hans Raj Bhandari, who was a Director of the Company, should, in the summary proceeding, be called upon to pay Rs. 79,720-13-10 due by him on a pro-note, dated the 18th of May 1912. The Additional Judge, who heard the application, has acceded to the prayer of the Liquidator and in this appeal against his order, the sole point which I have to decide is whether the facts of the case bring it within the four corners of that section. I may state at once that the question, whether the appellant is a contributory and as such can be compelled under section 150 to pay the debt to the Liquidator, is not before me and I do not, therefore, pronounce any opinion upon it. The only matter, with which I am concerned in this misfeasance proceeding under section 214, is whether the conduct of the appellant as a past Director of the Company has been such as to justify an order under that section requiring him to pay to the Liquidator by way of compensation a sum of money equal to the amount due from him in his capacity as a debtor of the Company.

The facts of the case, which are relevant to the matter in issue, are simple and lie in the narrowest possible compass. There is no doubt that the appellant was a local Director of the Rawalpindi branch of the Bank for about two years from January 1909 to February 1911, that at the time when he became Director he, as a partner in a firm, owed a sum of about Rs. 50,000 to the Bank, and that during the period of his directorship he borrowed Rs. 5,000 and paid about Rs. 10,000 towards liquidating his liability. It appears that he consolidated his debt to the Bank by executing, on the 18th of May 1912, a pro-note for Rs. 68,000 with interest at 9 per. cent per annum and that the Bank went into liquidation some time about the end of 1913.

These facts are fully proved upon the record and do not admit of any dispute. Now it seems to me quite clear, and in fact it is admitted by the learned Counsel for the respondent, that section 214 applies to the conduct of a Director as such and that any act or omission of the appellant which took place before January 1909 or after February 1911, or anything done by him during that period in his capacity as a debtor, cannot be made a ground of liability under that section. The Court is, therefore, confined to the examination of the appellant's conduct as a Director from January 1909 to February 1911. It is necessary to state this proposition at the outset, because it appears to me that the learned Judge of the Court below, while recognizing its validity in the beginning of his judgment, has lost sight of it later on and has relied upon certain matters which are outside the period of directorship.

The learned Judge has set out in his judgment the portion of section 214 upon which the Liquidator bases his claim and which runs as follows:

"Where in the course of the winding-up of any Company under this Act, it appears that any past Director of such Company has become liable or accountable for any moneys of the Company, or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to the Company, the Court may. . . . ."

This section undoubtedly authorizes the recovery, at the instance of the Liquidator, of moneys for which the appellant has become accountable to the Company, and also of pecuniary loss sustained by the Company through the misfeasance or breach of trust by him. But it is clear that the onus of proving the facts which bring the case within the section is on the applicant, Vide Cavendish-Bentinck v. Fenn (1).

What then are the grounds upon which the Liquidator seeks to establish the liability of the appellant? After a careful consideration of the arguments advanced before me, it seems to me that there are only three points which can possibly be urged on behalf of the Liquidator and they are briefly as follows:—

(1) That the appellant did not, at the time of his appointment as Director, disclose his indebtedness.

(2) That he failed, during the period of his office as Director, to recover the debt due from him to the Company.

(3) That he took a loan of Rs. 5,000 during the same period which he was not authorized to do.

Taking the above points seriatim, I must say as regards No. 1 that there is not a particle of evidence on the record to prove that the appellant did not disclose his indebtedness. In fact it is hard to believe that the Directors of the Head Board did not, at that time, know that the appellant was indebted to the Company to the extent of about Rs. 50,000. The learned Counsel for the respondent has not drawn my attention to any evidence which goes to show that at that time the appellant owed any debt to any other person except the Bank. Moreover, it is the duty of the applicant to satisfy the Court that loss or damage resulted to the Company from the alleged non-disclosure by the appellant. The only thing which can possibly be said in this connection is that if the Company had been aware of his indebtedness, it might not have appointed him a Director. But his appointment as such did not directly cause any loss to the Company [Vide the observations of the Court of Appeal in Coventry and Dixon's case (2)]. I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the first ground has not been made out and that in any case it does not in the circumstances amount to misfeasance or breach of trust contemplated by section 214.

As regards the failure to recover the loan advanced to the appellant's firm before his appointment as a Director, I am quite clear that it does not amount to misfeasance or breach of trust such as will establish the liability under section 214. In the first place, a Director is not a trustee of the loans advanced by a Company before his acceptance of office as such. "Again directors," observed Jessel, M.R., in Forest of Dean Coal Mining Company, In re(3) "are called trustees. They are no doubt trustees of assets which have come into their hands, or which are under their control, but they are not trustees of a debt due to the Company. The Company is the creditor, and, as I said before, they are only the managing partners. In my opinion it is extravagant to call them trustees of a debt when it has not been received. You may, of course, have an actual trust of a debt, as in the case I put before, where trustees have assigned to them a debt to get in, but that is not the case with Directors of a Company. A Director is the managing partner of the concern and although a debt is due to the concern, I do not think it is right to call him a trustee of that debt which remains unpaid, though his liability in respect of it may in certain cases and in some respects be analogous to the liability of a trustee."

In the second place, Mr. Hans Raj Bhandari was, as stated above, a local Director and it cannot be said that it was the duty of a local Director to recover the debt when the Directors of the Head Board did not take any action in that connection. Further, it is not alleged that the omission to realize the money can be attributed to any fraud or dishonesty on his part. So much for the question of the unpaid debt.

The last point is that in view of the large amount he already owed to the Company, the appellant should not have borrowed a further sum of Rs. 5,000 and that in taking that loan he was guilty of a breach of duty and is accountable for the money which he thus received. It is observable that the learned Counsel, for the respondent, has expressly confined the liability on this ground to the refund of Rs. 5,000 with interest thereon. The facts in connection with the loan are not clear on the record and it is difficult to ascertain on the material before me the circumstances under which the money was advanced. It, however, appears that the loan was taken on the strength of a resolution of the Head Board which authorized a Director to borrow up to Rs. 5,000, and it is contended for the Liquidator that as the appellant was already indebted in a sum larger than the sanctioned amount, the additional loan of Rs. 5,000 was not governed by the terms of the resolution and must, therefore, be regarded as unauthorized. The resolution is not before me and on the record as it stands; I am unable to say how far this argument is sound. But it does not appear that the Board of Directors at Lahore or any other person connected with the Bank raised the slightest objection to the loan, either at the time or after the appellant had ceased to be a Director. It is not suggested that the loan was ultra vires the Company or was in any way a void transaction. On the meagre record before me it is difficult, as I have already observed, to know the exact circumstances of the loan or to determine the part which the appellant took in connection therewith. It is, however, significant that, as stated above, he re-paid about Rs. 10,000, a sum much larger than what he had borrowed, during the period of his directorship. Having regard to the aforesaid considerations, I cannot hold that this loan transaction establishes the liability under section 214.

The result is that the Liquidator has, in my opinion, failed to make out a case for the exercise of the power conferred upon the Court by section 214. I accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the order of the lower Court and dismiss the application of the Liquidator. In view of all the circumstances of the case, I leave the parties to bear their own costs in both the Courts.

Application accepted.

Execution of decree—Decree transferred with certificate of non-satisfaction but with no order for execution—Objection as to decree-holder's right to proceed against property not mentioned in decree—Executing Court, power of, to entertain objections—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 42, O. Where the transmitting Court has made no order for execution but has merely transmitted the decree and the certificate of non-satisfaction, the executing Court can entertain an objection impugning the right of the decree-holder to proceed against any property other than that charged in the decree.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this case is, whether a Court to which the execution of a decree is transferred under section 39 of the Code of Civil Procedure can entertain an objection impugning the right of the decree-holder to proceed against any property other than that charged in the decree. The Court below found that such an objection could not be entertained in the Court to which the execution of a decree was transferred. Section 42 of the Code of Civil Procedure confers on a Court executing a decree sent to it the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself. The exercise of those powers is subject to the reservation contained in Order XXI, rule 28, of the Code, that it cannot go behind any order, of the Court by which the decree was passed in relation to the execution of such decree. In the absence of any such order the duty of the executing Court is to enforce the decree in such manner and against such property as the law or terms of the decree may permit or allow.

A certificate of transfer does not specify the property against which execution is to be obtained in the Court to which execution is transferred. It merely specifies the amount which remains due under the decree and intimates that satisfaction of the decree to the extent of such amount has not been obtained by execution within the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed. No order for the execution of the decree against the property now sought to be attached was passed in this case by the transmitting Court, and as held in Husein Ahmad Kaka v. Saju Mahomed Sahib (1) where the transmitting Court has made no order for execution but has merely transmitted the decree and the certificate of non-satisfaction, there is nothing in section 42 or Order XXI, rule 28, of the Code to prevent the Court, to which execution is transferred, from determining questions arising from the enforcement of that decree in a particular manner. The decree in this case was obtained by the decree-holder respondent for the enforcement of his lien for the unpaid portion of the purchase money payable to him under a sale-deed dated the 8th August 1907. Its construction will depend to some extent on the pleadings and judgment in the case, but no copy of the plaint is on the record.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed. The lower Appellate Court is directed to re-instate the appeal under its original number and to dispose of it in accordance with law. The costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

Musammat MISRI AND OTHERS, REPRESENTATIVES OF RAM CHANDAR DAS, DECEASED—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENTS.

Legal representative, appointment of—Account—Commissioner not knowing characters in which accounts are kept, appointment of, whether allowable—Objections to report not taken in first Court or not raised in grounds of appeal before lower Appellate Court, whether allowed in second appeal.

In the presence of the widow and the mother of a deceased, the widow of deceased's cousin should not be added as a legal representative and her name, if added, should be struck off.

A local Commissioner appointed by consent of parties, cannot be superseded simply on the ground that he is incompetent to go into the accounts as he cannot himself read the characters in which such accounts are kept.

The objections against the report of the Local Commissioner not raised in the original Court, or those against the said report and decree of that Court not put forward in the grounds of appeal before the lower Appellate Court and, therefore, not dealt with by the latter Court, cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time in the further appeal before the Chief Court.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Ambala, dated the 18th November 1910, confirming that of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 18th October 1909, decreeing plaintiff's claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B, and Lala Sundar Das, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Dhanpat Rai and Dina Nath Mehra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Before we deal with the merits of this appeal, it is necessary to decide the question as to who are the legal representatives for the purposes of the appeal. The deceased plaintiff-respondent, Ram Chandar Das, died on 29th May 1912, during the pendency of this appeal and that on application made by the appellants on the 24th October 1912, three persons were brought on the record as his legal representatives, namely (1), the deceased's widow, Musammat Misri, (2) his mother, Musammat Madi, and (3) one Musammat Chowli, widow of the deceased's first cousin, Beni Parshad. Lala Dhanpat Rai, who appears for Musammat Misri, says that she as the widow of Ram Chandar Das, deceased, is his sole legal representative and that neither his mother, Musammat Madi, nor his cousin's widow, Musammat Chowli, should have been brought on the record as his legal representatives. A reference to page 3 of the printed paper-book in Civil Appeal No. 1326 of 1906, which relates to an earlier stage of this case, shows that the District Judge, Mr. Holder, had held in his judgment that the widow of Beni Parshad was only entitled to maintenance and that Mangal Sain, father of Ram Chandar Das, was the sole proprietor of the firm of Mangal Sain-Beni Parshad. The finding being inter partes is binding upon the appellants in this litigation; and it follows that the name of Musammat Chowli has been improperly brought on the record as one of the legal representatives of Ram Chandar Das, deceased. We direct that her name be struck off and that the appeal proceed against the widow and the mother of Ram Chandar Das.

This appeal constitutes the final stage in the litigation between the parties and is the sequel to Civil Appeal No. 1326 of 1906, which was decided by a Division Bench of this Court on the 27th April 1907. By its judgment of that date this Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit as against defendants Nos. 3 and 4, Gokal Chand and his son, Murli Dhar, and accepting the appeal of the plaintiff as regards defendants Nos. 1 and 3, Bindar Ban and Munshi Lal, and defendans Nos. 5 to 8, the four sons of Munshi Lal, it remanded the case to the first Court under section 562 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 for fresh decision on a claim limited to the Meerut shop debits and credits in the manner indicated in the body of the judgment.

We re-produce here from that judgment the pedigree-table showing the relationship of defendants:

DHANI RAM

Bindra Ban, defendant No 1.	Munshi Lal, defendant No 2,	Gokal Chand, defendant No 3,
	Four sons, defendants Nos. 5 to 8.	Murli Dhar, defendant No 4.

It was held by this Court that while the Ambala shop was jointly owned by all the members of the family, Gokal Chand and his son, Murli Dhar, were not concerned in the Meerut shop. Bindra Ban as Manager of both the shops had struck two balances on the 12th September 1903 in favour of the plaintiff, Ram Chandar Das, showing the amounts due to the latter on account of each shop as follows:—

(1) On account of Ambala shop—Rs. 3,480-7-0.

(2) On account of Meerut Shop—Rs. 8,452-8-0.

Bindra Ban in striking the two balances had wrongly debited a sum of Rs. 2,000 due from the Meerut shop to the Ambala shop, with the result that while the balance of the Ambala shop was improperly increased that of the Meerut shop was decreased by Rs. 2,000. This Court held that the total amount really due from the Ambala shop at the time when the balances were struck was only Rs. 1,480-7, and that this amount together with interest was subsequently paid off by the Amballa firm and the Ambala firm thereafter owed nothing to Ram Chandar Das, plaintiff. Upon that ground the suit was dismissed against Gokal Chand and Murli Dhar, who had no connection with the Meerut shop, and the case was remanded for the decision of the plaintiff's claim as against the Meerut shop with reference to the balance, dated the 12th September 1903, amounting to Rs. 10,452-3 (which includes the sum of Rs. 2,000) that had been wrongly debited by Bindra Ban to the Ambala shop.

Both the Courts below have now found that after Bindra Ban had struck the balance of the 12th September 1903, miscellaneous items aggregating Rs. 419-14-6 were spent by the plaintiff on account of the Meerut Shop and that therefore Rs. 10,872-6-6 was the total amount due to the plaintiff from the Meerut shop. The credits amounted to Rs. 7,259-6-3 and the balance due by the Meerut shop was thus Rs. 3,613-0-3. The interest due to the plaintiff came to Rs. 1,276-1-6, and so the total amount due to the plaintiff at the date of the amended claim was Rs. 4, 889-1-9. A decree has accordingly been passed for that amount by the lower Courts in favour of the plaintiff against the original defendants Nos. 1 to 2 and 5 to 8

From the decree of the Divisional Judge a further appeal has been preferred by the said defendants to this Court and although a large number of grounds have been taken in the written memorandum of appeal, Mr. Muhammad Shafi, who has argued the appeal for the appellants, has confined his arguments to the more important of those grounds. The first point raised by him is that since the local Commissioner, Sardar Tulsa Singh, Pleader, who was appointed by the District Judge to examine the account-books of the parties and to report the result, was not acquainted with Hindi characters in which the accounts were written, his report could not be of much value in a case of this kind. We do not think that there is much force in this argument. Sardar Tulsa Singh was appointed a local Commissioner on the 22nd March 1909 with the consent of the Pleaders for both parties, and we have been unable to find any indications on the record of his inability to examine the account-books properly owing to his alleged lack of knowledge of the Hindi characters. He submitted his report on the 17th April, and he was examined as a witness on the 10th June, 1909; and it does not appear to have been made out that he did not do the work entrusted to him as satisfactorily as any other local Commissioner would have done.

Next, the learned Counsel urged that no less than eight items aggregating Rs. 3,366-5 which, according to him, were paid by his clients to the plaintiff, were not given credit for by the local Commissioner. This seems to be an afterthought, for we can find no reference to these items in the objections which were filed by the appellants after the local Commissioner had submitted his report to the District Judge. We cannot, therefore, allow this contention to be raised at this stage of the case.

We now come to that part of Mr. Muhammad Shafi's arguments which related to the objections raised by his clients to the report of the local Commissioner, which form the subject-matter of 13 issues set out in the judgment of the District Judge at page 4 of the paper-book. The learned Counsel first took up issue No. 6, and argued that the two items of interest, Rs. 573-3 and Rs. 684-14-6, had been charged by the plaintiff twice over. The local Commissioner, Sardar Tulsa Singh, has found that interest has been correctly charged by the plaintiff and the District Judge has agreed in that finding. A reference to paragraph 5 of the amended plaint shows that interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum amounting to Rs. 1,276-1-6 has been charged by the plaintiff from 8th June 1902 to 10th July 1907, and there is an apparent discrepancy between this statement in the plaint and the statement made by the plaintiff's gumáshta on the 16th July 1908, that on Asauj Badi 5 Sambat 1960 (corresponding to the 12th September 1903) Rs. 570-3 was debited as interest to defendants upto date. The probable explanation of this discrepancy is that when the item of Rs. 2,000 which had been wrongly debited to the Ambala shop was transferred in 1907 to the Meerut shop account, interest was charged on that amount against the Meerut shop for five years from 1902 to 1907. The objection as to interest being charged twice over was not raised in the written grounds of appeal before the Divisional Judge and the Divisional Judge has not, therefore, cleared up this part of the case. In the circumstances the explanation given above may be accepted as satisfactory and we hold that it is not shown that the plaintiff is not entitled to the interest which he has claimed.

The next contention raised related to issue No. 8 at page 4 of the paper-book viz., whether the defendants were entitled to credit of Rs. 808-15-9 according to the entries in the plaintiff's mandi bahi. The District Judge says that this item is included in the total of Rs. 1,043-10-6 for which credit has been given to the defendants, and the defendants' Counsel after referring to the mundi bahi had to admit that the District Judge's finding was correct.

The last contention advanced by the defendants' Counsel was that at the time when Bindra Ban struck the balance of Rs. 8,452-8 as due by the Meerut shop to the plaintiff, the latter had 2,202 bags of grain belonging to the defendnats to dispose of; that he did not sell those bags in accordance with the instructions of the defendants' firm; and that Rs. 7,000-12-6, alleged to be the sale-proceeds of the bags in question, was not the correct price of the grain sold by plaintiff on behalf of the defendants. The learned Counsel urged that the plaintiff had purchased 2,202 bags of grain for the defendants at 23½ seers per rupee in May 1903; and that they were sold by him without the defendants' authority between the 31st January and 6th February 1905 at 35¼ seers per rupee, thus causing a loss to the defendants of about Rs. 2,290. In connection with this part of the case Counsel relied on Exhibit D2, dated Bhadon Badi 15 Sambat 1960 (corresponding to the 23rd August 1903) as showing that the plaintiff was asked by the defendants to sell the bags of grain at a profit. But there is on the record a letter written by Munshi Ram defendant, to the plaintiff on Maghar Badi 7 Sambat 1961 (29th November 1904) marked as Exhibit P6A, in which the plaintiff was instructed by Munshi Ram to sell the grain at once, and it was in pursuance of the instructions given in that letter that the bags of grain in question were sold by the plaintiff and the sale proceeds, Rs. 7,000-12-6, credited by him to the defendants' account. Exhibit P6A was produced and proved by the plaintiff on the 12th May 1908, and neither Bindra Ban, who was examined as a witness on the same date for Munshi Ram, who was examined on the 28th July, denied the genuineness of this letter. We must, therefore, hold that the bags of grain were sold by the plaintiff for the defendants in accordance with their instructions; and we agree with the Courts below that the price of the grain must be presumed to have been correctly entered by the plaintiff in his mundi bahi in the ordinary course of business.

For the reasons given, we agree with the learned Divisional Judge in holding that the amount due to the plaintiff, Ram Chandar Das, by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and defendants Nos. 5 to 8 was Rs. 4,889-1-9 at the date of the amended plaint; and we accordingly maintain the decree of the Divisional Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 65, scope of—Rent, when first charge—Landlord and tenant, relationship of—Landlord parting with his proprietary right, whether entitled to sell tenant's holding under s. 65—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 89 to 96—Court, power of, not to confirm sale.

Under section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the sale of a holding is possible, so long as the rent is a first charge thereon, and it remains the first charge only so long as the relationship of landlord and tenant subsists.

Therefore, a landlord who has parted with his proprietary interest, is not entitled to invoke the special remedies vested in a landlord under section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but still he can have a sale in execution of his decree under the Code of an interest which is saleable.

Where after a sale in execution of a decree the decree-holder is paid the amount of his decree and there is a concurrent wish of the parties that the sale should be set aside, the Court, although not warranted by any provisions of rules 89 and onwards of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to set aside the sale, may treat the sale as being of no effect and may decline to confirm it.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit in effect for possession of land, and the case made by the plaintiff against defendant No. 1, who is the principal defendant, is, first, that the land in suit is serait, and secondly, that defendant No. 1 is a trespasser and not a tenant. He established both these points to the satisfaction of the Munsif.

The learned Officiating Subordinate Judge, however, took an opposite view on both these points, and we must, therefore, apart from any point of law which can be opposed to that conclusion, accept as binding on us, first, that the land is not serait and secondly, that defendant No. 1 is not a trespasser but is a tenant.

To the first of these propositions no objection has been or can be taken in second appeal. But it has been argued with ingenuity that on the facts as found defendant No. 1 cannot be regarded as still a tenant, for by a sale in execution of a decree obtained by one Radhe Misser, the defendant No. 1's interest as tenant passed to the purchaser under that decree.

Now, this calls for a word of explanation Radhe Misser was the proprietor. Defendant No. 1 was his tenant. There was a failure or omission to pay rent and this led to the institution of a suit in May 1904 by Radhe Misser against defendant No. 1. A decree was obtained on the 21st September 1904. On the 6th of October 1904, Radhe Misser's proprietary right was purchased by the plaintiff. Subsequently to this, Radhe Misser took steps for the execution of his decree. There was a sale in execution, and it is said that under that sale the holding of defendant No. 1 passed to Radhe Misser who was the purchaser at that sale. This argument has been founded upon the theory that section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was still applicable at the time of the execution proceedings. Whether it was so or not is a point of some nicety, but we are assisted in determining the scope of that section by a recent decision of the Privy Council, Arthur Henry Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (1). It is true that the precise position with which we are now confronted was not before their Lordships on that occasion, but I think that the first result of their decision is that the sale of the holding is possible so long as the rent is a first charge thereon. But the rent remains a first charge only so long as the relation of landlord and tenant subsists; in other words, the charge is an incident of that relationship. Certainly this is a convenient view, because otherwise there might be introduced into this law, which regulates the relation between landlord and tenant, a supervening right of serious consequence, and, I think, we must in the circumstances hold that Radhe Misser, having parted with his proprietary interest, was not entitled to invoke the special remedies vested in a landlord under section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Still there could be a sale in execution of the decree under the Code, but it would be a sale of that which is saleable. I am not at present satisfied that the interest of defendant No. 1 was saleable. Over and above that, we have the important circumstances that notwithstanding the fact that there had been a sale, yet prior to its confirmation, Radhe Misser, the decree-holder, was paid by the judgment-debtor the decretal amount. That decretal amount was accepted by the decree-holder in full satisfaction of his decree, and the decree-holder, as any honest man would do, brought this to the notice of the Court and asked that the sale should be set aside. The learned Judge before whom this reasonable application was made seems to have felt that his action was paralyzed, because this particular predicament did not fall within the precise words of the rules 89 onwards of Order XXI. But I venture to think that where a case of that kind arises, it certainly is open to the Court not to confirm the sale and to treat the sale as being of no effect, that being the concurrent wish of the parties and the obvious requirement of the case.

In the circumstances of the case then, I think, it may fairly be said, as it does not appear that the defendant No. 1 had a saleable interest and as there can be no suggestion of defendant No. 1 being still bound by the execution proceedings, that the interest of defendant No. 1 did not pass to Radhe Misser.

The result is that though this point was not discussed, and as far as I am aware not raised before the lower Courts, still the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court must be affirmed by reason of the findings of fact at which that Court arrived, for the point now suggested does not justify us in disturbing those findings.

The result is that the decree must be confirmed with costs.

NANAK CHAND AND ANOTHER—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Joint decree—Execution by one of decree-holders—Decree in favour of joint Hindu family—Power of managing member to give discharge—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 6.

A joint decree-holder is not bound by the acts of another who has compromised or received payment from and has given discharge to the judgment-debtor beyond the extent of his own share in the decree but a discharge given by a managing member of a joint Hindu family is binding on the members of the family.

Harihar Pershad Singh v. Mathura Lal, 35 C. 561; 8 C. L. J. 256; 12 C. W. N. 598 and Duraiswami Sastrial v. Venkatarama Iyer, 12 Ind. Cas. 503; (1911)2 M. W. N. 420; 10 M. L. T. 370; 21 M. L. J. 1088, followed.

Where the managing member of a joint Hindu family is on the worst possible terms with the other members and the judgment-debtor's conduct has been throughout dishonest and fraudulent and the latter is colluding with the former in order to defraud the other members of the family, the members are not bound by the acts of the managing member.

Miscellaneous appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 13th February 1914, confirming that of the Munsif, first Class, Rawalpindi, dated the 20th February 1913, directing the execution of the decree to the extent of the minor decree-holder's share.

Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are sufficiently stated in the judgments of the Munsif and the Divisional Judge and I need not repeat them. The sole question now is whether an alleged payment of the decretal amount by the judgment-debtor to Nanak Chand, one of the two joint decree-holders, is a sufficient discharge of the debt and a complete answer to the claim by the other decree-holder. The ordinary rule, of course, is that one joint decree-holder is not bound by the acts of another who has compromised or received payment out of Court and that in such cases a joint decree-holder is not competent to give a discharge out of Court to a judgment-debtor for more than his own share of the decree (see the authorities cited at page 864 of Ameer Ali and Woodroffe's Civil Procedure Code). It has, however, been held (and I am ready to assume) that when the decree is in favour of members of a joint Hindu family the managing member of that family can give a discharge for the decretal money, [Duraiswami Sastrial v. Venkatrama Iyer (1)] and further that Order XXXII, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code is inapplicable under such circumstances [Harihar Pershad Singh v. Mathura Lal (2)].

The contention here is that Nanak Chand (who is the elder son of the late Kanhaya Lal) is the manager of the joint Hindu family to which he and his step-brother Mulk Raj (a minor) belong, and that payment to Nanak Chand completely exonerates the judgment-debtor. Other consideration apart, this contention might have had weight, but in the present case I cannot accept it, as I am satisfied that the judgment-debtor's conduct has been throughout dishonest and fraudulent. Nanak Chand is obviously on the worst possible terms with his step-mother, Musammat Maya Wanti, and her son, Mulk Raj, so much so indeed that in the course of the suit, which resulted in a decree against the judgment-debtor, he actually asserted that Musammat Maya Wanti was not the wife of his late father and that Mulk Raj was illegitimate.

Then, immediately upon Nanak Chand's attaining majority, the judgment-debtor induces him to grant him a receipt for full satisfaction of the amount of the decree Rs. 780, though according to the terms of the receipt itself (dated 7th March 1910) a sum of about Rs. 400 had not been paid. Later on, (see the Application, dated 15th January 1911) Nanak Chand himself asserts that the receipt was obtained from him by fraudulent misrepresentations, an allegation which, though subsequently given up by Nanak Chand who had clearly been bought over once again, I see no reason to suppose, was not true. The Courts below are obviously of opinion that the judgment-debtor has colluded with Nanak Chand, an immature youth who had only just come of age and was ill-disposed towards his step-brother, and this is certainly the view I take. In these circumstances I cannot agree that Mulk Raj is bound by a fraud practised upon him by the judgment-debtor and the so-called managing member of the family acting in collusion with the object of defrauding him.

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 503, (1911) 2 M. W. N. 420, 10 M. L. T. 370; 21 M. L. J. 1088.

(2) 35 C. 561; 8 C. L. J. 256; 12 C. W. N. 598.

In my opinion, Mulk Raj is competent in these circumstances to claim execution of the decree so far as his share is concerned, and I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 22, 31—Divorce, petition for, by wife—Adultery and desertion—Delay in petitioning, when cured—Desertion and delay, meaning of.

A wife, who was made to believe by her husband that he would be coming back to her, but who afterwards discovered that he had taken another woman and had in fact abandoned her, is entitled to a divorce though she delayed in presenting her petition for divorce, specially when she believed that she had to wait for three years before filing the petition instead of two years from the date of abandonment.

Desertion under the Divorce Act implies an abandonment against the wish of the person charging it, but it is not a universal rule that the abandonment must be against the expressed wish of that person.

Ma Yin Za v. Nash, 15 Ind. Cas. 353; 6 L. B. R. 53; 5 Bur. L. T. 85, referred to.

Delay intended by section 31 of the Divorce Act must be understood to be culpable delay somewhat in the nature of connivance, condonation or acquiescence.

JUDGMENT.

FOX, C. J.—The parties are Christian karens. They were married in May 1910, and they lived together in the petitioner's father's house for about three months after the marriage. The petitioner became pregnant, and subsequently a child was born to her. The respondent was in the Police and was stationed at Mogok. He took leave and was married to the petitioner while on leave. According to both the petitioner and her father she and the respondent lived happily together whilst living in the father's house. On the last day she saw him, the respondent told her he was going to Hmawbi to see his parents. He went away and never came back to her; a day or two afterwards she heard that he had gone to Henzada, and from there he had gone back to Mogok with a woman. About a month after he left, he wrote the petitioner a letter from Mogok saying that he was well, but not asking her to come to him. She replied saying merely that she was well. She did not ask him to provide a home for her at Mogok, and she did not go there. It is proved that the respondent has been living with the woman he took from Henzada and that she has three children by him. The respondent has not contributed anything towards the petitioner's support since he left her. She took service as a child's nurse to earn her livelihood.

She presented her petition for divorce nearly four years after his parting from her. The grounds on which she asked for a divorce were adultery coupled with desertion without reasonable excuse for upwards of two years.

Adultery by the respondent has now been adequately proved. The Divisional Judge refused a decree for divorce, holding that desertion within the meaning of the Indian Divorce Act had not been proved and that the petitioner had been guilty of unreasonable delay in presenting her petition.

"Desertion", under the Act, implies an abandonment against the wish of the person charging it, but as pointed out in Ma Yin Za v. Nash (1), it is not a universal rule that the abandonment must be against the expressed wish of that person. In the present case the respondent left the petitioner telling her an untruth about where he was going and not leading her to suspect in any way that he was going to abandon her. She must have been under the impression that he was coming back to her. She had no opportunity then of expressing any wish against his abandoning her. Shortly afterwards she heard that instead of taking her to where he had to live, he had taken another woman to live with him there. This abandonment of her must have been against her wish. No woman who had been so recently married to a man and who thought they were living happily together could have felt other than resentment at such conduct.

She was in no way bound to ask him to provide a home for her in which to live together again after such treatment. Section 22 of the Act gave her a right to a judicial separation: she was not bound to forgive the adultery, and by asking him to live with her she would have done so and have condoned it. The element of abandonment against the wish of the party charging it seems clear in the present case.

In regard to the question of unreasonable delay, the petitioner had to wait for two years before she could present her petition for divorce. Her petition was presented short of two years from the time she might have presented it. She says she was told she had to wait three years, so that according to her lights she delayed something short of a year.

In Newman v. Newman (2) Lord Penzance said that the cases which the Legislature had principally in view in enacting the provision regarding unreasonable delay in the English Statute were those in which a husband's honour had been wounded and he had put up with his disgrace for a long time.

In Pellew v. Pellew and Berkeley (3) the Judges said: "We think that the delay intended by the 31st section of the Divorce Act must be the sort of delay which would show the petitioner to have been insensible to the loss of his wife; and might almost be said to be equivalent to condonation." In Tollemache v. Tollemache (4) it was said that the word "delay" must be understood to be culpable delay somewhat in the nature of connivance or acquiescence. Considering her circumstances and her station in life, it does not appear to me that the petitioner's delay can properly be held to be of the above description.

I would allow the appeal and would grant the petitioner a decree for divorce from the respondent.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (B. C. VI of 1908), s. 11—Suit to recover rent—Rent not recoverable for period prior to registration in office of landlord.

Under section 11 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (B. C. VI of 1908), the transferee of a tenure can never recover any rent for the period prior to his application to the landlord for registration in his office.

An entry in the Record of Rights gives the transferee only the presumption of possession under the title he claims, but it cannot give him the right to recover rent which is barred by a statutory provision of the rent law, and such entry cannot take the place of the procedure which the law has laid down as a condition precedent to the collection of rent.

Second appeal from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated the 24th March 1911, affirming that of the Deputy Commissioner of Gumla, dated 6th June 1910.

Babus Harihar Prasad Singh and Rajeswari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Babu Kulwant Sahay, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMWOOD, J.—This second appeal was remanded to the lower Appellate Court for a finding whether the plaintiffs' claim was barred by section 11 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The lower Appellate Court has treated the issue as if it was whether the plaintiffs' suit was barred by that section, which is rather a different question. It has held that the entry in the finally published Record of Rights, a copy of which was served on the semindar, amounts to registration, and that the plaintiffs' suit is, therefore, not barred. But this is an insufficient finding and does not touch the case, which is, whether the plaintiffs are able to recover rent for the period between the acquisition of their title to the tenure and the application for registration in the landlord's sherishta, which, as laid down in the section, has to be accompanied by a tender of the necessary fee to the landlord. On the plain wording of the section, we must hold that however good the plaintiffs' title may be and whatever their rights to sue for rent under the law may be, they cannot recover the rent claimed by them in this suit, and that no decree can, therefore, be passed in their favour.

It was held by a majority of the Full Bench in the case of Alimuddin Khan v. Hira Lal Sen (1) in a case under the Land Registration Act, where the impediment was not nearly so clear as under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, that the right to the rent of an estate is in the true proprietor, although unregistered, and his right to sue for rent is not taken away by anything in the sections of the Act which do not affect his cause of action, but merely put an impediment in the way of his realising the rent until he has complied with the law by obtaining registration. Now even on this rule the plaintiffs would recover nothing in this suit, since it is not pretended that they have complied with the provisions of the law. But the provisions of section 11 go much further and lay down that they can never recover any rent for the period prior to their application to the landlord for registration in his office. Clearly, therefore, any application they might make during the pendency of the suit or in future would not operate retrospectively and their claim for rent is altogether barred and will remain barred as to the rents prior to the date of application, even when they have complied with the provisions of the Act. The entry in the Record of Rights gives them only the presumption of possession under the title they claim, but it cannot give them the right to recover rent which is barred by a statutory provision of the rent law, and such entry cannot take the place of the procedure which the law has laid down as a condition precedent to the collection of rent.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the learned Judicial Commissioner's finding is erroneous and the appeal of the defendants must be decreed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs in all Courts.

CARNDUFF, J.—I agree. Where the language of an enactment is clear, there is no room for speculating as to the object of the Legislature and suggesting that something different from what the law prescribes should be accepted as sufficient, because it would equally give effect to the supposed object. Here the language of section 11 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, is perfectly plain, and I cannot entertain the view that the granting by the Settlement Department to a landlord of a copy of a khewat containing the name of a certain person as the holder of a tenure, is equivalent to registration in the office of the landlord of the transfer of the tenure to that person, which the section expressly requires such person to have effected. Nor do I understand how it is possible in this case to assign any date to the transferee's application for registration referred to in the section, or how we can surmount the difficulty that here there has been no tender of the registration fee to the landlord within the time prescribed.

Appeal decreed.

Appeal—Second—Finding of—Interference.

Where the lower Court after considering the whole evidence adduced by the parties, finds an adoption proved, the finding cannot be interfered with in second appeal.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Amritsar Division, dated the 9th July 1912, reversing that of the Munsif, first Class, Batala, District Gurdaspur, dated the 18th March 1912, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There is really no ground for second appeal. The Divisional Judge has found that Chuni Lal was adopted by Fakir Chand and he has given grounds upon which his conclusion is based. It may be that the question is arguable and that there are many points to urge against the learned Judge's finding, but it is not for this Court to discuss the facts. Chuni Lal admittedly was brought up from infancy by Fakir Chand, and he informs me that his natural father (Ram Chand) was then alive and died only recently. Further, he assisted in performing the kiria karam after Fakir Chand's death and finally, plaintiff in his plaint describes Chuni Lal as the son of Fakir Chand. His attention was drawn to this fact, but he could give no explanation and merely stated that the heading of the plaint was correct. There is no question of law involved and the Divisional Judge had undoubtedly materials before him, to which he refers, in support of his finding. I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act (I of 1900)—Sale of equity of redemption of land by sonless male proprietor—Declaratory suit by reversioner to protect his right—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art 120.

A person is entitled to the benefit of the new Law of Limitation extending the period, if on the date of its coming into force his right to sue subsists. Therefore, where an alienor died before the Punjab Limitation Act I of 1900 came into force and the right of his reversioner to sue for his land still survived the suit is governed by Act I of 1900, even if it extends the period of limitation.

The Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act I of 1900 applies also to the sale of the equity of redemption by the alienor.

After the death of an alienor, his reversioner is entitled to maintain merely a suit to declare that the sale is not binding upon him.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Jullundur Division, dated the 23rd May 1912, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, second Class, Jullundur, dated the 30th November 1911, dismissing plaintiff's suit and remanding the case to the first Court for trial on the merits.

Mr. Dalip Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fasl-i-Husain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit was sold by the plaintiff's father to Mahia Mal, defendant, on the 12th February 1892. At the time of the sale the land was under mortgage and was in possession of the mortgagee and has not up to the present been redeemed by the vendee. The vendor having died, the plaintiff brought the present suit for a declaration that the sale shall not affect his rights. The first Court dismissed the suit as barred by time, but the lower Appellate Court has held that the suit is governed by the Punjab Limitation Act I of 1900 and is within time, because it was brought within twelve years of the time when the plaintiff obtained knowledge of the sale, and has remanded the case for decision on the merits. From this order of remand Mahia Mal has appealed to this Court.

The alienor died before Act I of 1900 came into force, and Mr. Dalip Singh, therefore, urges that the case is governed by the former Law of Limitation. It is admitted that at the time when the Punjab Limitation Act I of 1900 came into force plaintiff had still a subsisting right to bring the suit. Clearly the suit comes within the purview of any new Act of Limitation which may have extended the period of limitation. As Act I of 1900 extended the period of limitation plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of it. Jiwana v. Abdulla (1) is an authority in support of this view, and I am, therefore, unable to accept Mr. Dalip Singh's argument that the Punjab Limitation Act I of 1900 is not applicable.

The next point urged by him is that a suit such as the present is not provided for by the Punjab Limitation Act I of 1900. His argument is that what was sold was the equity of redemption, which is an incorporeal right not susceptible of possession. He refers to the third column of the Schedule in which those cases are dealt with where at the time of the alienation possession is given or agreed to be given. He says that in the present case possession could not be given, therefore, the sale is one to which the Act is not applicable. I am unable to accept this argument. The land itself was sold and though it was subject to a mortgage, the vendor could give and did give proprietary possession to the vendee at the time of the sale. I am clearly of opinion that it was never intended by the Legislature to exclude from the operation of this Act the case of a sale of land which was subject to a mortgage with possession. Now it is clear that the proprietary possession was given at the time of the sale, but as mutation of names has not yet taken place and as the vendee has not taken physical possession of the land sold, limitation runs from the date when the facts entitling the plaintiff to impeach the sale first become known to him. The lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiff got knowledge of those facts within twelve years of the date of institution of the suit, which is, therefore, within time. Mr. Dalip Singh urged that there should have been a remand to enable his client to show when plaintiff had knowledge of the sale. It was, however, admitted in the lower Appellate Court that there was no other evidence available on this point except what was already on the record. Under these circumstances it would have been useless for the lower Appellate Court to have remanded the case for further inquiry on this point.

The fourth issue framed by the first Court was whether the suit was maintainable in the form in which it has been brought. The first Court gave no finding on this point, but it has been argued before me and I, therefore, proceed to dispose of it. Mr. Dalip Singh urges that the plaintiff should sue for possession and for redemption and, therefore, a suit for mere declaration was not maintainable. It is, however, clear that the plaintiff could not have obtained actual physical possession from the vendee and that he could only have got actual possession in a suit against the mortgagee. There is, however, no reason why he should be forced to sue for redemption until it is convenient for him to do so. He could not seek further relief against the vendee alone than what he is asking now in the present suit. I, therefore, hold that the suit in the present form is maintainable and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Every bill of exchange (hundi) made payable a certain number of days after date of its execution is at maturity on the third day after the day on which it is expressed to be payable under section 22 (2) of Act XXVI of 1881, and the day of that date is also to be excluded as is laid down in section 24 of the Act. Thus a hundi payable on 28th January falls due on 31st of that month.

Lala Hukam Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Roshan Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court in holding that the suit is barred by limitation has overlooked the provisions of sections 22 and 24 of the Indian Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. The hundi was executed on the 29th September 1906, and the amount was payable after 120 days. Thus under the provisions of section 24 of the Act the money was payable on the 28th January, and under the provisions of section 22 (2) the hundi was at maturity (i.e. it fell due) three days thereafter, that is, on the 31st January 1907. The present suit was instituted on the 30th January 1913, (i.e., within the prescribed period of six years) and, therefore, within time.

I accept the petition and setting aside the order of the lower Court, remand the case for determination of the suit on merits. Costs will abide the event.

Party in lower Court not impleaded in appeal, effect of—Limitation for adding party in appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 20—Court, power of, to direct addition of parties in appeal.

Where by a mere act of inadvertence the appellant fails to implead a person who was a party in the lower Court, the appeal ought not to be dismissed on the simple technical ground that the said person is no party to the appeal and that limitation has expired for the purpose of making him a party, but must be decided on merits after that person is directed by the Appellate Court to be made a party; for, under Order XLI, rule 20, Civil Procedure Code, the Court has full authority to direct the addition of parties in an appeal, and when it takes action under this rule, no question of limitation can arise.

Bindeshri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu, 14 A. 154 (F. B.; A. W. N. (1892) 13 and Girish Chandra Lahiri v. Sasi Sekhareswar Roy, 33 C. 329, referred to.

Babus Baidev Lal and Gopal Sahai, for the Appellants.

Babu Hari Kishen Dhawn, holding brief of Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this are as follows. A decree was obtained against one Sheodin Singh by three decree-holders, namely, Gauri Shankar, Ram Prasad and Musammat Umrai. After Sheodin Singh's death an application was made to execute this decree against his legal representatives. A notice was issued to these representatives and they appeared before the Court and filed certain objections to the execution of the decree. Their objections were dismissed and they went in appeal to the Court of the District Judge. In their appeal these objectors failed to implead Musammat Umrai, one of the decree-holders, but they impleaded her son, one Jagannath. Musammat Umrai, it may be observed, was a party in the Court of first instance. At the time the appeal was up for hearing before the District Judge, an objection was made to him that Umrai was not a party to the appeal and it was contended that as limitation had expired for the purpose of making her a party, the whole appeal was bound to fail and must be dismissed. The learned Judge accepted this contention and allowed the preliminary objection to prevail, with the result that the appeal was dismissed with costs.

It is contended here that the learned Judge ought not to have acted in this way and in my opinion the appeal should be allowed. It seems to have been no more than an act of inadvertence on the part of the appellants that they did not implead Musammat Umrai in the proceedings before the District Judge. After the application for execution had been made, notice was sent to the judgment-debtors to appear and show cause. It has been proved that the copies of the notices which were served upon these judgment-debtors did not disclose the names of all the decree-holders. The heading of the notices received by them was "Gauri Shankar, etc., decree-holders." It is true that in counterparts of these notices which are on the Court's file all the names of the decree-holders are entered; but it is quite clear that the duplicates served on these judgment-debtors do not correspond with the copies of the notices which are on the Court's file. Be that as it may, I think the Judge was entirely wrong in allowing the appeal to be dismissed, on a technical ground like this. A reference to Order XLI, rule 20, of the Code of Civil Procedure shows that the Court has full authority to direct the addition of parties in an appeal and it has been held in Bindeshri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (1) and Girish Chandra Lahiri v. Sasi Sekhareswar Roy (2) that when a Court takes action under this rule, no question of limitation can arise. I allow this appeal and set aside the order of the Court below. The case will now go back to the District Judge with instructions to add Musammat Umrai as a party under the rule just referred to, and to decide the case on the merits after this has been done. The appellants here will get the costs of the appeal from the respondents.

Pardanashin lady—Power-of-attorney — Document executed by Agent, claim on basis of—Evidence—Burden of proof.

When a claim is made against pardanashin ladies on the basis of a document executed by an Agent on behalf of them, the plaintiff must show not only that a power-of-attorney was actually signed by the pardanashin ladies, but also that they knew what they were doing, knew the nature of the document and the extent of powers they were conferring by such a document.

Mr. Munshi, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Sivaya, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued these two petitioners, who are pardanashin ladies, in the Small Cause Court on a promissory note executed in their names by one Abdul Hamid, who produced a power-of-attorney said to have been executed by the petitioners. The defendants put in a written statement denying Abdul Hamid's authority to borrow money on their account. The plaintiff has satisfied the Court that these pardanashin ladies executed the power-of-attorney in favour of Abdul Hamid. The power-of-attorney contains a power to borrow money on their behalf, but the authorities show that when a claim is made against pardanashin ladies in such a case as this, the plaintiff must show not only that there is a document purporting to be a power-of-attorney which was actually signed by the pardanashin ladies, but he must go further and show that the pardanashin ladies knew what they were doing, knew the nature of the document and the extent of powers they were conferring by executing such a document. The plaintiff has not attempted to do this. The 1st and the 4th defendants, the present petitioners, were the only defendants who contested the suit in the Small Cause Court. The 2nd and 3rd defendants are sisters and also pardanashin ladies, the 1st defendant being the wife of Abdul Hamid.

The evidence adduced by the plaintiff is not sufficient to support a decree ex parte against the pardanashin ladies and although the 2nd and 3rd defendants have not applied to this Court in revision, when the decree is set aside as against the 1st and 4th defendants, I think, it must also be set aside against the 2nd and 3rd defendants, the ground being that there was no evidence that the defendants who are pardanashin ladies understood the contents of the deed or knew what powers they were conferring when they signed the power-of-attorney.

The suit must, therefore, be dismissed with costs and two gold mohurs, costs of this application.

Possession, when becomes adverse against absentee owners—Suit for recovery of possession—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art 144.

It is the duty of persons possessing rights to keep an eye on those rights.

Any overt act of adverse possession by the person in possession of property starts adverse possession as against the absentee owner thereof.

Where, therefore, the plaintiff's step-mother mortgaged the property in suit on the 2nd December 1898, expressly declaring herself in the deed to be the sole owner and that the plaintiff had no concern with it, in a suit for possession brought on the 5th March 1912:

Held, that the step-mother's possession became adverse when she mortgaged the house and the plaintiff's suit having been brought more than 12 years afterwards was barred by time.

Ramachandra v. Sadashiv, 11 B 422, distinguished.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Jhelum, dated the 13th of October 1913, affirming that of the Munsif first Class, Jhelum, dated the 30th July 1912, dismissing claim.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case both the Courts have held that the suit of the plaintiff is barred by time. The lower Appellate Court, remarking that the only Articles of the Limitation Act which can possibly apply are Nos. 123, 142 and 144, held that the last-named Article governs the case, and that, inasmuch as the plaintiff's step-mother, as long ago as 2nd December 1898, mortgaged the property in suit, expressly declaring herself in the deed to be the sole owner and that plaintiff had no concern with it, the suit brought on 5th March 1912 was out of time. It is admitted on both sides that the Article 144 should be applied. Therefore, the only question to be decided is, when did the possession of the step-mother become adverse? For the plaintiff Mr. Iqbal argues that it did not become adverse, until his client became aware of the setting up of an adverse title, that is, until he returned to the village in 1905. On the other hand, respondent's case is that the step-mother in 1898, as already stated, mortgaged the house, and that it is not necessary, for adverse possession to begin, that the person whose rights are interfered with should be aware of the overt act. Mr. Iqbal in support of his proposition quotes Ramachandra v. Sadashiv (1), but I do not think that that ruling really deals with the same question as that now before me. The condition of knowledge of the persons whose rights were interfered with was only incidentally stated. That does not seem to have been the point really in issue in that case. Here in the Punjab we have many rulings in connection with suits by absentees for recovery of their property, in which it has been held that any unmistakable overt act by the person in possession of that property starts adverse possession and the circumstances in those cases were obviously such that the absentees could have had no notice of what was going on. The fact is that it is the duty of persons possessing rights to keep an eye on those rights. There is no question in the present case of property being entrusted by the appellant to the widow.

There are also other reasons for rejecting the plaintiff's claim. It was held by the first Court that the alienation by the step-mother was for consideration and "necessity" and this seems perfectly clear. Again, the plaintiff has expressly invoked the Muhammadan Law, according to which he was entitled to possession of a share of the house from the date of his father's death which occurred early in 1898. In these circumstances there can be no doubt whatever that under the Law of Limitation plaintiff's suit has been rightly dismissed.

For these reasons I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Estoppel—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—"Omission," interpretation of—Property decreed to be sold—Party having lien on property—Charge not notified in sale-proclamation—Auction-purchaser, position of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXI, r 66

The doctrine of estoppel cannot be said to rest absolutely upon any notice of duty on the part of the person sought to be estopped; and the word "omission", used in section 115 of the Evidence Act does not mean only an omission to perform such a duty as is prescribed by law

If a party to a suit having a charge or incumbrance on the property in suit ordered to be sold fails to have that charge or incumbrance notified in the sale-proclamation, he is estopped from subsequently setting up his lien against the auction-purchaser

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 14th June 1912, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 7th March 1912.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath, for the Appellant.

Babus Basdev Lal and Gopal Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal of a plaintiff, Manik Ram, who sued in the Court of first instance for possession of a three-annas share in Mahal Aggayya Ram situated in the village of Behari Munfi. The plaintiff also claimed Rs. 300 mesne profits. The claim was based on a mortgage executed in favour of the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff on the 22nd of February 1905 by one Ram Padarath, who was defendant No. 11

in the case. By the mortgage in question a three-annas share in four mahals was mortgaged with possession to secure a loan of Rs. 1,400. The interest which was mortgaged was an under-proprietary interest in these mahals. The present suit relates only to one of these Mahals, Aggayya Ram, the allegation of the plaintiff being that the defendants had ousted him from possession of his share in this latter mahal. It appears further that a few years ago the superior proprietor of the village, one Murtaza Husain, brought a suit against the under-proprietors for arrears of rent. In execution of that decree a portion of the land of Mahal Aggayya Ram was put up to auction and sold to the defendants Nos. 6, 8, 9 and 10. The area so sold amounted to 4.93 acres. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's claim for this three-annas share, but held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any decree for possession in respect of the 4·93 acres which had been sold in execution of the above decree. It also gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 193 for mesne profits. The decision was taken in appeal to the Court of the District Judge, who reduced the amount of mesne profits awarded but upheld the decree of the Court of first instance in other respects. In particular, the lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for possession over the 4·93 acres above referred to. The matter for decision in appeal here is whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to get possession over that area. The ground upon which the judgment of the lower Court is based was this. The learned Judge found that in the suit which had been brought by Murtaza Husain against the under-proprietors for recovery of arrears of rent this mortgagee, Manik Ram, was impleaded as a party. He was, it appears, even previous to the date of this mortgage, a co-sharer in this under-proprietary holding. The Judge was of opinion that as Manik Ram at the time when this portion of Mahal Aggayya Ram was brought to sale in execution of decree failed to have his lien as a mortgagee notified, he was not entitled to succeed as against the auction-purchasers. It was conceded that the mortgage executed in the plaintiff's favour had been proved and that in fact the mortgage on which he relied was still subsisting. In appeal here it is contended that the Court below] was wrong in refusing the claim for possession as regards the 4.93 acres. It is said that there was no duty upon Manik Ram to have his lien as mortgagee notified and that the fact of mortgage being established, he is entitled to have possession by virtue of the mortgage even as against the purchasers at the auction-sale. It is said in the second ground of appeal that the plaintiff-appellant being a mortgagee in possession, his lien as a mortgagee could not be legally notified in the sale-proclamation and that it was not necessary for him to take any proceedings for that purpose. In this connection the learned Counsel for the appellant relied on the terms of Order XXI, rule 62, which lays down that where the Court is satisfied that the property is subject to a mortgage or charge in favour of some person not in possession and thinks fit to continue the attachment, it may do so subject to such mortgage or charge. On the other hand, there is Order XXI, rule 66, of the Code which lays down rules which are to be observed where property is ordered to be sold by public auction in execution of decree. This rule lays down that proclamation of sale is to be drawn up after notice to the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor and it also provides that the proclamation is to state as fairly and accurately as possible any incumbrance to which the property is liable. I must presume that the procedure laid down by this rule was duly followed in connection with the sale which took place in execution of the decree and I must, therefore, take it that the proclamation for sale was prepared after notice had been given to all the judgment-debtors, one of whom was the appellant here, Manik Ram. If Manik Ram had the opportunity of putting forward his claim as a mortgagee in respect of any of the property which was intended to be sold and if, he deliberately failed to avail himself of that opportunity, I think that as against auction-purchasers a clear case of estoppel is made out against him. By his omission to claim any right as a mortgagee in respect of this property, he must be taken to have induced the intending purchasers to believe that the property was being sold free of any incumbrance.

Where a person stands by and allows another to advance or spend money on property over which he has a charge or incumbrance, he may be estopped by his conduct or acquiescence and in the present case, I think, the learned Judge of the Court below rightly applied this principle. In the ruling reported in Ramchandra Vithuram v. Jairam (1) it was held in the case of a decree-holder that if he omitted to disclose his lien previous to the sale, he was estopped from setting it up afterwards as against the person who purchased in execution. Their Lordships held that under section 237 of the old Code read with section 287 the duty lay upon the decree-holder to disclose his lien in applying for execution. In the same way, I think, it may be taken that under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 66, if there is a duty on the decree-holder, there is also a duty on the judgment-debtor to put forward any claim which he has by way of incumbrance. Apart from that, however, I do not think that the doctrine of estoppel can be said to rest absolutely upon any notice of duty on the part of the person sought to be estopped. The rule as laid down in section 115 of the Evidence Act is that where one person has, by his declaration, act or omission intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representatives shall be allowed in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representatives to deny the truth of that thing. It is not necessary, I think, that the omission referred to in this section should be an omission to perform a duty which is prescribed by law. It is sufficient in my opinion to raise an estoppel if it is shown, as in the present case, that a person who has an interest in the property sought to be sold in execution of the decree and who has had an opportunity of having that interest proclaimed before the property is brought to sale, has deliberately omitted to ask the Court to have it notified for the information of the intending purchasers. It would be in the highest degree inequitable to allow a person in this position to turn round afterwards as against the purchaser and defeat the interest which the latter has acquired, by setting up a previous interest of his own.

(1) 22 B. 680.

It is said in the third ground of appeal that the auction-purchasers must have been aware of the plaintiff-appellant's mortgage, because the plaintiff-appellant was made a party to the suit for arrears of rent in his character as mortgagee. This statement does not appear to be borne out by the copy of the execution-proceedings which has been placed before me. It would seem that Manik Ram was impleaded merely as a co-sharer and not in his capacity as a mortgagee in possession. I find that the case was rightly decided in the Court below and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mortgage—Rajinama by mortgagor and complementary kabuliat by mortgagee—Transfer of equity of redemption.

A rajinama executed by a mortgagor in favour of his mortgagee relinquishing occupancy-rights in the mortgaged land and a complementary kabuliat given by the mortgagee operate to transfer the equity of redemption from the mortgagor to the mortgagee.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Belgaum, in Appeal No. 51 of 1912, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, second Class, of Athni, in Civil Suit No. 365 of 1912.

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. G. K. Parekh) for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit mortgaged the land to the defendants in 1876, and in 1879 he passed a rajinama relinquishing all his occupancy-rights in the said land in favour of the defendants. The defendants at the same time gave the complementary kabuliat. The trial Judge held, that this transaction amounted to a relinquishment of the equity of redemption by the mortgagor in favour of the mortgagees. The learned Judge of first appeal has held that it did not. In his opinion the only effect of the razinama and kabuliat under the Act of 1865 was to confer upon the mortgagees the privilege, as the learned Judge calls it, of paying the Government assessment. We find it a little difficult to understand in what light this could have appeared to the learned Judge a privilege for which any person would be anxious to pay good consideration. However that may be, on the facts found by the learned Judge of first appeal, the case is clearly covered by authority. The judgment of this Appeal Court in Dagon v. Sakharam (1), following Vishnu Sakharam Phatak v. Kashinath Bapu Shankar (2) and Tarachand Pirchand v. Lakshman Bhawani (3), appears to us to have settled the law beyond controversy upon the only question we are asked to answer. In our opinion the razinama and the kabuliat of the year 1879 effectually extinguish the plaintiff's equity of redemption. We must, therefore, now reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with all costs upon the respondent throughout.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss 67, 193, Sch. III, Art 2, cl (b)—Lease, construction of—Fishery right, suit for—Limitation—Fishery, money payable for, whether rent

Where a lease merely gives a right to fish in a jalkar, the fact that the lessee is not to claim reduction of the jama on the ground of drought or inundation does not necessarily shew that any right to the soil is also conferred.

A suit to recover money due under such a lease comes under section 193 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and is barred if not brought within the special period provided by Schedule III, Article 2, clause (b), of the Act

The money payable in respect of a fishery is not rent within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and as such, interest at the rate stipulated in the lease is recoverable on the amount

Section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act relating to interest affects the contract between the parties, and the restriction on the liability of the tenants to pay interest at the rate of 12½ per cent. per annum is a matter of substantive right, and does not apply to suits.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Rajshahi, dated the 14th January 1912, affirming that of the Munsif, first Court, Malda, dated 31st August 1911.

Babu Brojolal Chuckerbutty and Jogesh Chandra Bose, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of money payable under a registered kabuliat in respect of a jalkar for the years 1312 to the Poush instalment of 1317 B. S.

The Courts below have disallowed the claim for the years 1312 and 1313, B S., on the ground the claim for those years is barred by the special limitation provided by Schedule III, Article 2, clause (b), of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If the special limitation does not apply to the suit, the claim for the years 1312 and 1313 would be in time under Article 116 of the general Limitation Act.

Now section 193 of the Bengal Tenancy Act lays down that the provisions of the Act applicable to suits for recovery of arrears of rent, shall, as far as may be, apply to suits for the recovery of anything payable or deliverable in respect of any rights of pasturage, forest rights, rights over fisheries and the like. Section 184 of the Act provides that the suits specified in Schedule III shall be instituted within the time prescribed in that Schedule, and Schedule III, article 2 (b), prescribes a period of three years within which a suit for recovery of arrears of rent is to be instituted.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the lease in the present case not merely confers a right over a fishery within the meaning of section 193 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but also creates an interest in land and that as such does not come within the purview of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A jalkar does not necessarily imply any right to the soil [see David v. Girish Chandra Guha (1) and Radha Mohan Mundal v. Neel Madhub Mundul(2)] and we are of opinion that the lease in the present case does not confer any right to land. It merely gives a right to fish in a jalkar belonging to the plaintiffs' zemindari. The fact that the lessee was not to claim reduction of the jama (rent) on the ground of drought or inundation does not necessarily show that any right to the soil was conferred. The name of the jalkar mara nadi (dried-up river) and the reference to the fishing period in the lease indicate that the jalkar was not full of water at all seasons of the year. The tenant took the risks of inundation and failure of rains and the agreement was that he would not be entitled to claim any reduction on those grounds. Then the stipulations that the lessee would not exceed the boundaries and would be bound to give information to the Police and to the lessor, if any murder was committed within the boundaries of the jalkar, are not inconsistent with the lease being a fishery lease, as the zemindar after letting out the jalkar would no longer keep any watch over the jalkar.

It is contended that cesses cannot be charged on a jalkar unconnected with any right to the soil, and the fact that the tenant agreed to pay cesses shows that a right to land was conferred by the lease. But the mere fact that the tenant agreed to pay a charge, which he might not be legally compelled to pay, cannot alter the nature of the tenancy. Nor is it by itself sufficient to indicate that any right was created in land.

Reliance is placed on the case of Mahananda Chakravarti v. Mongala Kootani (3), in which importance was attached to the condition that the lessee was to continue liable for the rent even in case of drought and non-rearing of fish. But in that case, there was a lease of a tank in which fish has to be reared, and which cannot be done if there is a drought. The lease did not specify the rights to be exercised by the lessee in the tank. In the present case the jalkar appears to be a river which in the rainy season is full of water and in which fish has not to be reared, and the only right conferred on the lessee is the right of catching fish. The question is one of construction, and must depend upon the terms of the particular lease.

Upon a consideration of all the terms of the lease, we are of opinion that the lease merely conferred a right of fishing and no right to land was conferred.

That being so, the case comes under section 193 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the arrears for 1312 and 1313 B. S. have been rightly held by the Courts below to be barred by limitation, under Schedule III, Article 2, clause (b), of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The next question is whether the Court below was wrong in allowing interest only at the rate of 12½ per cent. per annum on the arrears, instead of at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per month as stipulated in the kabuliat.

Section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, no doubt, provides that an arrear of rent shall bear interest at the rate of 12½ per cent, but it is contended that money payable in respect of a fishery is not 'rent' within the meaning of the Act, as 'rent,' according to section 3, clause 5, of the Act means whatever is payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant.

We think this contention must prevail. We have found that the lease of the jalkar does not create any interest in land. That being so, the money reserved in the kabuliat is not 'rent' within the meaning of section 67 of the Act. In Shib Prasad Choudhuri v. Vakai Pati (4) there is an observation that there is nothing in the definition of the word 'rent' in the Bengal Tenancy Act which excludes fishery rent. But the attention of the learned Judges apparently was not drawn to the fact that the word 'rent' in that section has reference to anything payable for use or occupation of land held by the tenant. If what is payable in respect of any rights over fisheries had been 'rent' within the meaning of the Act, Section 193 would not have laid down that the provisions of the Act applicable to suits for the recovery of arrears of 'rent' shall, as far as may be, apply to suits for the recovery of anything payable or deliverable in respect of fishery rights and in that case section 193

(2) 24 W. R. 200.
(3) 31 C. 987; 8 C. W. N. 804.
(4) 33 C. 601.

would have been wholly unnecessary. A similar view was taken in the case of Abdulla Sarkar v. Ashraf Ali Mondal(5), where the learned Judges were of opinion that money payable in respect of forest rights is not 'rent' within the meaning of section 3 (5) of the Act

The learned Subordinate Judge refers to the second clause of section 3 (5), where it is laid down that in section 67 (and certain other sections) of the Act, 'rent' includes also money recoverable under any enactment for the time being in force as if it was rent. But the word 'any enactment' obviously refers to any enactment other than the Bengal Tenancy Act; otherwise section 193 would have been included among the other sections mentioned therein. They have reference to cases where the money, though not 'rent', is by any enactment recoverable as if it was rent; for instance, cesses under section 47 of the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880) or drainage charges (payable by a tenant to his landlord) under section 44 of the Drainage Act (Bengal Act VI of 1880). Section 193 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not make money payable in respect of a fishery recoverable as if it was rent. That section merely lays down that the provisions of the Act applicable to suits for recovery of rent shall apply, as far as may be, to anything payable in respect of fishery rights. We are accordingly of opinion that money payable in respect of a fishery is not 'rent' within the meaning of the Act.

Then the question arises whether the provision of section 67 of the Act relating to interest on arrears of rent is a provision applicable to suits for recovery of rent. If it is so, the provision would apply to money payable in respect of fishery rights, having regard to the provisions of section 193 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But 'provisions of the Act applicable to suits' have reference to the procedure laid down in the Act relating to suits, and do not include the provisions of the Act regulating the rights and liabilities of landlords and tenants. The provisions of section 67 relating to interest affect the contract between the parties, and the restriction of the liability of tenants to pay interest at the rate of 12½ per cent. per annum is a matter of substantive right and cannot be called a provision applicable to suits. The Court, it is true, cannot award interest at a rate higher than 12½ per cent if a suit is brought for recovery of rent, but that is because the Act has restricted the liability of the tenant as to the amount of interest payable.

We are accordingly of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to interest at the rate stipulated in the kabuliat.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified accordingly and the parties will be entitled to proportionate costs in all the Courts.

Decree modified.

Where a mortgage-deed contained a stipulation to the effect that in case of failure of payment of the principal and interest in 17 months, the deed would take effect as a sale out and out from the date of the expiry of the above-mentioned period and the terms of the deed did not show that the covenant for payment of interest was an independent one, on a suit for possession by redemption:

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisonal Judge, Gujranwala Division, dated the 15th April 1913, reversing that of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 21st December 1911.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Appellant.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute, between the parties, in this appeal relates to the amount of interest which the plaintiff must pay to the mortgagee before redeeming the property mortgaged. The learned Divisional Judge disagreeing with the Court of first instance, has held that the stipulation for payment of interest at 15 per cent. per annum is confined to the period of the mortgage and that the mortgagee is entitled only to post diem interest for six years at 9 per cent. per annum. I have heard Mr. Ganpat Rai for the appellant and Mr Muhammad Iqbal for the respondent, and am of opinion that this finding of the Divisional Judge is correct.

The mortgage is one by way of conditional sale, and the parties to it stipulated that in case of failure of payment of the principal and interest in 17 months, the deed would take effect as a sale out and out from the date of the expiry of the above mentioned period. The terms of the deed do not show that the covenant for payment of interest was an independent one, or that the parties contemplated that it should remain in operation after the expiry of the period of the mortgage. The Counsel for the parties have cited before me a number of rulings, but it seems to me that a case of this kind must be decided upon the particular terms of the deed, and that judgments which proceed on different sets of facts cannot have any particular bearing upon a case in which the terms of the deed are different. There is, however, a judgment of this Court reported as Bulanda v. Fateh Din (1) which is in many respects similar to the present case, and in that case it was held that there was no independent covenant as to the payment of interest after the period fixed for redemption. The lower Appellate Court was, therefore, fully justified in refusing the prayer of the defendant for interest for the full period from the date of the mortgage up to the date of the suit.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has further contended that the stipulated rate of interest should be allowed for the period of six years, for which the lower Appellate Court has granted post diem interest to the mortgagee. On that point I see no reason to interfere with the discretion of the lower Appellate Court. I may observe that the rate of 9 per cent. fixed by the Court is in accordance with the decision in Jawahir Mal v. Raja Shah (2).

As regards the prayer for interest after the institution of this suit, I notice that it was not specifically urged in the Courts below. The matter is a discretionary one, and in second appeal I do not see any reason to accede to this prayer.

It appears that the learned Divisional Judge intended to allow the mortgagee interest at the stipulated rate for the period of the mortgage. He has, however, omitted to include it in the amount, upon the payment of which the suit for redemption has been decreed. Mr. Muhammad Iqbal for the respondent admits that this is an oversight on the part of the Judge and that it should be rectified. Counsel for both parties are agreed that interest for 17 months amounts to Rs. 51.

I accordingly accept the appeal so far as to enhance the amount fixed by the Divisional Judge by Rs. 51, that is to say, a decree for redemption in favour of the plaintiff is passed on payment of Rs. 715-6-0 plus Rs. 51, total Rs. 766-6-0, within one month from this date. If the payment is not so made, the conditions laid down in the decree of the District Judge shall hold good. I direct that the parties bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeal partly accepted.

The terms of section 25, sub-section 8, of the Judicature Act of 1873 are wider than the language used by the Legislature in this country in rule 1 of Order XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code.

It cannot be said that a Court of Probate is not competent, because it is a Court of Probate, to grant an injunction in any circumstances.

Where injunction is necessary, the proper procedure to follow is for the aggrieved party to apply to the Court for the appointment of an Administrator pendente lite under section 34 of the Probate and Administration Act, as an Administrator pendente lite appointed under section 34 takes charge of the entire estate, both moveable and immoveable, of the deceased.

On an application being made under section 34, the Court may, if necessary, grant an injunction either in the exercise of its inherent power or under rule 7 of Order XXXIX of the Code.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 1st of August 1913.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Baranashibashi Mukherjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order by which the Court below has refused to grant an injunction in a proceeding for Letters of Administration of the estate of one Broja Nath Dobey. The appellant, Nirodbarani Debi, and the respondent, Chamat Karini Debi, are daughters of the deceased. Shortly after the death of Broja Nath Dobey, Nirodbarani applied for Letters of Administration to his estate. Thereafter Chamat Karini made an application for probate of a Will alleged to have been executed in her favour by her father. There were thus two counter-cases before the Court and the question of the genuineness and validity of the Will had to be determined in the first instance. Before the cases came on for trial, the appellant, Nirodbarani, who had asked for Letters of Administration, applied to the Court for an injunction to restrain her sister from alienating the properties of which she was in possession. The Court refused the injunction on the ground that rule 1 of Order XXXIX of the Code of Civil Procedure had no application to a proceeding for Letters of Administration under the Probate and Administration Act of 1881. The substantial question for consideration in the appeal consequently is whether the injunction has been rightly refused.

On behalf of the appellant, it has been contended that under section 83 of the Probate and Administration Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are applicable to contentious cases, because that section provides that the proceeding shall take as nearly as possible the form of a suit according to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which the petitioner for Probate or Letters of Administration, as the case may be, shall be the plaintiff, and the person who may have appeared to oppose the grant shall be the defendant. Reference has also been made to section 55 of the Probate and Administration Act, which provides that the proceedings of the Court of the District Judge in relation to the grant of Probate and Letters of Administration shall, except as otherwise provided, be regulated, so far as the circumstances of the case will admit, by the Code of Civil Procedure. In support of the contention that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are applicable to Probate proceedings, reliance has also been placed on the cases of Yeshwant Bhagwant v. Shankar Ramchandra (1) and In the matter of the Will of Dawubai Haji Khan (2) in which a Receiver was appointed in proceedings for the grant of Letters of Administration, Watkins v. Brent (3) and Rendall v. Rendall (4) in which Receivers were appointed during the pendency of Probate proceedings, and Nicholas v. Dracachis (5) and In the goods of Moore (6) where injunctions were granted during the pendency of a Probate proceeding. Our attention has not been invited to any case in the Indian Courts in which an injunction has been granted under circumstances similar to those of the case before us.

The decision of the question raised must depend primarily upon the terms of Order XXXIX, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, assuming that the provisions of that rule are applicable to proceedings under the Probate and Administration Act by virtue of section 55 thereof. It is essential for the application of rule 1 of Order XXXIX that the property in dispute in the suit is in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated by a party or wrongfully sold in execution of a decree. Consequently the applicant for an injunction must satisfy the Court that the proceeding is a suit in which there is property in dispute and that the property is in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated. The question consequently arises, whether a proceeding for Probate of a Will or for Letters of Administration may rightly be held to be a suit in which property is in dispute. In our opinion, the answer must be in the negative. It has been repeatedly held, as appears from the cases of Arunmoyi Dasi v. Mohendra Nath Wadadar (7), Jagannath v. Ranjit Singh (8), Birj Nath v. Chandar Mohan Banerjee (9) and Ochavaram Nanabhai Haridas v. Dolatram (10), that the only question in controversy in a proceeding in the Probate Court is that of representation of the estate of the deceased, and no question of title thereto, that is, the title of the deceased or of the conflicting titles alleged by the parties to the Probate proceeding can be investigated by the Court. Consequently it would be, in our opinion, an undue straining of the language to hold that a Probate proceeding is a suit in which there is property in dispute. The circumstance that in England an injunction has been granted in a Probate proceeding is of no assistance to the appellant, because the terms of section 25, sub-section 8, of the Judicature Act of 1873 are wider than the language used by the Legislature in this country in rule 1 of Order XXXIX. We are clearly of opinion that the application made to the Court below by the present appellant was misconceived.

But we do not lay down the proposition that the Court is not competent, because it is a Court of Probate, to grant an injunction in any circumstances. In England, injunctions have been granted in cases of this description under rule 3 of Order 50 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. There is a corresponding provision in the Code of Civil Procedure embodied in rule 7 of Order XXXIX. The proper procedure to follow in cases of this description is for the aggrieved party to apply to the Court for the appointment of an Administrator pendente lite, under section 34 of the Probate and Administration Act. It is not necessary for our present purpose to examine the scope of section 218 of the Indian Succession Act (which is reproduced in the Probate and Administration Act as section 34) and of section 239 of the Indian Succession Act (to which there is nothing corresponding in the Probate and Administration Act). It is possible that the scopes of the two sections are different in this way, namely, the former section contemplates an application by a party to the proceeding after the commencement thereof and gives the person appointed as Administrator pendente lite. power to deal with the estate, subject to the restrictions mentioned, whereas section 239 contemplates the possibility of an application by a stranger to the proceeding, an application before the commencement of the proceeding, and deals only with the question of the custody and preservation of the property. As we have said, the proper course to pursue in a case of this description is to make an application under section 34 of the Probate and Administration Act, and, in this view, it is unnecessary to consider whether the provisions of the Code relating to the appointment of a Receiver are applicable to cases of this description. In England, Receivers are appointed in the course of Probate proceedings in respect of immoveable properties, while Administrators pendente lite are appointed in respect of moveable properties of the deceased. In this country the Legislature has made a single provision by which an Administrator pendente lite appointed under section 34 takes charge of the entire estate of the deceased. When an application has been made under section 34, it may be necessary for the Court to grant an injunction either in the exercise of its inherent power or under rule 7 of Order XXXIX of the Code. For instance, it may be brought to the notice of the Court that a party in possession is about to deal with the moveable properties, and unless an injunction is granted, the appointment even of an Administrator pendente lite may become fruitless. The Court, under such circumstances, has ample authority, either under statutory powers or in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction, to make a temporary order, so as not to defeat the ultimate order which the Court is competent to make.

In the case before us the appellant did not make an application under section 34 of the Probate and Administration Act, though that was her obvious remedy. The only question for consideration now is, whether we should affirm the order of the District Judge and leave it open to him to deal with an application under section 34 or we should in this proceeding make an order in that behalf. In our opinion the latter course should be adopted, as the respondent has expressed an intention to deal with the moveable properties in her hands for the payment of debts. There may also be debts to be realised. In any event, on the facts stated in the affidavit it is manifest that the estate stands in need of immediate administration.

The result is that we allow this appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge and direct him to appoint forthwith an Administrator pendente lite under section 34 of the Probate and Administration Act. There will be no order for costs either in this Court or in the Court below.

Appeal—Second—Definite finding of fact—A share-holder in possession of more shamilat than his share—Failure to get deed of sale registered—Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 41.

A finding of fact though not very clear but sufficiently definite cannot be interfered with in second appeal.

The mere fact of a share-holder cultivating more than his admitted share in the shamilat is no inference of his having purchased a further share, specially when he has failed for a long time to get his deed of sale registered or his title recorded in the Revenue Record.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge of the Sialkot Division, dated the 6th of December 1912, reversing that of the Munsif, first Class, Sialkot, dated the 28th of September 1911, dismissing the suit.

Mr. Gulshan Rai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal was admitted on the ground that the lower Appellate Court had not recorded a very clear finding whether plaintiff-appellant bought a share in the shamilat from Lal Singh.

Mr. Nand Lal for respondent raises the preliminary objection that the finding is sufficiently definite and that, therefore, no second appeal lies.

The learned Divisional Judge does not say in clear terms, "I hold that the alleged sale is not proved", but upon futher consideration of his judgment, and after hearing Counsel, I think it is clear that what he means was that plaintiff had to prove the facts entitling him to a declaration, and that he had not done this sufficiently, that it was possible he might have bought the share in the shamilat, but the claim could not be decreed upon a mere possibility

I have read the patwari's evidence and it is clear from it that the mere fact that plaintiff has been cultivating more than his admitted share in the shamilat, would not warrant the inference that he had become entitled to a further share,

On the other hand, his long silence and his omission to get his deed registered or his title recorded in the Revenue Record warrant an inference unfavourable to him

I am, therefore, unable to hold that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is contrary to law and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Possession, suit for—Mortgage by ostensible owner—Benefit to estate—Muhammadan Law.

According to Muhammadan Law as between sisters and nephews, sisters are the sole heirs and, therefore, nephews have no right to mortgage the property, unless they act as sisters' agents.

A loan for the nephews' defence in a suit for possession by the sister-in-law is not for the benefit of the estate, as neither party has any right to the possession of the estate.

Mr. Bijapurkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. N. Palit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for possession of land. The land originally belonged to one Guya, a Muhammadan who died in August 1909, leaving two sisters, who are the plaintiffs in this case, and two nephews. In April 1910 the two nephews mortgaged this land to Shwe Nyun and gave him possession. Shwe Nyun was the original defendant in this suit who died pending this appeal. The sisters and nephews lived in the same house. In June 1911, the plaintiffs sued the nephews to recover the inheritance. Mr. Bijapurkar for the defendants-appellants contends that the nephews were able to give a good title to the mortgagee as being the ostensible owners, that is to say, by reason of their being in possession of the land. The sisters were admittedly the sole heirs of the deceased Guya and the nephews had no title to dispose of the land and it is not shown that the nephews acted as agents for the sisters. Secondly, it is contended that the mortgage is good because the money was raised for the protection of the estate. The money was borrowed to pay for the nephews' defence in a suit instituted by a sister-in-law of the deceased Guya who having no title whatever to the land sued to dispossess the nephews. That could not be a benefit to the estate as neither the sister-in-law nor the nephews had any right to be in possession. Unless the nephews had some authority to act on behalf of some of the heirs, they would have no authority to raise loans for the benefit of the estate.

This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Petition, under section 70 of Act IV of 1912 for revision of the order of the Additional Divisional Judge of Multan at Lahore, dated the 21st November 1912, reversing that of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 22nd January 1912, decreeing plaintiff's suit.

Messrs. Badr-ud-Din Koreshi and Roshan Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing Counsel on both sides, I think that the Divisional Judge has given good reasons for reversing the decree of the District Judge as regards costs. The sole reason recorded by the District Judge for disallowing costs to the plaintiff was that Chela Ram, defendant, had gifted his share to his wife and son who were subsequently added as defendants, but this was not a good ground for departing from the usual rule of allowing costs to the successful party. The District Judge not having exercised his discretion in a sound manner, the Divisional Judge was justified in reversing his order and in allowing costs to the plaintiff. I dismiss the revision, but in the circumstances of the case leave the parties to pay their own costs in this Court.

Husband and wife—Liability of husband for misappropriation by his wife.

A husband is not liable for the acts of misappropriation committed by his wife during the course of her service which he had allowed her to take up.

Civil revision against the decision of the Small Cause Court Judge, Dehra Dun, dated 6th April 1914.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from a decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Dehra Dun. Mrs. Bachman, the respondent, had employed Mrs. Simpson, the wife of the appellant, as housekeeper to manage the boardinghouse belonging to Mrs. Bachman. In August 1913, Mrs. Simpson severed her connection with the boarding-house. Mrs. Bachman sued her and her husband for the recovery of Rs. 346-7-0, on the allegation that Rs. 50 had been advanced to Mrs. Simpson with the consent of her husband which had not been re-paid, and the balance had been misappropriated by Mrs. Simpson during the time that she acted as housekeeper.

The claim was resisted by both the defendants. The husband denied his liability on the ground that he was not liable for any acts of misappropriation of his wife. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court decreed the claim against both the defendants. He held that the husband was liable because he had allowed his wife to act as housekeeper to Mrs. Bachman. Mr. Simpson comes up in revision to this Court and contends that he is not liable for the sums misappropriated by his wife in spite of his having allowed her to take up the service of Mrs. Bachman as housekeeper. I think that the contention for the applicant must prevail. The husband cannot be made liable for acts of misappropriation of his wife simply because he has allowed her to take up service, vide the Law of the Domestic Relations by William Pinder Eversley, third Edition, page 282, last paragraph. With regard to a portion of the claim I find that the applicant had undertaken to re-pay it viz., Rs. 50, which had been advanced to his wife, vide Exhibit 4. The application, therefore, prevails with regard to Rs. 296-7-0. I modify the decree of the Court below by dismissing the claim of the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 296-7-0 as against Mr. Simpson, defendant No. 2. Costs of this application are allowed to the applicant.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 7—Suit based on one sale—Decree on subsequent sale of a part, whether can be allowed.

Where a person claims possession of the entire property on the strength of a sale which had been cancelled by the consent of both parties, but it is found as a fact that there was in his favour a subsequent sale of a part of that property upon which he has not based his claim, it is desirable in order to prevent further litigation to grant him a decree for that part only, instead of dismissing the suit and directing him to sue again on the basis of the subsequent sale.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge of the Jhelum Division, dated the 27th May 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, first Class, Gujrat, dated the 9th December 1912, decreeing the claim in part.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Taj-ud-Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are fully given in the judgment of the Divisional Judge. He finds as a fact that after cancelling the original sale of 25 kanals 10 marlas in favour of the plaintiff-appellant, the defendant-respondent Mehra, son of Samandar, who was owner of the land, re-sold the said land in three lots to three different vendees, viz., the plaintiff-appellant and the other two respondents, Maula Dad and Mehra, sons of Imam Bakhsh, who held possession of the land as mortgagees. By this new arrangement 9 kanals 7 marlas were sold to the plaintiff, the rest going to the mortgagees. The plaintiff claimed possession of the entire land, 25 kanals 10 marlas, on the strength of the original sale and the Munsif decreed in his favour possession of 9 kanals 7 marlas, on the ground that under the arrangement referred to above and in substitution for the original sale, the area just mentioned had been sold to the plaintiff. The Divisional Judge found in agreement with the Munsif that the sale of 9 kanals 7 marlas was made by the defendant Mehra, son of Samandar, in favour of the plaintiff, but has dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that as the original sale on which the plaintiff's suit was based had been cancelled, his present claim must be disallowed and he must be left to sue on the basis of the subsequent sale. I cannot agree in this view, which means encouraging unnecessary litigation. As the second sale in respect of 9 kanals 7 marlas has been held by both the Courts to have been validly made by the owner thereof, plaintiff, a decree given in his favour by the Munsif in respect of that area was perfectly correct and should have been maintained by the Divisional Judge.

I accept this appeal and setting aside the decree of the Divisional Judge, restore that of the Munsif with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Ex parte decree against minor—Minor not properly represented—Irregularity—Minor, right of, to get decree set aside—Officer of Court appointed as guardian ad litem*—Expenses, provision for.*

A suit was brought against a certain person and his minor nephews. The uncle refused to be the guardian of the minors alleging that they lived with their mother. The Court appointed the Amin as the guardian ad litem of the minors, without giving any notice to the minors or to their mother in whose care they were. The Amin did not make any defence. An ex parte decree was made as against the minors. An application was made to set aside the ex parte decree on behalf of the minors by their mother. The application was refused. Subsequently a suit was filed for a declaration that the decree was null and void as against the minors.

Held, that the minors not being properly represented in the suit and the ex parte decree having been passed without notice to them or their natural guardian, they were entitled to the declaration which they sought in the suit.

Semble—The appointment of an officer of the Court as guardian ad litem of minors in a suit without requiring the party at whose instance he is appointed to deposit the necessary funds to enable the guardian to defend the case, is little more than a farce.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 2nd September 1913.

Mr. Umashanker Bajpai, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. C. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed a declaration that a decree obtained against them ex parte on the 30th of August 1911 was null and void as against them. The decree in question was a decree obtained on foot of a mortgage alleged to have been executed by the father of the plaintiffs and their uncle, Raghubir Sahai. The facts are as follows. The plaintiffs were at the time of the institution of the mortgage suit, and still are, minors. The plaintiffs in the previous suit sought to implead them as defendants through the said Raghubir Sahai as their guardian ad litem. Raghubir Sahai refused to be the guardian ad litem and informed the Court that the minors lived with their mother, and not with him. Eventually the Court appointed the Amin as the guardian ad litem of the minors. This order was made without any notice having been given to the minors, or to their mother in whose care they were. There was no appointed or natural guardian other than the mother. It is not pretended that the Court required the plaintiff to deposit any sum of money to enable the Court Amin to employ a Pleader, or to make any inquiry as to the minors' defence. Nor is it pretended that the Court Amin did in fact take any step to defend the case or to inquire whether there was a defence. An ex parte decree was granted on the 30th of August 1911. An attempt was made on behalf of the minors through their mother to have the case restored, but this application was refused. The present suit was then instituted.

Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs come here in second appeal. There can be no doubt that there was great irregularity in the proceedings prior to the granting of the ex parte decree. The provisions of Order XXXII, rule 3, were not observed. The Courts below, however, were of opinion that the decree was not void and could not be set aside on account of the irregularity. They refer to the cases of Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (1) and Munshi Munna Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (2). We think the Courts below were wrong. Assuming that the decree is not nullity, that in itself would not be a sufficient ground for dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. The Court ought to have considered whether the plaintiffs were prejudiced by the irregularity; if the minors had no opportunity of putting forward a defence to the suit, or in other words, if they were not represented in the Court below, they would be prejudiced. It seems to us that the appointment of an officer of the Court as guardian ad litem of minors without requiring the party at whose instance he is appointed to deposit the necessary funds to enable the guardian to defend the case, is little more than a farce. If, however, in the present case the order had been made with notice to the mother she might have objected to the appointment of the Amin, or at least have given him instructions as to the defence of the minors. There is no real hardship in requiring the party to deposit money to enable the Court official to enquire and get instructions on behalf of minors. If the party is successful in the litigation, the funds so deposited can be subsequently recovered. In the case of Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (1), the minors had been sued and had appeared throughout the proceedings with their mother as guardian ad litem. The irregularity in the case was the absence from the record of a formal order appointing the mother guardian ad litem. The mother was the person who would naturally have been appointed guardian had an application been made. And by appearing in the proceedings she showed that she had no objection to being guardian. The decree was granted in the year 1881 and the suit challenging its validity was not instituted until January 1895. Their Lordships held that the minors were "substantially" sued in the former suit. Their Lordships quote from the judgment of the High Court the following words: "It is necessary that the Court should see that a proper guardian be appointed to protect their interest. Section 443 of the Code is imperative on this point." Their Lordships then say: "In this statement of the law their Lordships entirely concur; and they desire to impress upon all the Courts in India the importance of following strictly the rules laid down in the section referred to". After this statement it seems to us impossible to contend that minors cannot have a decree declared not binding on them under circumstances like the present, where the appointment of the guardian was not only irregular but where in fact a decree was made without even notice to the minors. In Munshi Munna Lal v. Ghulam Abas (2) the only irregularity was the absence of the affidavit specified in section 457 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. This case was even a weaker one than the case above referred to. The minors were clearly and substantially represented and had every opportunity of putting forward their defence. It is contended by the learned Advocate on behalf of the respondent that the only remedy the minors had was to apply to have the ex parte decree set aside under the provisions of order IX, rule 13, of the Code of Civil Procedure. This rule enables a defendant who has not been served with the summons, or was prevented by some sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, to have an ex parte decree set aside. It is argued that the defendant against whom an ex parte decree has been made, who neglects to avail himself of the provisions of this rule, cannot afterwards bring an independent suit. This may be so. But this is not the case here. If the minors were parties to the suit, the only person who could make an application to have the ex parte decree set aside would be the Court Amin who was their irregularly appointed guardian ad litem. No such application was made by him. In our opinion we have to see whether the irregularity in the present case prejudiced or may have prejudiced the minors. Holding as we do that the minors were never properly represented and that the decree was made without notice to them or their natural guardian, we think that they are entitled to the declaration sought in the present suit.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and decree the plaintiffs' claim with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 38—Court of District Judge, power of — Original and Appellate jurisdiction—Enactments regulating procedure—Interpretation.

It was the intention of the Legislature to substitute in the Punjab, for all general purposes, the present Court of the District Judge for the former Court of the Divisional Judge as a Court of Appeal from decrees or orders of Subordinate Judges and Munsifs; but the Court of the present District Judge is essentially a new Court and not merely the successor or transferee of the business of the Court of the former Divisional Judge, within the meaning of section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Distinctive features of the present Court of the District Judge and the former Court of the Divisional Judge explained and illustrated.

Where, therefore, on the 18th July 1914, the then District Judge of Lahore passed certain orders in liquidation proceedings connected with the winding-up of certain banks and the Official Liquidators filed appeals under section 169 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882, on the 29th July 1914, in the Court of the Divisional Judge, Lahore, and while the appeals were still pending the new Punjab Courts Act came into force and abolished the Court of the Divisional Judge, on a reference whether the present District Judge of Lahore was competent to hear and determine the appeals:

Held, that as the appeals in question were preferred from orders passed by a District Judge, the Court which had jurisdiction to hear and determine them was the Chief Court and not the present District Judge.

Acts of the Legislature which regulate procedure, though in general retrospective in their effect, must not be interpreted so as to affect prejudicially the vested rights of the parties to a suit.

Case referred by the District Judge, Lahore, with his No. 1369, dated the 9th December 1914, for orders of the Chief Court of the Punjab, under section 113, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Herbert and Lala Madan Gopal, for the Petitioners.

Lala Durga Das and Mr. Mukerjee, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—Under section 113 of the Civil Procedure Code the District Judge of Lahore has stated the following case for the opinion of this Court. On the 18th of July 1914, the then "District Judge" of Lahore passed certain orders in liquidation proceedings connected with the winding-up of the "People's Bank, Limited" and the "Amritsar Bank, Limited" and from these orders the Official Liquidators filed appeals under section 169 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882, on the 29th July 1914, in the Court of the Divisional Judge of Lahore.

On the 1st of August 1914, while the said appeals were still pending, the Punjab Courts Act (Punjab Act III of 1914) came into force, and under the provisions of section 18 of that Act the Courts in the Punjab now consist of :—

(a) the Chief Court;
(b) the Courts of Small Causes established under the provisions of Act IX of 1887;
(c) the Court of the District Judge;
(d) the Court of the Additional Judge;
(e) the Court of the Subordinate Judge; and (f) the Court of the Munsif.

The result of this legislation is that the Court of the Divisional Judge, which was established under Act XVIII of 1884 and to which appeals in cases under the Indian Companies Act, 1882, in which the amount involved did not exceed Rs. 5,000, had been held by this Court to lie [see Basheshar Nath v. Kanhya Lal (1)], has ceased to exist. The new Act provides (section 38) that appeals from a decree of a District Judge or Additional Judge exercising original jurisdiction shall lie to the Chief Court, and the question before us is whether the present District Judge of Lahore is competent to hear and determine an appeal which was preferred to the former Divisional Judge from orders passed by the then District Judge under the Indian Companies Act, 1882.

The question is one of importance and of no little difficulty, and though directly relating to an appeal under section 169 of Act VI of 1882, indirectly affects the general jurisdiction of the District Judge as regards all appeals pending in the Court of the Divisional Judge at the time when the new Act came into force. We have, therefore, taken time to consider the question carefully before giving our answer to the present reference, especially as the matter is res integra and covered by no authority directly in point. As a result, the conclusions at which we have arrived are as follows: viz. :—

(i) that it was the intention of the Legislature to substitute, for all general purposes, the present Court of the District Judge for the former Court of the Divisional Judge as a Court of Appeal from decrees or orders of Subordinate Judges and Munsifs; but,

(ii) that the Court of the present District Judge is essentially a new Court and not merely the successor or transferee of the business of the Court of the former Divisional Judge, within the meaning of section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code.

That these propositions are correct is, we think, apparent from a comparison of the provisions of section 39 of Act XVIII of 1884 with those of section 39 of the present Act, and broadly speaking, we may say that the appellate jurisdiction of the two Courts is the same. But, apart from questions of local limits of jurisdiction, there are essential points of difference between their respective jurisdictions. Under section 22 of Act XVIII of 1884 the Divisional and District Courts both had original jurisdiction in civil suits, but under section 23 the District Judge's Court was to be deemed the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction. Section 24 of the present Act constitutes the District Judge's Court the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction. It is thus pro tanto a Court essentially distinct from the Court of the former Divisional Judge.

Again, appeals from decrees or orders of a District Judge in original suits where the value did not exceed Rs. 5,000 lay, under Act XVIII of 1884, to the Court of the Divisional Judge. Under section 38 of the present Act, appeals from all decrees or orders of a District Judge lie to the Chief Court. And, finally, the Divisional Judge had no jurisdiction under Act XVIII of 1884 to hear appeals from decrees of Munsifs in small causes the value of which did not exceed Rs. 500, or in unclassed suits the value of which did not exceed Rs. 100, and such appeals, when allowed by law, lay to the District Judge. Under the present Act all such appeals, when allowed by law, lie to the District Judge.

Having regard, then, to these very essential differences, we cannot say that the present District Judge is the successor of the former Divisional Judge or that the new Act has merely effected a change in nomenclature. The present District Judge's Court is, in fact, a new creation and its jurisdiction is in some respects similar to, in others more extensive and in others again more restricted than, the jurisdiction of the former Court of the Divisional Judge.

Keeping this fact in mind, we have now to decide whether it is competent to a District Judge to hear and determine appeals which were preferred to the Divisional Judge at a time when the Court of the latter was still in existence. This question gave rise to no difficulty when under the provisions of Act XVIII of 1884, the Courts of Deputy Commissioners and Commissioners were re-placed by Courts of District and Divisional Judges, as express provision was made by section 68 of that Act to meet the case of pending proceedings (see Chief Court's Book, Circular No. XIII—2519 of 1884 pages 14—18 of the Punjab Record, 1884, "Chief Court Circulars"). In this connection and before proceeding, we may observe that we have not overlooked the provisions of section 24 (1) (b) of the Civil Procedure Code and section 48 of the Punjab Courts Act, 1914, which gives this Court the power to transfer any suit, appeal or other proceeding pending in any Court subordinate to it for trial and disposal to any other Court subordinate to it. We have, however, grave doubt whether an appeal that was on the 31st July 1914 pending in the Court of a Divisional Judge can be said, after that Court has ceased to exist, to be pending in a Court subordinate to the Chief Court, and in any event so far as this particular reference is concerned, the Court of a District Judge would not be competent under the present Punjab Courts Act to hear and dispose of an appeal from the Court of a District Judge.

The question must, in our opinion, be decided with reference to general principles of law, and more especially to those embodied in section 4 of the General Clauses Act (Punjab Act I of 1898). It is a well-recognized canon of construction that acts of the Legislature which regulate procedure, though in general retrospective in their effect, must not be interpreted so as to affect prejudicially the vested rights of the parties to a suit and that a right of appeal which has accrued is such vested right [see Vedavalli Narasiah v. Mangamma (2), Deoki Nandan v. Harnam Das (3)]. Then, section 4 of the Punjab General Clauses Act, 1898, provides as follows:—

"4. Where this Act or any Punjab Act repeals any enactment, then, unless a different intention appears, the repeal shall not

"(a) revive anything not in force or existing at the time at which the repeal takes effect; or

"(b) affect the previous operation of any enactment so repealed or anything duly done or suffered thereunder; or

"(c) affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under any enactment so repealed; or

"(d) affect any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed; or

"(e) affect any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture or punishment as aforesaid; and any such investigation, legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced and any such penalty, forfeiture or punishment may be imposed as if the Repealing Act had not been passed."

There is nothing in the Punjab Courts Act, 1914, indicative of an intention on the part of the Legislature to affect (1) the previous operation of the repealed Acts so far as pending appeals are concerned, or (2) rights acquired or accrued under such Acts, or (3)* legal proceedings or remedies in respect of any such rights. We must assume, therefore, that any such "legal proceeding or remedy" should be continued or enforced as if the Repealing Act had not been passed. The sole difficulty lies in deciding as to the Tribunal in which such proceedings are to be continued or such remedy enforced. This is a real difficulty, but after full consideration of the arguments addressed to us, we are of opinion that the intention of the Legislature must have been that the Tribunal competent to dispose of such legal proceedings and to enforce such remedies is the Tribunal which could have been competent to dispose of them if the appeals had been instituted after the present Punjab Courts Act had come into force. Upon this view of the case we must, in the present case, hold that as the appeals in question were preferred from orders passed by a District Judge, the Court which has jurisdiction to hear and determine them is, under section 38 of that Act, the Chief Court and not the present District Judge. We reply accordingly to the reference under consideration, and we direct the District Judge to return the appeals to the Fraudulent decree, setting aside of—Court, power of—Inherent jurisdiction—Remedy—Review—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 151, O. XLI, r. 19.

A Court has not only power but it is its duty to set aside a decree obtained by fraud practised upon the Court, when it is apprised of it.

Where a decree-holder gets a consent decree fraudulently passed in his favour by suppressing the service of summons and by getting a false and fraudulent vakalatnamah and a petition of compromise filed, the decree can be set aside on review and the fact that it is set aside under a wrong section is no ground of interference by a High Court.

A Court has inherent jurisdiction to correct its own procedure where it has been misled.

Rule against an order of the District Judge, Monghyr, dated the 24th July 1914.

Moulvi Khursed Hossain, for the Petitioner.

Babu Karunamoy Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The opposite party in this Rule made an application to the Court below to set aside a decree passed by consent in an appeal to which he was the respondent. It is found by the learned District Judge that the appellant, the petitioner in this Court, got the service of the notice of the appeal suppressed and had a false and fraudulent vakalatnama and a petition of compromise filed, and that the opposite party came to know about the compromise decree only after process in execution of the decree was taken out. The learned Judge accordingly set aside the compromise decree and ordered that the appeal be heard. The petitioner thereupon obtained this Rule, and it is contended on his behalf that a decree by consent can be set aside only by a regular suit and that at any rate the decree could not be set aside upon an application under Order XLI, rule 19, of the Civil Procedure Code.

Reliance is placed upon the case of Gulab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (1), in which the questions whether a decree by consent can be set aside by an application for review or by way of motion, or whether a regular suit is the only, at any rate, the most appropriate remedy, have been elaborately discussed. It is unnecessary, however, to consider the broad questions or the authorities discussed in that case. In the present case, according to the finding of the Judge, there was no consent given by the opposite party to the decree: he did not appear in the appeal at all, and in fact had no notice of the appeal and had nothing to do with the vakalatnama or the petition of compromise It is, therefore, not a case where a party gives his consent and afterwards seeks to impeach it on the ground that his consent was obtained by fraud. In Gulab Koer's case (1) the learned Judge, in distinguishing the case of Unnoda Dabee v. Stevenson (2) (where the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that it was competent to the Court to set aside on review a decree against an infant who was not represented before the Court and on whose behalf there was no assent to the compromise by any competent person), observed "This case is manifestly distinguishable, on the ground that it was in essence an application by a person to vacate a decree which was made in her absence and without her consent. She asked to be relieved from the effects of a decree to which in substance she was not a party—a condition of things entirely different from what we find in the class of cases where a person who is a party to a suit assents to a consent-decree which he subsequently seeks to impeach on the ground that his assent was obtained by fraud."

The decree in the present case, therefore, could be set aside on review. It is pointed out, however, that the decree has been set aside upon an application under Order XLI, rule 19. That rule relates to setting aside an order of dismissal of an appeal for default, and can have no application to the present case. It appears that the application to set aside the decree was originally made under Order XLVII, rule 1 (the review section), but by a subsequent petition was amended so as to be an application under Order XLI, rule 19, of the Civil Procedure Code. If, however, the Court had the power to set aside the decree, we should not interfere merely because it wast set aside under a wrong section, and as for the contention that the proper Court-fee payable upon an application for review had not been paid, it could be met by our ordering (under section 12 of the Court Fees Act) the opposite party to pay the necessary Court-fee, if we were of opinion that the Court had no power to set aside the decree except by an application for review of judgment. We are of opinion, however, that under the circumstances found by the learned District Judge the Court had an inherent jurisdiction to set aside the decree. Not only has the Court power, but it is its duty to set aside a decree obtained by fraud practised upon the Court, when apprised of it. We agree with the following observations made in a case in the Bombay High Court, in which a decree by consent was set aside in a summary manner upon an application by the defendant:—" What the defendant says is that there was a suit against him, and that the suit was declared to have ended by reason of a decree passed with his consent. He never consented, and the result has been that there has been fraud committed upon the Court. The Court was persuaded to sign a decree to which the defendant had never consented and that upon the representation that he had consented to it. Therefore, once the Court is asked to go back upon its own procedure, it is not a question whether there is any section in the Civil Procedure Code to warrant the action of the Court amending its proceedings. It is an inherent power of every Court to correct its own proceedings where it has been misled." [See Basangouda Hanmantgouda v. Churchigirigouda Yogangouda (3)].

We are accordingly of opinion that the order of the Court below, though passed under a wrong section, should not be set aside.

The learned Pleader for the petitioner invited us to hold that the findings of the learned Judge are incorrect, but we cannot in revision go behind the findings arrived at. As for the contention that the petitioner may be prejudiced if any proceedings are taken against him upon the findings arrived at by the Judge, all that we need say is that there will be a fresh and independent enquiry if any such proceedings are taken against him.

The Rule must be discharged with costs, one gold mohur.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 29—Suit for dissolution of partnership and accounts—Jurisdiction—Material irregularity—Revision.

A Judge acts with material irregularity if he misapprehends the nature of the plaintiff's claim and the provisions of Article 29 of Act IX of 1887, and in such a case the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain an application for revision.

A suit for partnership accounts with an allegation that the partnership has been dissolved and containing also an alternative prayer for the dissolution of the partnership if it has not been dissolved, is triable by a Munsif and not by a Small Cause Court.

Civil revision against an order of the District Judge of Agra.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The facts which have led to the making of this application are as follows:—

The plaintiff-applicant filed a suit in the Court of the Judge of Small Causes at Agra for the recovery of Rs. 177-9-7 on partnership account. The plaint was returned by the learned Judge of Small Cause Court for presentation to proper Court, on the ground that under Article 29, clause (b), of Act IX of 1887 such a suit was not maintainable in his Court. The plaint was then presented by the plaintiff-applicant to the Munsif of Agra. One of the pleas urged by the defendants in their written statement was that the plaintiff should sue for dissolution of partnership. The plaintiff amended his plaint by adding a paragraph to it, to the effect that partnership between him and the defendants had been dissolved on the 15th of March 1910, and asked for an additional relief, namely, that in case the Court found that the partnership had not been dissolved, a decree for dissolution of partnership be passed. After amendment of the plaint the Munsif rejected it, holding that he had no jurisiction to entertain the suit as it was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the first Court and upheld its order. The plaintiff has come up in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and contends that the Munsif had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents to the effect that no revision lies. It is said that the learned District Judge had jurisdiction to entertain and hear the appeal and the mere fact that he came to an erroneous decision according to the plaintiff-applicant, does not entitle the latter to come up in revision here. I do not think that the objection of the respondents is sound. The want of jurisdiction is not the only ground upon which an aggrieved party may apply for revision. The plaintiff-applicant does not deny that the learned Judge had jurisdiction to entertain and hear the appeal, but says that he exercised his jurisdiction with material irregularity inasmuch as he misapprehended the nature of the plaintiff's claim and the provisions of Article 29 of Act IX of 1887.

I have read the plaint carefully and it appears to me that the amendment made by the plaintiff in the Court of the Munsif did not render the claim exclusively triable by the Small Cause Court or oust the jurisdiction of the Munsif. It is true that the amended paragraph of the plaint contains the allegation of the dissolution of partnership on a certain date, but it is nowhere stated that a balance of partnership accounts was struck by the parties or their agents on or after the dissolution of partnership. The claim still remains for an account of partnership transactions, or for dissolution of partnership and for an account of partnership transactions. In either case the claim is one which should be heard by a regular Court, and not by a Small Cause Court. The learned Judge seems to have taken the claim to be for the balance of partnership accounts which has been struck by the parties or their agents, as mentioned in Article 29 (c) of Act IX of 1887. The language of the plaint shows clearly that the claim was not for the recovery of the balance of partnership accounts struck by the parties or their agents. In my opinion the suit of the plaintiff is within the jurisdiction of the Munsif and should be entertained by him. As the order of the learned Judge was made under a misapprehension of the nature of the claim of the plaintiff-applicant it is liable to revision. The preliminary objection for the respondents fails and the application is allowed. The order of the Court below is set aside and the Munsif will receive the plaint and try the case according to law. Costs of this application are allowed to the applicant.

Application allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 72—Execution of decree—Decree for sale of land—Reference to Collector—Executing Court, power of.

A Court executing a decree for sale of mortgaged land sent it to a Collector to sell the mortgaged land. He directed a Sub-Divisional Officer to carry out the sale. The latter officer proposed temporary alienation of the property. The Court was of opinion that it was bound to sell the property and no reference could be made under section 72 of the Civil Procedure Code. On appeal the view taken by the Court was held to be erroneous. The execution Court then referred the case to the Collector under section 72 of the Civil Procedure Code. On appeal it was contended that the order was ultra vires.

Held, that the contention was untenable.

GURANDITTA MAL v. J. RUSTOMJI.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 16th October 1913, referring the case to the Collector for intervention.

Mr. Broadway and Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., and Mr. K. J. Rustomji and Lala Dharpat Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is from an order of the District Judge, Lahore, passed in execution proceedings.

The decree in question was passed in favour of the respondent upon a compromise, dated the 27th of April 1909. The decree was for money and its interpretation has already been the subject of an appeal to a Division Bench of this Court (Case No. 754 of 1911), decided on the 3rd of April 1913. In that order it was held that the District Judge was not right in holding that, in view of the terms of the decree, he was bound to sell the mortgaged property in execution and that he was precluded from accepting the recommendations of the Collector under section 72, Civil Procedure Code, for its satisfaction within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation of the land belonging to the judgment-debtor. When the case went back to the District Judge, he referred it to the Collector under section 72, Civil Procedure Code. From this order the judgment-debtor appeals.

His contention is that previously the case was referred to the Collector and that proposals were made by the Revenue Authorities for satisfaction of the decree by a temporary alienation of the land, and that the Court should act upon this recommendation, and that there was no necessity to again refer the case to the Collector. What happened was that on the 9th of December 1910, the District Judge ordered the sale of the attached land and sent the papers to the Collector of the Lahore District in order that the sale should be carried out. The Collector ordered the Sub-Divisional Officer, Kasur, to carry out the sale. That officer, however, instead of selling the land made proposals for realization of the decree by a temporary alienation, and returned the papers direct to the District Judge. The latter by his order, dated the 7th of April 1911, held that, as the decree provided that the decree-money should be realized by sale of the attached property, there could be no reference to the Collector under section 72, Civil Procedure Code, and the land should be sold. From this order the judgment-debtor appealed to this Court, Civil Appeal No. 754 of 1911, with the result already stated.

Mr. Shafi for the respondent-decree-holder contends that the Sub-Divisional Officer, Kasur, was not the Collector and had no power to arrange for the realization of the decree by a temporary alienation of the land. "Collector" is defined in the General Clauses Act, section 3 (10), as meaning the Chief Officer in charge of the revenue administration of a district. The same definition is given in the Punjab General Clauses Act. There is no definition of Collector in the Civil Procedure Code and we must, therefore, take the definition given in the General Clauses Act. By Collector in section 72 of the Code is, therefore, meant the Deputy Commissioner of the District. The Sub-Divisional Officer, Kasur, cannot be considered the Collector; when the District Judge sent the case to the Collector on the 9th of December 1910, he did so in order that the land might be sold. He made no reference at that time under section 72, Civil Procedure Code. The Collector merely delegated his power of sale to the Sub-Divisional Officer. He did not and probably could not delegate to that officer any power to arrange for the satisfaction of the decree by a temporary alienation of the land. I must, therefore, hold that the District Judge was not bound by the previous recommendations of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Kasur, and there is no reason for interference with the order appealed from.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed, but I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Appeal dismissed.

FACTS appear fully from the following Order of Reference made by Robinson, J.

Plaintiffs sued Maung Shwe Po, alleging that by a registered deed of sale dated the 10th April 1908, he had sold them his land containing then 48'98 acres and now 54'81 acres and that he had now begun ploughing a part of the land. He asked for a perpetual injunction. Defendant replied that the land had belonged to him and his wife jointly. She died ten years ago leaving one son. The land was mortgaged in 1905 to a Chetty. In 1908 the Chetty was returning to India and wanted his money, so he got plaintiffs to pay the prinicpal for him, he giving them a mortgage by conditional sale in return. On 10th April 1908 he executed the document put forward, having been led to believe it was in accordance with their agreement. He and his son remained in possession paying plaintiffs their interest. He also pleaded that his son was interested to the extent of a half share and should be made a party.

Then plaintiff filed an amended plaint, adding the son San E. as defendant and changing his prayer to one for possession and partition if defendant No. 2 be found to be entitled to any share.

Written statements were put in; defendant No. 1 pleaded as before but added that the land was worth Rs. 5,000, that he had paid plaintiff all the interest and some principal, in all Rs. 3,105, that defendant No. 2 was interested in a half share and that the amended plaint should be rejected as setting up a claim of a substantially different character.

Defendant No. 2 pleaded that his father could alienate only one half.

I should have pointed out that the amended plaint was filed in consequence of an order, dated the 23rd September 1911, in which the Sub-Divisional Judge held that he could not grant a perpetual injunction, but that instead of dismissing the suit straight off it would be better to direct plaintiff to amend and sue for possession.

On the amended pleadings a large number of issues were drawn. The first Court held by an order, dated the 24th November 1911, that the suit should not be dismissed on the ground that the amendment made it one of a substantially different character. On the merits he found the deed of the 19th April 1908 had been executed owing to misrepresentation by plaintiff and that plaintiff was really a mortgagee. He found Rs. 875 was still due and gave plaintiff a decree for that amount and that if it was paid by the 12th May 19 2, plaintiff should reconvey the land to defendants, failing which defendant should be barred from redeeming.

The learned Divisional Judge held that the evidence did not establish misrepresentation, that it was more probable that defendant knew what he was executing but thought, as plaintiff did, that nevertheless he could redeem, that they could not go behind the deed and show it was meant to be a mortgage and not a sale and that the sale was good to the extent of three-quarters.

The points that I have to decide are:—

(1) whether amendment should have been allowed ?

(2) was there misrepresentation ?

(3) if not, was the sale good to the extent of half or three-quarters of the land ?

Under our present Code of Civil Procedure amendment is a matter of discretion and though as a general proposition it may be said that if the amendment results in changing the claim to one of a substantially different character, the Court would wisely exercise its discretion by not allowing it, I do not think it should ever be regarded as a hard and fast rule. It is true that in the present suit there is such a change, but it was carefully considered and the amendment was made under the orders of the Court. It was again considered and an Appellate Court does not lightly interfere with a discretion carefully exercised where no injury has resulted. There has been no injury in the present case, and the result has been to bring the parties to issue on the real points of dispute and has permitted a final disposal of their differences. I see no reason for interfering now.

As to misrepresentation, it is to be noted that in the amended plaint the principal due to the Chetty is said to be Rs. 1,400, and Shwe Po says also in his evidence that plaintiff paid Rs. 2,000 but why does not appear. seeing he was to pay only the principal due. Kyauk Pa, plaintiff No. 2, paid the Chetty Rs. 2,000, and got back the mortgage. This was fifteen days before the deed of sale was executed. Shwe Po says he was asked to sign the deed outside the Sub-Registrar's office. He asked Kyauk Pa if it was written in accordance with the original promise and if he would accept two and a half per cent. interest. He says he did not know that U Bein's (plaintiff No. 1) name was entered nor that there was no mention of interest until he was sued. He says he worked the land in 1270 and 1271 and paid Rs. 540 as interest for each year. In cross-examination he says Kyauk Pa only paid the Chetty Rs. 2,000, i. e., Rs. 1,400 principal and Rs. 600 interest, on condition he got the deed which was to provide that if he could not repay, the land was to become Kyauk Pa's. Further that no time for payment was fixed and that so long as he paid the interest, the right to redeem remained. He denies that he read the deed or that he had it read to him by any one. He admits that pyesas were issued in Kayuk Pa's name, but he kept quiet. He took no receipts for payments he made as he trusted Kyauk Pa.

The onus of proving misrepresentation lies heavily on defendant. I cannot overlook the very doubtful character of his evidence. He distinctly stated that the agreement between him and Kyauk Pa was that the latter was to pay the principal and defendant himself the interest. This he changes in his evidence. This may be, of course, but due to his instructions having been mistaken, but if Kyauk Pa was to pay off the mortgage and merely take the Chetty's place, there was no questoion of a sale. Yet it is clear from defendant's own evidence that Kyauk Pa demanded a sale. He says in describing the conversation that Kyauk Pa in answer to the suggestion that he should step into the Chetty's shoes said: "no, by a sale I mean a mortgage and sale, by which I mean that I could redeem my land at any time on payment of the principal and interest." The evidence is agreed that Kyauk Pa at once demanded a sale outright, but he forthwith gave way and agreed to defendant having a right to re-purchase. I am satisfied that it was intended that the document should evidence a sale, though it is quite possible that defendant asked to be allowed to buy his land back and this may have been granted. This, however, is a different thing to proving that the document was deliberately drawn up as a sale, when the agreement was that it was to effect a mortgage by conditional sale. It would, in accordance with the custom and practice, be drawn up as an out and out sale. Defendant can read and might have read it, had he chosen and if he did not, he took the risk. I am not satisfied that there was any misrepresentation and I agree with the learned Divisional Judge that it is quite likely that they may have thought a right of re purchase still remained. This being so, it is not open to defendant to go behind the deed and prove it was intended to be something other than it was. This is admitted.

There remains the question whether the sale is good in respect of half or three-quarters of the land; it does not seem to have been questioned by either party that it cannot be good so far as San E's share of one-fourth is concerned. He was the only son of Shwe Po's first marriage. It is not suggested that he agreed to the sale or that he knew anything about it, though it may be questioned whether he did not.

The learned Divisional Judge has merely referred to certain authorities quoted in a written argument filed before him and holds it is good to the extent of three-quarters. The property was the joint property of Shwe Po and his wife, Ma Tok. She died leaving one son San E. Since the ruling in Ma On v. Shwé O. (1) it appears to have always been held in Lower Burma that on the death of one party to a marriage, the survivor has an absolute power of disposal over half the joint property and has a life-interest only in the other half, with a power of selling it to meet the necessities of the family subject to the eldest child's right to claim a quarter share. [See Ma Nyo v. Ma Yauk (2) and Ma Po v. Ma Thin Yin (3)].

In Upper Burma, however, a different rule is held to be the law. It is there held that on the death of the husband his widow succeeds to the estate, with the exception of certain specified property and one-fourth of the estate which go to the eldest son and of certain specified property which goes to the eldest daughter, that with the exception of this portion the widow is at liberty to spend the whole of the estate if she chooses to, and not merely for necessities. Further, that the texts of the Dhammathats, on which the doctrine that the widow can only spend the estate for necessities is based, refer to the spending of the specified property set apart for the eldest daughter and not to the spending of the bulk of the estate. Mi Saw Myin v. Mi Shwe Thin (4). In the case it is pointed out that in Ma On v. Shwe O (1) the opinion of Mr. Jardine in Nga Shwe Yo v. Mi San Byu (5) was followed, but the special Court overlooked the fact that Mr. Jardine has resiled to a great extent from that opinion in Maung Po Lat v. Mi Po Le (6.)

The authorities are quoted in Maung Tha Gywe's Treatise on Buddhist Law Volume II, pages 36 onwards and I need not cite them all here. The question is one of great importance. The rulings in Ma On v. Shwe O (1) and Nga Shwe Yo v. Mi San Byu (5) have always been followed without question since they were issued, except for the remarks in Mg. Po Lat v. Mi Po Le (6) which have not so far as I can find been noticed. I, therefore, refer for a decision of a Bench the following questions :—

In respect of property jointly owned by a Burmese Buddhist husband and wife on the death of the husband, has the widow an absolute disposing power over her half share of the property only or over three-fourths of the whole property, (a) where there is only one child of the marriage living, and (b) where there are several children ?

The former question only really arises in this case, but it will be necessary to consider the whole question in order to arrive at a decision. I refer the latter branch also subject to the decision of the Bench as to whether it can be referred.

Mr. R. N. Burjorjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gimcalla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, J.—The question referred by Mr. Justice Robinson in this case is as follows :—

"In respect of property jointly owned by a Burmese Buddhist husband and wife on the death of the husband, has the widow an absolute disposing power over her half share of the property only or over three-fourths of the whole property, (a) where there is only one child of the marriage living, and (b) where there are several children ?"

The land in suit was acquired by the 1st defendant, Shwe Po, and his wife, Ma Tok as their joint property. They had issue, one son, the second defendant, San E. Ma Tok died about 10 years before the suit was filed.

Subsequently, Shwe Po married a second wife, Ma Nyein U. There was no partition of the property with the son, San E. After the second marriage, Shwe Po sold the land without the consent of San E.

It is clear that the question referred by the learned Judge does not arise, as this is not a case of a widow's estate at all. By consent, the reference has been amended as follows :—

A, a Burmese Buddhist, and his wife, B, jointly acquire certain property. There is an issue of a marriage, one son, C. B dies. A marries again without partitioning the property with his son C. To what extent can A dispose absolutely of the property?

It is clear that as regards one half of the property at least, the widower has an absolute right of disposal. This is admittedly settled law both in Upper and Lower Burma.

The son could certainly have claimed a one-fourth share on his father's second marriage. [See authorities cited in Seik Maung Kaung v. Maung Po Nyein (7).] He could apparently claim this share at any time within twelve years of the marriage (Article 123, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act) and this period had not expired at the time of the sale. From the time of the marriage he had an immediate right to get one-fourth of the undivided family property, and it seems reasonable to hold that the purchaser having bought the land within twelve years of the marriage took it subject to this right. The purchaser presumably knew or could easily have ascertained the fact that Shwe Po had a son by a former marriage who had not got yet his quarter share. Moreover the respondent did not appeal against the Divisional Court's decree, which in effect disallowed the sale as regards the son's quarter share.

The only question is whether it should be disallowed also as regards another quarter, i.e., the residue after deducting the son's quarter and the half share over which the father admittedly had full disposing power.

It has been held in Upper Burma [see Sa So v. Mi Han (8)] that when an only son who is also an only child has taken his one-fourth share as auratha, the widow has absolute disposing power over the remaining three-fourths of the estate. This is in conformity with the view taken in the Lower Burma case Mg Hmu v. Po Thin (9), where it was held that the eldest son after taking his one-fourth share has no right to a further partition nor any right in the remainder of the estate (except a right of pre-emption in case of sale by other co-heirs.)

Does it make any difference that the son had not exercised his right before the land was sold? Is he nevertheless to be limited to the one-fourth share which he could have got by claiming partition before the sale? It is true that it was family property when the father sold it, but the whole title was in him subject only to the auratha's right. By not making an immediate claim to the one-fourth share the son might get a larger share (by partition with his step-mother and step-brothers, if any) when the estate fell in on his father's death. But in that case he would take the ordinary risk of an expectant heir and could only share in whatever residue happened to be left on his father's death.

Arguments have been addressed to us as to the application of the rule laid down by the Special Court in Ma On v. Shwe O (1), that as regards one half of the joint property of herself and her deceased husband a widow has only a life-interest with a power of sale in case of necessity. It is faintly contended that the same rule should be applied by analogy to the case of a widower with an only son.

The sale in the present case is admittedly voidable as regards one-fourth, because it was sold burdened with the auratha's right. Is it also voidable as regards any remaining part of the three-fourths on the ground that the sale was not a sale for necessity? It is clearly not voidable as regards half out of three-fourths, for that half was admittedly the father's own to deal with as he pleased. As regards the remaining one-fourth, whatever might be the case if there were more than one child of Maung Shwe Po's first marriage, there is, so far as I can find, no authority for holding that a father with a single son is under any such restriction. Assuming that the rule laid down in Ma On v. Shwe O (1) is well founded, I can see no reason for applying it in such a case as this. The only son is safeguarded as regards one-fourth of the estate and that is all that he could get in his father's life-time He can only so claim it within the period of limitation. There are no younger children whose interests have to be considered. If the rule laid down in Ma On v. Shwe O (1) has any reason to support it, it is only that this protection is desirable in the interests of the younger children who cannot claim partition till both parents are dead. But it would be unreasonable to extend it to the case of an only son who deliberately refrains from claiming his due share in his father's life-time and takes his chance of obtaining a larger fractional share in the residue after his father's death.

The correctness of the rule laid down in Ma On v. Shwe O (1) has been seriously disputed in the arguments of Counsel, and it has been brought to our notice that the Dhammathats on which the rule is based have lately been interpreted by the Judicial Commissioner, Upper Burma, in a different sense. But holding that the rule in question has no application to the present reference, I think that we are not in a position now to deal with the conflict of authority or to re-consider the judgment of the Special Court.

I would answer the (amended) reference by saying that the widower A in the circumstances stated can dispose absolutely of three-fourths of the property.

FOX, C.J.—I agree in Mr. Justice Twomey's answer to the amended question consented to by the Advocates.

I have nothing further to add.

Ten gold mohurs allowed as Advocate's fee in the reference.

These costs will follow the result of the case.

HARTNOLL, J.—The reference as made by Mr. Justice Robinson does not fit the facts of the present case and is in addition unnecessarily wide. It has, therefore, been amended as set out by Mr. Justice Twomey, whose judgment I have had the privilege of reading.

At the hearing of the reference the main argument raised was that the decision in the case of Ma On v. Shwe O (1) was erroneous and that the decision in the case of Mi Saw Myin v. Mi Shwe Thin (4) should be followed. My learned colleague, Mr. Justice Twomey, considers that in this reference the case of Ma On v. Shwe O (1) is not in point in that in the present case no younger children were left. When the first wife, Ma Tok, died only one son, San E, was left. I agree with this view. The case of Maung Seik Kaung v. Maung Po Nyein (7) decided that on the death of the mother, if the father marries again the eldest son can claim a fourth share of the general joint estate of the parents, and with this decision I agree. In the present case, therefore, when Mg. Shwe Po married again, San E had the right to claim a fourth share in the joint property of his parents. He was not in the position of a younger child who cannot claim a share in the inheritance until the death of both parents. He had the right to claim this one-fourth share during the period allowed by the Law of Limitation and if during such a period the respondents purchased the land from Mg. Shwe Po, they would take it subject to San E's right to claim his share. No issue has been fixed and decided as to whether the respondents purchased during such period, though it seems probable that they did; but assuming that the purchase took place after such period of limitation, what is the position? As Mg. San E had allowed the period of limitation to pass, he could not claim his one-fourth share and so it became irrecoverable and lapsed in his father's estate. He could claim nothing further until his father died and then he would claim not as an heir entitled to inherit a portion of the estate consequent on his mother's death, but as an heir to his father's estate. In his case, claiming as an heir of his mother in his father's life-time, there is no provision of Buddhist Law to apply, such as was found to exist in the case of Ma On v. Shwe O (1) in favour of younger children and so nothing to prevent his father disposing of his lapsed share in toto.

The Divisional Judge has held the sale to be good to the extent of three-quarters and in any case in the view I take it was good to such an extent.

I would answer the reference as amended by my learned colleague, Mr. Justice Twomey, by saying:—

"In any view of the circumstances the sale was good as regards three-quarters of the land; if the period of limitation had lapsed during which San E could claim his share, the sale would be good as regards the whole of the land."

The last part of the answer is not necessary, as respondents have not appealed against the dismissal of their claim to one-fourth of the land.

Reference answered.

Execution of decree—Mortgage-decree—Declaratory decree—Mortgagee's rights to possession of mortgaged property declared—Cause of action—Fresh suit.

Where a Court passes a decree for money to be realized by sale of the mortgaged property and possession of the property is not decreed, but it is noted that the plaintiff shall be competent to enter in possession of the mortgaged property and to retain possession thereof till such time as the sale thereof takes place and the decree is finally confirmed by the Court, the decree-holder is not entitled to obtain possession by executing the decree, though he may have a cause of action to sue for possession of the property.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 16th October 1913, refusing to give the decree-holder possession of the land mortgaged.

Mr. K. J. Rustomji and Lala Dhanpat Rai, for the Appellant.

Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is closely connected with Civil appeal No. 95 of 1914* and is from the District Judge's order refusing to give the decree-holder possession of the land mortgaged. It is urged, rather in a half-hearted manner, that the decree allows the plaintiff to take possession of the land; a perusal of the decree, however, shows that possession of the land was not decreed to the plaintiff. The decree was for a specified sum of money and laid down that the plaintiff shall be at liberty to realize the said amount by attachment and sale of the property mortgaged. The decree then went on as follows:—

"It being noted that plaintiff shall be competent to enter in possession of the mortgaged property, save the house in Jauri Mori, and to retain possession thereof till such time as the sale thereof takes place and is finally confirmed by the Court, provided that the plaintiff do give credit to the defendant," and so on. The decree-holder may under this decree have a cause of action to sue for possession of the mortgaged property, but he cannot get possession by execution. The matter is quite clear.

The appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 46 OF 1914.

November 26, 1914.

Present:—Justice Sir George Knox, Kt.

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

MRS. E. FELYUN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 49—Hire and purchase system—Sewing machine purchased on instalment system—Suit for return of machine—Non-payment of instalments—Limitation.

The mere non-payment of rent for a sewing machine taken on the hire and purchase system would not amount to wrongful taking or wrongful detention of the machine within the meaning of Article 49 of the Limitation Act. There must be some overt act or demand for the machine by the hirer and refusal by the purchaser.

Gopal Chandra Bose v. Surendra Nath Dutt, 12 C. W. N 1010, Gopalasami Iyer v. Subramania Sastri, 12 Ind. Cas. 207; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 190, 10 M. L. T. 572; 22 M. L. J. 152; 35 M. 636, referred to.

Ram Singh v. Salig Ram, 28 A. 84; A. W. N. (1905) 193, 2 A. L. J. 711, distinguished.

Civil revision from a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Allahabad.

FACTS.—On 27th January 1908, defendants 2nd party took a sewing machine on hire-purchase system from the Singer Sewing Machine Company, Limited, on Rs. 80 promising to pay the money by instalments of Rs. 5 per month. The defendants did not pay the instalment from June 1908 and hence the suit was brought for recovery of rent and for delivery of the machine or for its price. The defendants pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation. The Small Cause Court Judge held that the cause of action accrued when the defendants failed to pay rent and so dismissed the suit as barred by limitation.

The plaintiff applied in revision to the High Court.

Mr. Pearey Lal Banerjea, for the Appellant:—The learned Judge erred in holding that the suit is time-barred. He entirely misunderstood the relation between the parties. The defendants hired the machine and were in possession on behalf of the plaintiff. Their possession cannot be wrongful until he does some overt act of wrongful taking or until the Company made a demand and they refused to pay the rent or to deliver the machine. Until then, time cannot begin to run against the Company. The simple fact of non-payment cannot make their detention of the machine or the taking of it wrongful.

SINGER MANFG. CO. v. M. PELYUN.

I rely on Gopal Chandra Bose v. Surendra Nath Dutt (1), Gopalasami Iyer v. Subramania Sastri (2), Shumboo Chunder Mullick v. Pran Kristo Mullick (3).

The lower Court's order is calculated to cause grave injustice and I submit that this Court should interfere and set aside the order.

Mr. Simeon, for the Opposite Party:—The defendants were bound to pay the rent regularly. Under clause (d) of the agreement entered into between the parties, the owner could terminate the hiring and re-take possession any moment. The non-payment by the defendants injured the right of the plaintiff at once and he should have brought the suit within the time allowed by law under Articles 48, 49 and 50 of the Limitation Act. His failure to do so has clearly barred his rights and his suit was rightly dismissed.

Moreover this application should not be entertained. The lower Court has jurisdiction to decide the case in any way it liked and an error of law is no ground for revision. There is no question of jurisdiction involved and, therefore, no application lies.

I rely on Ram Singh v. Salig Ram (4).

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Judge of the Small Cause Court, Allahabad. The case as laid before the Small Cause Court Judge briefly is that on the 27th of January 1908 the defendants, who are the second party in this Court, took a machine from the Singer Manufacturing Company on what is known as the hire and purchase system. The value of the machine is said to be Rs. 80 and in the plaint it is alleged that Rs. 20 has been paid and the balance, which was under the agreement between the parties to be recovered by monthly instalments of Rs. 5, has not been paid. The last date on which it is said payment of this monthly instalment was made, is put as April 1908. The relief prayed for by the plaintiff was that a decree be passed against the defendants for Rs. 40, rent running from 27th November 1912 to 27th July 1913, and for delivery of the machine or for its value together with costs and future interest. In the reply it was contended that the suit was barred by limitation. There were other pleas, but they are unnecessary for the purpose of this application. The Court below having found that the case was within its jurisdiction went on to hold that the claim was barred by limitation. The Articles which the Court below considered were Articles barring this claim are Articles 48, 49 and 50 of the Limitation Act. Holding that the suit was barred the Court below dismissed it. This Court is asked to interfere on the ground that the Court below has entirely failed to appreciate the relation existing between the plaintiff and the defendants who had hired the machine and who are in possession of it on behalf of the plaintiff. It is difficult to understand the reasoning adopted by the learned Judge of the Court below. In his judgment he says that under clause (d) of the agreement entered into between the parties, the owner could terminate the hiring and retake possession of the machine and accessories He holds that the cause of action accrued when the hirer failed to pay in any month in advance. This failure first took place according to the learned Judge in June 1908 and the suit became barred under Article 49 of the Limitation Act with effect from 27th June 1911. I think the learned Judge has entirely overlooked the conditions of the transaction with regard to this machine. There could not have been any wrongful taking or wrongful detention until there had been some overt act of wrongful taking or some demand made by the Company and refusal by the defendants. The mere non-payment of rent would not amount to wrongful taking or wrongful detention. The act of the defendants would appear to fall if it falls at all under this Article, under wrongful detention and that act would only begin on the date when a demand for the machine had been made by the Company and refusal by the defend ants to deliver it had been set up. This is the view which I take. I am fortified in this conclusion by the view taken under similar circumstances by the Calcutta High Court in Gopal Chandra Bose v. Surendra Nath Dutt (1). The learned Judges in that case held that the decision on a point of this kind should be in accordance with the decision in Wilkinson v. Verity (5). The Madras High Court took the same view in Gopalsami Ayyar v. Subramania Sastri (2). They refused to consider the contention raised in that case that mere silence of the defendant amounted to refusal. This case goes further than the present case. By the opposite side I was referred to Ram Singh v. Salig Ram (4). That case really deals with the question of jurisdiction and when a decision in a Small Cause Court case should or should not be interfered with by this Court, and not with limitation. I have no doubt that the decision arrived at by the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court is wrong and cannot be supported. I, therefore, think that this is a case in which I should interfere with the decision of the Court below. That decision being upon a preliminary point, I set it aside and return the case to that Court with the direction to re-enter it on the file of pending cases and to dispose of it according to law. The 2nd party will pay the costs of the applicant so far as this revision is concerned.

Decision set aside; Case returned.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal filed late by Advocate—Laches—Sufficient cause

Where the appellant sent the costs and fees to his Advocates' firm by money order in the name of one of the members of the firm who happened then to be absent, and where despite the knowledge that the required costs and fees had been despatched, the Advocate present in the firm did not advance the Court-fees to present the appeal in time, the laches cannot be excused specially when the appellant could have sent the copies and the money far earlier than he did.

Mr. Ba Dun for the Appellant.

Mr. Rahman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken that this appeal is barred by limitation. It is admittedly so barred by two days. The decree appealed from is dated 21st February 1913 and the parties were present that day and heard judgment pronounced. A copy was not applied for till 27th March and was furnished on 29th March. The papers, however, did not reach appellant's Advocates till 12th May, though they might easily have reached him at least a month earlier. On 21st May a telegraphic money order for the amount of the costs and fees for the appeal reached the Advocate's office, but as the member of the firm in whose name the order was, was absent, payment was not received. It is not even stated that the postal authorities declined to pay the money to another member of the firm, and even if they did so, the money order could have been re-directed and telegraphed to the town where the addressee was at that time known to be. No such course was taken, and despite their knowledge that the costs and fees had been in fact despatched to them, the Advocate's firm do not appear to have been prepared to advance the Court-fee, amounting to Rs. 18-12 in order to present the appeal in time. In view of the laches displayed in this case, I cannot hold that sufficient cause has been shown for not preferring the appeal in time. It is dismissed with costs, Advocate's fee two gold mohurs.

Revision—(Civil—Interlocutory order.

In the absence of special circumstances the Chief Court would decline to revise an interlocutory order passed by a subordinate Court.

Petition, under section 70 of Act XVIII of 1884, as amended by Act IV of 1912, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 24th June 1913, overruling the objection of the defendant-petitioner.

Lala Dhanpat Rai, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sunder Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent's Counsel urges as a preliminary objection that the order of the District Judge which is sought to be revised by the defendant, Musammat Misri, is an interlocutory order relating to one of the issues arising out of the pleadings of the parties, and that even if the order in question is wrong this Court should not interfere with it on the revision side. I think this objection has great force. There are no exceptional circumstances in this case such as might justify interference by this Court on revision at this stage of the proceedings in the suit between the parties, and I decline to exercise my revisional jurisdiction in favour of the defendant.

I dismiss the revision with costs.

Revision dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2181 OF 1913.

Present:—Mr. Justice N. Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Greaves.

MAHABIR MISSER AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

NANDA KISHORE MISSER AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Compromise, agreement of—Some terms not relating to suit—Decree incorporating whole agreement, whether admissible in evidence—Agreement, whether requires registration—Evidence—Admissibility of such agreement—Adverse possession, nature of possession necessary to create—Res judicata—Compromise decree not relating to suit whether operates as res judicata.

A decree recording an agreement as one of the terms of a compromise though not relating to the suit, is a judicial record of the agreement of the parties and is admissible in evidence.

Therefore such an agreement recorded in a decree, does not require registration and is admissible in evidence without registration.

Possession in order to be adverse must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent.

The only act of "tethering of cattle, and throwing cow-dungs on the land" unaccompanied with the assertion of any adverse right, does not necessarily denote that a claim of ownership to the land was thereby asserted.

Quære:—Whether a compromise decree can operate as res judicata upon any matter other than that relating to the suit?

Second appeal from a decision of the Sub-Judge of Mozafferpore, dated the 19th May 1913, reversing that of the Munsif of Motihari, dated the 9th October 1912.

MAHABIR MISSER v. NANDA KISHORE MISSER.

Babu Sib Chandra Pali, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Two questions have been raised in this appeal. The first is, whether a certain compromise decree in a previous suit between the parties operates as res judicata or, at any rate, is evidence of an agreement between the parties with reference to the land in suit, and the second, whether the suit is barred by limitation.

The present suit is for recovery of possession of 2 cottas and odd of parti (waste) land, which was recorded as plaintiff's brit (rent-free) land in the Record of Rights. The Court of first instance decreed the suit, but the lower Appellate Court reversed that decree, and the plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

It appears that there was a previous suit between the parties about another piece of land (3 cottas in area), which ended in a compromise. The terms of the compromise were set out in a petition which, after stating that each party will remain in possession of one-half of the 3 cottas in dispute in that suit, ran as follows: "Be it noted that the brit lands shall remain in possession of each of the parties in the same way as they stand entered in the survey khatian..... A decree may be passed in this suit in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of 1 cotta 10 dhoors of land as per (following) boundaries." The whole of the petition of compromise including the above was recited in the decree and the order was: "It is ordered that the suit be decreed as per terms of the petition of compromise."

The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the recital about the brit lands did not appear to be an agreement, but a "mere notice of the intention of the parties," and that the recital was too vague to refer to plot No. 845 (the plot to which the land in suit is alleged to appertain). But plot No. 845 is one of the brit plots entered in the survey khatian, and we are of opinion that the clause "the brit lands shall remain in possession of each of the parties in the same way as they stand entered in the survey khatian" amounted to an agreement between the parties, and an agreement about all the brit lands entered in the survey khatian, including plot No. 845 which was one of the plots entered therein. The learned Subordinate Judge was further of opinion that even if it was an agreement, it was outside the scope of the suit, and being unregistered, was inadmissible in evidence. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the compromise decree operates as res judicata and, at any rate, is evidence of the agreement.

We are of opinion that it does not operate as res judicata. Order XXIII, rule 3, provides that when a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, the Court shall order such agreement or compromise to be recorded and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith, so far as it relates to the suit.

It is true all the terms of the compromise were recited in the decree, but the compromise, in so far as it related to the suit, was with respect to the 3 cottas (the subject-matter in dispute in that suit), and the Court was expressly asked to pass a decree in the suit in favour of the plaintiff in respect of 1 cotta 10 dhoors of land, being a moiety of the land in suit, and the order of the Court that the suit be decreed as per terms of the petition of compromise evidently had reference to the prayer made in the petition, viz., that a decree might be passed with respect to one-half of the land in suit.

It is contended, however, that the agreement about the brit lands formed the consideration for the compromise, and that, therefore, the decree operated as res judicata with regard to it also. But even if it did form consideration for the compromise, the Court was never asked to pass a decree with respect to any matter other than the land in dispute in that suit. There was no decree as regards the brit lands, and the decree cannot, therefore, operate as res judicata with regard to the brit lands. In this view it is unnecessary to consider the authorities upon the question whether a compromise decree can operate as res judicata upon any matter other than that relating to the suit, upon which there is some conflict of judicial opinion.

But although the decree does not operate as res judicata, we think the agreement recited in the decree is admissible in evidence, though not registered. In the case of Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (1), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council observed as follows: "If the parties, after agreeing to settle the suit of 1885 on the footing that they were each to take a half share of the lands involved in the suit, and also a half share of the lands now in dispute, had informed the learned Judge that these were the terms of the compromise, and had invited him, by reason of such compromise, to dispose of the conclusions of the suit of 1885, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the order of the learned Judge, if it had referred to or narrated these terms of compromise, would have been judicial evidence, available to the appellant, that the respondents had agreed to transfer her the moiety of land now in dispute". In that case although the razinamah which was submitted to the Court referred by way of remark to the arrangement arrived at between the parties with respect to the lands not forming the subject-matter of the suit, the Court in its order referred only to the lands in dispute in that suit.

In the present case the decree states, "on perusing the petition of compromise to the effect," and then recites all the terms of the compromise including those relating to the brit lands. The order of the Court viz., that the suit "be decreed as per terms of the petition of compromise," must be taken to refer to all the terms, including those relating to the brit lands, although it must be taken to have given effect to the terms of the compromise only in so far as they related to the suit, as the only decree which the Court was asked to pass was with respect to the lands in dispute in that suit. But all the terms including those relating to the brit lands were submitted to the Court, and were perused by it, and the order of the Court must be taken to have referred to or narrated the agreement relating to the brit lands. In any case the agreement relating to the brit lands was recorded in the decree. Under Order XXIII, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court is to record the agreement of compromise, and to pass a decree in accordance therewith in so far as it relates to the suit. A decree, therefore, recording an agreement as one of the terms of the compromise, though not relating to the suit, is a legal record of the agreement between the parties and as such available to the appellant as evidence. We are accordingly of opinion that the agreement recited in the decree does not require registration and is admissible in evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge should have, therefore, considered it as a piece of evidence in the case.

The second contention relates to the question of limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the lands were parti (waste). That being so, we do not appreciate what he means by saying "such being the character of the lands, the plaintiffs could have shown that they exercised dominion over the lands in dispute before the Bhado of 1318 F. S., when the defendants are said to have got into them." The only acts of possession exercised by the defendants as found by the Subordinate Judge are "tethering of cattle, and throwing cow-dungs on the land." But such acts, if unaccompanied with the assertion of any adverse right, would not necessarily denote that a claim of ownership to the land was thereby asserted, and as observed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Radhamoni Debi v. Collector of Khulna (2) possession in order to be adverse must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent. The learned Subordinate Judge does not appear to have considered these matters in deciding the question of limitation.

We are of opinion that the case should go back for a hearing of the appeal. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and the case remanded to that Court for a re-hearing of the appeal in accordance with the above remarks. Costs to abide the result.

Case remanded.

YUSAF AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (II of 1905), s. 12 (a)—Pre-emption—Occupancy holding—Rival claimants—Landlord—Deceased tenant's heirs—Res judicata—Same parties.

MUHAMMAD HASAN v. YUSAF.

A decision is not res judicata when the parties to the litigation are not the same.

The heirs of an occupancy tenant have a preferential right of pre-emption to the landlord in respect of sale of the occupancy holding.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Jhelum, dated the 11th of December 1913, varying that of the Munsif, first Class, Jhelum, dated the 2nd of April 1913, decreeing claim in part payment of Rs. 240.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellants.

Bawa Sewaram Singh, for Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This Appeal and appeal No. 505 are from the same decree of the lower Appellate Court and may conveniently be disposed of together.

The suit by Yusaf, plaintiff-respondent, was for possession, by pre-emption, of 46 kanals and 15 5/9 marlas of land, the occupancy rights of which were sold by Musammat Imam Bibi, daughter of the last male holder.

She sold 49 kanals 10 marlas, but between 2 and 3 kanals of this have been purchased by one of the landlords, so plaintiff did not include that in his claim.

The purchaser Diwan Chand was opposed in getting possession by Muhammad Hassan and other defendants-appellants in appeal No. 572 and the resulting suit was compromised by their taking over the land and paying Diwan Chand Rs. 300, the sale price agreed upon in Musammat Imam Bibi's sale to him.

Subsequently Muhammad Hassan, etc., sold 3 plots, area 7 kanals and 14 5/9 marlas, to Shams-ud-Din, appellant in appeal No. 505, who is one of the landlords.

The first Court decreed plaintiff's claim to the balance of the land after deducting the portion sold to Shams-ud-Din.

The lower Appellate Court in appeal decreed plaintiff's claim in full.

Shams-ud-Din has appealed for the 3 plots bought by him from Muhammad Hassan, etc., and his appeal is not contested by Yusaf, plaintiff-respondent's Counsel.

For Muhammad Hassan, etc., it is urged inter alia that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the decision in the previous case between them and Musammat Imam Bibi, in which it was held that they had not proved that the common ancestor of themselves and Chugatta occupied the land, operated as res judicata, and that, therefore, they could not prove that they had a superior right to the plaintiff under section 12 (a) of the Pre-emption Act of 1905. I am clear that that decision does not operate as res judicata, for the parties are not the same, though no doubt it is relevant under section 13 of the Evidence Act.

The first Court held that Yusaf had a superior right of pre-emption, as he was a proprietor in the village whilst Muhammad Hassan, etc., were non-proprietors.

The fact that he is a proprietor would not give Yusaf a superior right to Muhammad Hassan, etc., if they could prove that they were heirs to the tenancy under section 59 of the Tenancy Act.

They certainly have not proved this on the present record, but Mr. Kureshi says the issues were not so clear as to make them understand that this was what they had to prove.

The first issue deals with Yusaf's right of pre-emption and I think it possible, that Muhammad Hassan, etc., may have been misled. The land appears to be valuable and I think it is only fair to give these appellants an opportunity of proving that the common ancestor of themselves and Chugatta occupied the land.

The issue is whether the common ancestor of Muhammad Hassan, Muhammad Din and Ismail and of Chugatta occupied the whole or any part of the land. If a part, then how much, onus on Muhammad Hassan, etc.

Remanded under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code, to the Court of first instance, which will submit its finding through the lower Appellate Court, which will state its own opinion. Three months allowed for return, after which a date will be given for objections and hearing in this Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 73—Execution proceedings—Rateable distribution—Rival decree-holders—Order refusing rateable distribution—Decree—Appeal.

An order made under section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure rejecting an application for rateable distribution of the assets between two rival decree-holders, which does not affect or interest the judgment-debtor, is an order in execution proceedings, but is not a decree unless all the conditions enumerated in section 47 are present. No appeal, therefore, lies from such an order.

Jagadish v. Kirpa Nath, 1 Ind. Cas. 783; 36 C. 130, referred to.

It is essential for the application of section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the decrees should have been passed against the same judgment-debtor.

Jagadish v. Kirpa Nath, 1 Ind. Cas 783; 36 C. 130, followed.

Civil Rule against an order of the Subordinate Judge of 24-Parganas, dated January 27th 1914.

Babu Sajani Kanta Sinha, for the Petitioner.

Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order by which the Subordinate Judge has refused an application for rateable distribution under section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. The opposite party obtained a decree for money against his judgment-debtor, by name Dasarathi Mukherjee, while the petitioner obtained a decree for money against D. Mukherjee & Company, a firm of which Dasarathi Mukherjee was a partner. At the instance of the decree-holder, opposite party, the Municipal Corporation of Calcutta, which held two Government securities and a sum of money payable to Dasarathi Mukherjee, placed the properties at the disposal of the lower Court for satisfaction of the decree held by him. During the pendency of a proceeding for rateable distribution as between the opposite party and the other execution creditors of Dasarathi Mukherjee, at whose instance the properties in the custody of the Corporation had been attached through the Calcutta Small Cause Court, the present petitioner, on the 15th January 1914, made an application for rateable distribution. This application has been refused by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that it was made after the receipt of the assets by the Court. The question for consideration is, whether this order has been rightly made.

A preliminary objection has been taken to the Rule, on the ground that the order of the Subordinate Judge was in essence made under section 47 of the Code and was appealable as a decree. In support of this view, reference has been made to the case of Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (1). That case, however, is clearly distinguishable. There the decree-holders had attached the property of their common judgment-debtor. Other execution-creditors of the judgment-debtor applied for rateable distribution of the assets which might be realised by sale of the property. The judgment-debtor brought into Court a sum sufficient to satisfy the two decree-holders at whose instance the property had been attached. Thereupon the other decree-holder applied for rateable distribution of the sum so deposited, and the Court, without notice to the judgment-debtor, allowed this application. The result was that there was not a sufficient sum left to the credit of the decree-holders, at whose instance the attachment had been effected, to satisfy their dues, and the Court accordingly directed that the property attached be sold in order that their decrees might be satisfied in full. The judgment-debtor appealed against this order, on the ground that no rateable distribution was permissible under the law in respect of the money brought by him into Court, and that as the sum deposited was sufficient to satisfy the decree held by the two execution-creditors who had taken out processes of attachment, their decrees must be deemed in law to have been satisfied, so that there was no execution proceeding left in which an order for rateable distribution might be made. An objection that the appeal was incompetent as the question raised was not within the scope of section 47, was overruled on the ground that the question did arise between parties to the decree. It is not necessary for our present purpose to decide whether, in circumstances like these, the question which arose not merely between the rival decree-holders, but also between the judgment-debtor on the one hand and the decree-holders on the other, could be deemed to fall within the scope of section 47. But it is plain that, in the case before us, the question which calls for decision is not within the scope of that section. This is not a question which arises between the parties to the suit in which the decree under execution was passed; it is, on the other hand, a question between two rival decree-holders, which does not affect or interest the judgment-debtor. An order made under section 73 is an order in execution proceedings, but is not a decree unless all the conditions enumerated in section 47 are present: Jagadish v. Kirpa Nath (2). We must consequently hold that the order of the Subordinate Judge is not appealable and overrule the preliminary objection.

As regards the merits, it is plain that the petitioner is not entitled to succeed. Section 73 provides that where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realisation, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons. It is essential for the application of the section that the decrees should have been passed against the same judgment-debtor. This has been made clear beyond possibility of dispute by the introduction of the word "passed," which did not find a place in section 295 of the Code of 1882. But, as already stated, the decree held by the opposite party, in execution of which the properties have been brought into Court, was passed against Dasarthi Mukherjee, while the decree held by the petitioner was obtained against the firm of which Dasarthi Mukherjee was a partner, and is not shown to be capable of execution against him individually. Consequently, the two decrees cannot be deemed to have been passed against the same judgment-debtor, and it is thus needless to consider whether Ganesh Das v. Shiva Lakshman (3) has been affected by section 73 of the Code of 1908 which reproduces section 295 of the Code of 1882, in an altered form. In this view, it is also unnecessary to discuss the question, whether the application for rateable distribution by the petitioners was made before the assets had been received by the Court below.

The result is that the Rule is discharged with costs to the decree-holder (and not to the judgment-debtor) opposite party.

Rule discharged.

Pandit Rambhaj Datta, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Mehra and Sardar Attar Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plea of limitation raised by the appellant's Pleader at the preliminary hearing on the 27th February 1914 has now been given up, as the record shows that the suit was instituted on the 20th June 1912, and not on the 17th December 1912, as was assumed in the admitting order of the learned Judge in chambers.

As regards the merits of the case it has been found as a fact by both the Courts below that the land in suit is the ancestral property of the plaintiff and the vendor, and I cannot interfere with that finding in second appeal. Next it is contended that the validity of the previous mortgages in favour of the vendee cannot be impugned in this suit, because any suit to contest their validity instituted more than twelve years after the dates on which those mortgages were effected would be barred by limitation under the Punjab Limitation Act and Khiali Ram v. Gulab Khan (1) is cited in support of this contention; that decision is, however, clearly distinguishable from the present case upon its own facts and the point has not been seriously pressed by the appellant's Pleader.

As to the question of legal necessity for the sale, the Courts below have come to a concurrent decision, and I am not prepared to interfere with their concurrent finding. I maintain the decree of the Divisional Judge and dismiss both the appeal and the cross-objections. The parties will pay their own costs in this Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIII, r. 1—Order—Application for appointment of Receiver—Provisional grant of application, interpretation of—Order, whether appealable.

Where on an application for appointment of a Receiver the Court made an order in these words: "I allow the application provisionally and call on parties to put in applications showing their claims regarding the person and power of the Receiver, and the income, if any, that is to be paid by him to the objectors"

Held, that as the order does not amount to appointment of a Receiver, no appeal lies against the order.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Muttra.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order which is said to be an order appointing a Receiver, and, therefore, appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (s). What the Subordinate Judge says is this:—"I allow the application provisionally and call on parties to put in applications showing their claims regarding the person and power of the Receiver and the income, if any, that is to be paid by him to the objectors." It seems to us that the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that it was a case in which a Receiver should be appointed, but he did not find himself in a position to definitely appoint a Receiver without further information. The language used is no doubt peculiar; but it seems to us impossible to say that the Subordinate Judge has in fact appointed a Receiver. His language amounts to no more than an expression of opinion that a Receiver should be appointed and a statement that he proposes to appoint one. We hold that no appeal lies against the order. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal and we direct that the costs of this appeal be costs in the cause.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2344 OF 1913.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din.

AHMAD KHAN—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Musammat BAKHTAWAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Second appeal—Appeal—Point not taken in original Court or in Appellate Court, whether allowed to be raised in second appeal.

Ordinarily a point not taken in the original Court cannot be advanced in appeal, and similarly a contention not raised either in the first appeal or in the memorandum of appeal cannot be allowed to be argued in second appeal.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Lahore Division, dated the 4th October 1913, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 21st June 1910, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Oertel and Malik Muhammad Hussain, for the Appellant.

Lala Dhanpat Rai, for Amir Din, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are clearly and accurately stated in the judgment of the learned Divisional Judge. The first point urged by Mr. Oertel on behalf of the appellant is that Musammat Begam was entitled only to one-half of the land in dispute, and not the whole of it, and that the lower Appellate Court was, therefore, in error in passing a decree for the whole land in favour of Musammat Begam's alleged vendee, Amir Din. As the Divisional Judge observes, this point, though raised in his Court, was not taken in the Court of first instance, and the appellant could not, therefore, be allowed to take it for the first time in appeal. The Divisional Judge was perfectly right in taking that view of the case as regards the question under consideration; but assuming that the appellant can advance this contention, I agree with the Divisional Judge that it is wholly untenable. This Court in its judgment, dated the 31st of October 1905, and later in its order, dated the 26th of March 1906, passed upon an application for review of its judgment, dated the 31st of October 1905, which was filed by the present appellant, decided in express terms that on the death of Musammat Fajjan, her daughter, Musammat Begam, shall succeed to the whole of the land in dispute on payment of Rs. 300 to the present appellant. On the re-marriage of Musammat Fajjan, when the succession opened out, Musammat Begam was the sole heir to the land in suit, Musammat Bakhtawar, the second surviving daughter of Musammat Fajjan, having already consented to the sale of the land by her mother to the present appellant; and in accordance with the decision of this Court referred to above, which amounts to res judicata between the parties and their representatives-in-interest, Musammat Begam's vendee is clearly entitled to claim the entire land from the appellant on payment of Rs. 300. Apart from the operation of the rule of res judicata, I am clearly of opinion that Musammat Begam was entitled to the whole land upon the re-marriage of her mother, inasmuch as by her consent to the sale by Musammat Fajjan in favour of the present appellant, Musammat Bakhtawar excluded herself from the inheritance once for all and Musammat Begam was the sole heir to the land when her mother's re-marriage took place.

The second point taken by Mr. Oertel is that the appellant, as the successor-in-title to Musammat Fajjan and Musammat Bakhtawar, has a right to claim from the respondent, Amir Din, that portion of the consideration for the sale of the land in suit made by Musammat Begam in his favour, which had not been paid by him to Musammat Begam before her death. This is an entirely new contention, which was not so much as even hinted at in the lower Appellate Court and which is not raised in the written memorandum of appeal. I, therefore, decline to entertain it. No other contention has been advanced in support of the appeal.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMWOOD, J.—We think that the Rule should be made absolute on the ground on which it was issued and both the appeal partially and the cross-appeal wholly dismissed, and both parties will bear their own costs.

Speaking for myself, while I entirely agree with the authorities cited to us on behalf of the respondents in the Rule and the main Appeal No. 156 that the Court cannot be asked to give the relief which forms the cause of action in the suit under colour of temporary injunction, and that so much of the plaintiffs' appeal as practically asks for such a relief cannot be allowed, I am clearly of opinion that the ratio decidendi in this matter should be the likelihood of a disturbance of the plaintiff's right in his own village and the existence of ill-feeling between the parties owing to the unfortunate difference between the Hindus and the Mahomedans caused by the conduct of the first defendant, the so-called Darbesh, who has not appeared and who is still in contempt of the Courts.

The temporary injunction has already been issued by the Subordinate Judge restraining the defendants from in any way interfering or intermeddling with or disturbing the plaintiffs in the enjoyment of their hat and in particular from procuring, causing or inducing (1) all traders, dealers and others desirous of attending the plaintiffs' hat and selling their goods there to cease to do so; (2) all or any owners of carts and other conveyances to cease to convey the goods of such traders, dealers and others to the plaintiffs' hat; (3) all traders, dealers and others to boycot the plaintiffs' hat; (4) all or any customers desirous of attending the plaintiffs' hat to cease to attend; and (5) from publishing any defamatory statement as aforesaid and from posting elephants and armed men in the roads or paths or approaches to the plaintiffs' hat.

In the appeal or counter-Appeal No. 157 it is sought to be argued that even these restraints should be removed as undue interference with the defendants' right to complete in trade with the plaintiffs; and the well-known case of the Mogul Steamship Company v. McGregor Grow & Co. (1) has been cited to us. It appears to me that there is a great distinction between the case of an open port where competition has free sway and two neighbouring properties in which each party has the sole right and cannot be allowed to interfere with the other. The acts which have been restrained by the Subordinate Judge are all acts of active interference with the plaintiff's right to hold his hat and are not necessary to secure an enjoyment by the defendants of their right to establish a hat provided they do not trespass on their neighbour's right. This finding is sufficient to make the defendants' Appeal No. 157 fail.

The only point remaining to be considered is the right of the defendants to hold their hat on Thursdays and Sundays which are the established days of the plaintiffs' hat. This is covered by the Rule and the ad interim injunction which we issued on the 3rd April. There can be no doubt as to the defendants' right to hold a hat in their own village on any day they like, subject to their committing no offence against the public tranquillity, Nanda Kumar Singh v. Emperor (2). The state of feeling between the parties is a matter to be considered both as to the probability of such disturbance and to the intention of the defendants to produce injuries to the plaintiffs' right before the plaintiffs' right to interfere with them is established; and it cannot be said that the injunction to the defendants not to hold their hat on Thursdays and Sundays will operate oppressively or inequitably or be contrary to rules of justice; nor can it be said that the damages which the plaintiffs sued for in this case will be all they can obtain if their suit be successful. It may not be established before us that there is actual intention on the part of the defendants to violate the plaintiffs' legal right to hold their hat in their own village. But they put forward a claim of right to do the act complained of, namely, to hold their hat on Thursdays and Sundays and they insist upon it; and that act, if done, will in my opinion inevitably, that is, in all reasonable probability, be a violation of the plaintiffs' legal right to hold their hat on those days as they have always done [see Hanes v. Taylor (3)].

It has been urged that the defendants have other hats in other places on other days of the week and that their sole reason for holding their new hat in close proximity to the plaintiffs' on those days is that no other days are available, having regard to the annuities of those other hats. We need only say that no evidence has been put before us that any hat likely to compete with the defendants' Kalai hat is held in any neighbouring village on any particular day of the week; and that the ill-feeling in connection with the Darbesh who acts under the alleged protection of the defendants and their servants, though that is denied by the defendants, the extraordinary procedure of the defendants in levying no tolls whatever in their hat, and the unnecessary fixing of the rival hat days on the same days as the plaintiffs' hat are sufficient evidence, without our in any way committing ourselves to the finding that the defendants had no right to do any of these things, that the claim of right put forward and insisted upon by the defendants is not based on bona fide competition in trade, but is actuated by the unfortunate ill-feeling which has arisen between the parties and this ill-feeling may give rise to the threatened trespass on the plaintiffs' legal right and may cause irreparable damage thereto if the defendants are not restrained from holding their hat on the same days as the plaintiffs' old established neighbouring hat. "It is notorious," says Sir Richard Couch, C.J., in Bykuntram Shaha Roy v. Meajan (4), "that in this country rival hauts are frequent sources of riot and affray; and there is something in the nature of such hauts, namely, the assemblage of large crowds of men on both sides, which may be said to have a certain tendency to lead to a breach of the peace," and when the existence of bitter feeling aroused by quarrel between the Hindus and Mahomedans over the Darbesh, who is considered sacred by one of the parties, is shown us in this case, I think that it is the duty of the Civil Court to exercise at least such power of restraint pending the litigation between the parties, as the Magistrate can exercise for a period of two months when there is imminent risk of breach of the peace; and in saying this I wish to carefully guard myself from any suggestion that the apprehension of a breach of the peace is in itself any ground for the issue of injunction by a Civil Court. There must, as we have already indicated, be something more. But in the present case a continued series of breaches of the peace would have an irreparably disastrous effect on the civil rights of the parties in respect of the subject of litigation. If the defendants put forward a claim of right which is incompatible with the right upon which the plaintiffs sue, and if, as appears probable, that claim is sought to be exercised in a wholly unnecessary manner upon motives of spite and ill-feeling, the Court will interfere by way of injunction. I, therefore, have no hesitation in extending the temporary injunction issued by the Subordinate Judge so as to bring it in conformity with the Rule, which is made absolute without costs—and as the appeals have been disposed of at the same time the injunction must have effect until the decision of the suit. In this sense the appeal of the plaintiffs will partially succeed as we see the Rule was only issued pending the decision of the appeal.

CHAPMAN, J.—I agree. The allegations in the plaint are (1) that the defendants have conspired to injure the plaintiffs by ruining the plaintiffs' hat; (2) that the defendants' hat is a nuisance which has caused damage to the plaintiffs and (3) that the creation of the defendants' hat is an infringement of the plaintiffs' ancient right to hold their hat in that locality. The case thus involves points of law of unusual difficulty, the determination of which will in any event depend upon a very careful sifting of the evidence which is offered. I desire to avoid any suggestion that I have formed even a prima facie opinion. It is enough for the present purpose to say that there is, upon the pleadings, a substantial case calling for judicial investigation.

I am also satisfied that the plaintiffs' hat is being seriously interfered with by the holding of the defendants' hat on the same days of the week. I cannot conceive that an injunction restraining the defendants from holding their hat on those days of the week would be so harmful to them as the refusal of such an injunction would be to the plaintiffs. On the contrary, my present opinion is that the issue of such an injunction will not cause any loss to speak of to the defendants, while there is reason to apprehend that the continuance of the defendants' hat on Thursdays and Sundays will completely ruin the plaintiffs' hat.

It is clear, therefore, that there should be injunction pendente lite of the character indicated.

I also agree that the defendants' appeal against injunction granted by the learned Subordinate Judge be dismissed.

Appeals dismissed,
Rule made absolute.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1203 OF 1911.

October 21, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din and Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

MUHAMMAD ALI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

SHAM LAL AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Partnership for fixed term—Dissolution before expiry of term, whether allowed—Contract, breach of—Compensation for breach—Partner, liability of.

The parties to the suit entered into a partnership in a contract which the defendants had obtained from the Municipal Committee, Delhi, for erecting stands on the central portion (patri) of the Chandni Chauk Street, Delhi, for spectators to watch the elephant procession in connection with the Coronation Darbar of 1903. On the 2nd December 1902, the defendants sent a registered notice to the plaintiff to the effect that as he had up to that date made no preparations to perform his part of the contract, the partnership between the parties was dissolved, and thereafter the defendants got the work of erecting stands done by their own workmen without reference to the plaintiff and appropriated the whole of the income that accrued from the sale of tickets. The plaintiff sued for rendition of accounts and his share of profits and also claimed compensation for a certain number of chairs which he had got made.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the compensation, for he had not carried out his part of the contract and the defendants could not be expected to wait indefinitely; but that he was entitled to his share of the net profits of the partnership as the partnership could not be legally put an end to by the defendants.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Delhi Division, dated the 31st July 1911, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, Delhi, dated the 29th November 1909, decreeing the claim.

Messrs. Broadway, B. Beran Petman and Obedulla, for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Shee Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent Sham Lal against the defendants-appellants, who are proprietors of the firm of Ibrahimji Sulemanji and Sons of Karachi, for rendition of accounts and for a 7/16th share of the profits of a partnership alleged to have been entered into between the parties by a written agreement, dated the 11th of November 1902. The defendants had obtained from the Municipal Committee of Delhi a contract for erecting stands on the central portion (patri) of the Chandni Chauk Street, Delhi, for spectators to watch the elephant procession on the occasion of the Coronation Darbar of 1903. On the 2nd December 1902 the defendants sent a registered notice to the plaintiff to the effect that as he had up to that date made no preparations to perform his part of the contract in the way of providing benches, chairs, &c., according to the terms of the agreement of the 11th November 1902, the partnership between the parties was dissolved. To this notice the plaintiff sent a reply, dated the 10th of December 1902, through his Pleader saying in effect that the contract of partnership could not be put to an end by the defendants, as the contract was for a fixed term, and that the plaintiff was prepared to supply benches, &c., according to the patterns sanctioned by the Municipal Committee within five days, i.e., up to the 15th December 1902. To this letter the defendants replied on the 13th December 1902, giving the plaintiff up to the 15th December to provide the necessary number of benches, &c., for use on the Chandni Chauk patri on the procession day and also asking him to pay to them (the defendants) the cost of the benches, &c., which they had already got prepared in anticipation of the plaintiff failing to perform the contract as agreed upon. The plaintiff did not supply any benches, &c., to the defendants up to the 15th December, but sent to them another notice on that date to the effect that they had misunderstood his Pleader's letter of the 10th December. Thereafter the defendants got the work of erecting stands on the Chandni Chauk patri done by their own workmen without reference to the plaintiff, and treating the contract of partnership as at an end appropriated the whole of the income that accrued from the sale of tickets to the spectators. On the 15th April 1904, the plaintiff sent a registered letter to the defendants demanding Rs. 20,000 as damages on account of breach of the contract of partnership as contained in the agreement of the 11th November 1902; and as the defendants took no notice of the plaintiff's claim, he instituted against them on the 11th November 1905 the present suit for rendition of accounts and for a seven-anna share in the profits of partnership.

A preliminary decree for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts was passed in plaintiff's favour by the Subordinate Judge, Delhi, on the 26th July 1907, and the defendants' appeal from that decree was dismissed by the Divisional Judge on the 11th May 1908. Both the Courts held that the contract of partnership between the parties contained in the agreement of the 11th of November 1902 had not been dissolved, inasmuch as the partnership being for a fixed term the plaintiff could not be expelled by the defendants during such term for any cause whatever. The Divisional Judge's decree was acquiesced in by the defendants. The Subordinate Judge appointed a Commissioner to examine the account-books of the defendants and to report the result to the Court. After receipt of the Commissioner's report the parties were allowed to file objections to it. Upon those objections six issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge, which are set out at page 10 of the paper-book, and the parties then adduced their respective evidence in connection with those issues. The fourth issue, which has been the subject of argument before us, as will be noticed presently, ran as follows:—

"If the accounts (of the defendants) are found to be irregular and incorrect, how much has been realized by the defendants from the sale of spectators' tickets on the occasion of the Delhi Durbar Procession on 29th December 1902?"

The net result of the Subordinate Judge's findings was that the accounts filed by the defendants were held to have been irregularly kept and incorrect and therefore as being of no evidential value against the plaintiff. The accounts being held to be unreliable, every presumption was made against the defendants, and upon a critical examination of the other evidence adduced by them regarding the income and the expenditure connected with the contract taken by the defendants from the Municipal Committee, the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the gross income was Rs. 29,946, the plaintiff's share in it being Rs. 13,101-6-0, and the total net expenditure was Rs. 8,849-14-9. The net amount due to the plaintiff was thus Rs. 4,251-7-3, on which the Subordinate Judge allowed Rs. 630 as interest at annas 0-5-0 per cent. per mensem for four years, total Rs. 4,881-7-3. A decree for this amount was passed with costs in favour of the plaintiff against the defendants.

Both parties filed cross-appeals in the Divisional Court, and the learned Divisional Judge (Mr. A. E. Martineau) remanded the case to the Subordinate Judge for enquiry and findings on the following issues:—

1. Did plaintiff have benches prepared for the Chandni Chauk patri in accordance with the contract and did he suffer loss in consequence and, if so, how much?

2. What is the expenditure likely to have been incurred in performing the business of the partnership?

The Divisional Judge remanded the case for further enquiry on the above points, (1) because the plaintiff had contended that he had benches made for the Chandni Chauk patri in pursuance of the agreement of the 11th November 1902 and that he had suffered loss in consequence of the defendants having wrongfully put an end to the partnership and refused to take his benches, and (2) because the Subordinate Judge, having held that the defendants' accounts were unreliable, was wrong in allowing the expenditure shown in those accounts after deducting certain items, which it was held should not be debited against the plaintiff. On behalf of the defendants it was urged before the Divisional Judge that they should be allowed on remand to produce rebutting evidence on the 4th issue, which evidence, according to them, had been improperly shut out by the Subordinate Judge. The Divisional Judge was of opinion that the defendants were not entitled to produce rebutting evidence on the said issue, but for certain reasons given by him he refrained from deciding the point finally.

In his return to the order of remand the Subordinate Judge held (1) that the plaintiff had 1,300 benches prepared for the Chandni Chauk patri at a cost of Rs. 2,600 in accordance with the agreement of the 11th November 1902, that after the Coronation Darbar was over those benches were of little use and could not have been sold for more than Rs. 1,300 and that the plaintiff had, therefore, suffered a loss to the extent of that amount and (2) that the expenditure incurred by the defendants in carrying out the partnership business was Rs. 6,000.

On receipt of the return to the order of remand the whole case was very fully argued before the Divisional Judge, Mr. J. P. Thomson who, after dealing exhaustively with all the points raised by the Counsel for the plaintiff and for the defendants respectively, dismissed the defendants' appeal and accepting that of the plaintiff gave him a decree for Rs. 14,000, together with interest on that amount at the rate of Rs. 5 per cent. per annum from the 1st January 1903 to the date of decree, total Rs. 20,338. The learned Judge also allowed interest at Rs. 5 per cent. per annum on Rs. 14,000 from the date of decree to the date of realisation.

From the decree of the Divisional Judge the defendants have preferred a further appeal to this Court. The written memorandum of appeal printed at pages 1 and 2 of the paper-book was filed in this Court on the 17th October 1911; the appeal came on for hearing before two successive Division Benches on the 26th February 1914 and 30th June 1914 respectively, but it could not be heard on those dates and the hearing was, therefore, adjourned.

About a month after the second adjournment, Mr. Obedulla on behalf of the appellants filed additional grounds of appeal in which he has raised certain points which were not taken in the original memorandum of appeal. At the hearing before us the learned Advocate for the respondent objected to those additional grounds being entertained at that stage of the proceedings and we ruled that the objection was well founded.

Some of the additional grounds go to the root of the whole case and impugn the validity of the preliminary decree passed by the Subordinate Judge and confirmed by the Divisional Judge; and as in the original memorandum of appeal no objection whatever was raised to the preliminary decree, it is too late in the day for the appellants to contest its validity. The other additional grounds taken are of a similar character and we could not possibly see our way to allow the defendants' Counsel to argue them at this stage.

Of the grounds contained in the written memorandum of appeal the first has been given up as untenable; and the second ground has, in our opinion, no force. The respondent apparently assigned his decree to one Nandan Parshad (who has been impleaded as respondent No. 2 in this appeal) by a registered deed, dated the 7th October 1903, and the assignment was duly attested by the Subordinate Judge on the 15th March 1910 (page 23 of the paper-book). The leave of the Court, as contemplated by Order XXII, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, has not been given for the continuance of the suit by the assignee, Nandan Parshad, and that being the case, the respondent had a locus standi to prosecute his appeal in the lower Appellate Court. We accordingly overrule the second ground of appeal. Grounds Nos. 3, 4 and 5 may be dealt with together. As we have seen above the question whether the appellants were entitled to produce rebutting evidence on the 4th issue as framed by the Subordinate Judge (see page 10 of the paper-book) was left undecided by Mr. Martineau; but his successor, Mr. Thompson, has, upon careful consideration of the statements of the appellants' Counsel, Mr. Rang Lal, in the Subordinate Judge's Court and of the orders passed by the Subordinate Judge regarding the production of evidence by the appellants at various stages of the proceedings in the suit, come to the conclusion that the appellants had had ample opportunity of producing all the evidence they could produce on the 4th issue, that up to the 7th November 1909 their Counsel had no desire to produce any such rebutting evidence and that the application made by their Counsel on the 16th November 1909, on which date the case was fixed for argument, was made too late. After hearing the appellants' learned Counsel on this point, we think that Mr. Rang Lal's statement, dated the 1st October 1909, before the Subordinate Judge is conclusive against the appellants. On that date Mr. Rang Lal said:—

"We wish to give evidence on this point only that the accounts are correctly kept according to the custom of Gujerat. We do not wish to produce any other evidence."

This statement clearly shows that Mr. Rang Lal desired to have an opportunity to adduce evidence only regarding the correctness of the appellants' account-books according to the Gujerati method of keeping accounts and that he had closed his evidence on all other points. The appellants were bound to adduce their whole evidence on the 4th issue inasmuch as, if their accounts were held to be not regularly kept, it was for them to show, apart from the entries in their account-books, how much income had been realized by them from the sale of spectators' tickets; the onus of the 4th issue did not lie on the respondent and it is wrong to say that after the respondent had finished his evidence on all the issues, the appellants were entitled to adduce rebutting evidence on the latter part of the said issue No. 4. The matter has been discussed by the Subordinate Judge at pages 10 and 11 and by the Divisional Judge (Mr. Thompson) at pages 26 and 27 of the printed paper-book, and we agree in the view of the Divisional Judge that the Subordinate Judge was justified in refusing to allow the appellants to adduce further evidence on the 4th issue after they had closed their evidence. This disposes of the 3rd, 4th and 5th grounds of appeal.

There is much force in the 6th ground of appeal, and after hearing arguments on this ground we think that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in giving credit to the respondent for the value of the benches alleged to have been made by him in pursuance of the agreement of the 11th November 1902. The Courts below passed a preliminary decree in favour of the respondent for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts, on the ground that the partnership between the parties being for a fixed term the respondent could not be expelled by the appellants during such term for any cause whatever. The effect of this finding is that the respondent is entitled to demand from the appellants an account for the partnership and to claim a seven-anna share in the profits thereof. But it is clear from the circumstances of the case, as set forth in the beginning of this judgment, that the respondent did not make a reasonable and bona fide effort to perform his part of the contract and that the appellants were, therefore, obliged to complete their contract with the Municipal Committee by employing their own workmen to prepare stands and benches, etc., for the Procession Day. The appellants were not bound to wait till the Procession Day and see if the respondent would supply the necessary benches and stands, etc., and as the respondent did not carry out his part of the contract by the 15th December 1902, as he had undertaken to do in his registered letter of the 10th December 1902, the appellants were justified in acting as they did in the way of providing the necessary seating accommodation for spectators on the Chandni Chouk patri. In these circumstances as the contract of partnership could not legally be put an end to by the appellants (and the lower Courts' finding on this point has been accepted as correct by the appellants), all that the respondent can reasonably ask the Court to hold is that he is entitled to his share of the net profits of the partnership which have been received by the appellants. The appellants are not legally liable to the respondent for the loss, if any, which he has incurred in endeavouring to carry out his part of the contract in a manner which was not justified by the terms of the agreement between the parties. We, therefore, hold that the Courts below have erred in allowing Rs. 1,300 to the respondent in respect of the price of 1,300 benches which the respondent is held to have made for the Procession Day.

There remains the question whether the Divisional Judge is right in allowing Rs. 14,000 to the respondent as his share of the profits of the partnership. This question has been discussed at great length by the learned Judge at pages 28 to 31 of the printed paper-book; and after giving every weight to his findings on the various points connected with this question which have been dealt with by him, we are of opinion that he is not right in the conclusions at which he has arrived on those points. To begin with, we may say at once that we agree with the Divisional Judge in holding the appellants' account-books as unreliable. Mr. Kirkpatrick, who was appellants' Counsel in the Divisional Court, conceded that the appellants' accounts had not been regularly kept and therefore could not be relied on, and acting upon that admission the Divisional Judge has ignored the appellants' accounts in discussing the question of the income and expenditure of the partnership business in question. This was a perfectly reasonable course to adopt, and having looked at the appellants' accounts ourselves, we are not at all prepared to accept the contention of the appellants' Counsel that his clients' accounts are reliable and that the Divisional Judge was wrong in discrediting them. Putting aside the appellants' accounts, however, we think that the Divisional Judge has gone too far, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, in making every presumption against the appellants as to the number of benches and chairs provided by the appellants, as to the value of the tickets sold by them, and as to the number of seats occupied by spectators on the Chandni Chouk patri on the Procession Day of the Darbar. Taking the length of the patri on which the stands were erected to be 2,963 feet, and allowing an average space of about 17 inches per spectator and of 1½ feet for a going-way for every 50 feet of the patri length, the Divisional Judge has held that in the seven rows of benches 14,210 seats were occupied by the spectators. According to him, the price charged by the appellants for the spectators' tickets must be presumed to have been Rs. 3 per seat on the two front rows and Rs. 2 per seat on the five back rows; and upon that basis the takings would be Rs. 20,300 for the five back rows and Rs. 12,180 for the two front rows of benches. The Divisional Judge has further held that presumably there were 1,750 chairs occupied by spectators, and not 1,250 as admitted by the appellants; and the price of a ticket for a chair being Rs. 5 the takings would be Rs. 8,750. Thus the total number of seats, according to the Divisional Judge, was 15,960, and the total receipts amounted to Rs. 41,230. The plaintiff's seven-anna share would thus be Rs. 18,038. So much for the gross income.

As regards the expenditure incurred by the appellants on the business, the Divisional Judge, after critically examining the findings recorded by the Subordinate Judge in his final judgement and in his return to the order of remand, has held that the expenditure incurred by the appellants in preparing benches, stands, etc., including the miscellaneous charges such as cartage, etc., was not more than Rs. 6,000. To this sum of Rs. 6,000 he has added Rs. 875 as the hire of 1,750 chairs at annas 8 per chair and also Rs. 700 which he considers the appellants must have paid to third parties as commission fee on the sale of tickets. From the total amount thus arrived at he has deducted the value of the benches and stands after the Darbar which he has held to be ¼ of the cost price; and he has come to the finding that in round figures Rs. 5,000 was the net expenditure incurred by the appellants on the business in question. He has further allowed the respondent Rs. 1,300 by way of loss in respect of the 1,300 benches held to have been prepared by him for the Procession Day, which item has, as we have already held, been allowed on erroneous grounds. The net result is that the Divisional Judge has held the respondent's share of the profits of the partnership to be Rs. 14,000.

After considering the whole matter very carefully, we think that while it is reasonable to allow 70 persons for every 100 feet of the patri length on which the stands were erected, the allowance of 1½ feet for a gangway for every 50 feet is too little, and we allow 3 feet for each gangway. Further, there is evidence to show that the tickets for seats on benches were not sold at the uniform rate of Rs. 3 per seat for the first two rows and of Rs. 2 per seat for the remaining five rows. According to the notice published by the Municipal Committee on the 21st October 1902, the Chandni Chauk patri on which the stands were to be erected was divided into four sections, the first and the fourth sections measuring 1,654 feet in length and the second and the third sections being 1,310 feet long. In this notice the maximum charge for a seat in the first and fourth sections was put down at Rs. 2 and that for a seat in the second and third sections at Rs. 3. In our opinion it would be reasonable to allow in the first and fourth sections Rs. 2 per seat for the three front rows of benches and Re. 1 per seat for the four back rows. As regards the second and third sections, Rs. 3 per seat should be allowed for the two front rows and Rs. 2 for the five back rows. Working upon this basis, we arrive at the following results :—

(1) In the first and fourth sections, of which the length is 1,654 feet, the seating accommodation after making allowance for gangways, would be 1,092 seats in each row; and assuming that every seat was occupied, as in the circumstances of the case we must presume, the takings for the two sections in question would be Rs. 10,920.

(2) Similarly the seating accommodation in the second and third sections would be 866 seats in each row, and the takings at the rates specified above would be Rs. 13,856. The total takings for all the seven rows of benches in the Chandni Chauk would thus be Rs. 24,776.

As regards the number of chairs occupied by the spectators, the Divisional Judge is, in our opinion, wrong in presuming that there were 1,750 chairs and not 1,250. Muhammad Ali, appellant, has stated on oath that 500 chairs were supplied by his firm to the Municipal Committee on a separate contract, and this statement is borne out by an entry in his books and has in no way been rebutted by the respondent. We, therefore, take it that only 1,250 chairs were provided by the appellants for the spectators in front of the benches, and we must assume that all these chairs were occupied. As the price of a ticket for a chair was Rs 5 the takings would amount to Rs. 6,250. Adding this sum to Rs. 24,776 mentioned above, we find that the total income from the takings was Rs. 31,026, the plaintiff's share of which at seven annas in the rupee would be Rs. 13,574.

Coming to the question of expenditure, we have no reason for differing from the concurrent finding of the Courts below that the total expenditure incurred by the appellants in providing benches, stands, &c., was Rs. 6,000. To this we must add Rs. 625 as the hire of the 1,250 chairs at annas 8 per chair and Rs. 700 as the amount of the commission fee paid by the appellants on the sale of the tickets, the total expenditure thus being Rs. 7,325. From this amount we must deduct Rs. 2,600 which, according to the Courts below, was the value of the benches, &c., left in appellants' hands after the Darbar. The net expenditure, therefore, comes to Rs. 4,725.

The plaintiff's share of the income was, as we have noted above, Rs. 13,574, and from this sum we have to deduct the sum of Rs. 4,725 which was expended by the appellants in carrying out their contract with the Municipal Committee. The balance to which the respondent is entitled is thus Rs. 8,849.

There remains the question whether on this sum of Rs. 8,859 the respondent is entitled to any interest. In his plaint the respondent did not claim any interest on the amount which might ultimately be found due to him by the appellants and he did not ask for interest until he filed his objections to the report of the local Commissioner. In our opinion he was very much to blame in not having made a bona fide attempt to perform his part of the contract with the appellants and the whole trouble was due to his unreasonable refusal to help the appellants to bring to a successful conclusion their contract with the Municipal Committee.

The appellants were, therefore, obliged to put on their own workmen to do the work which the respondent had undertaken to do; and although the contract of partnership between the parties was not thereby terminated, the respondent cannot reasonably ask the Courts to allow him interest on the amount of money which, on a settlement of accounts, is found due to him by the other party. We, therefore, decline to award any interest to the respondent on the sum of Rs. 8,849.

For the reasons given, we accept this appeal and vary the decree of the Divisional Judge so as to reduce the amount payable by the appellants to respondent to Rs. 8,849. The parties will pay their own costs in this Court, and the plaintiff will get his costs in the lower Courts proportionate to the amount decreed.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89—Execution-sale, application to set aside within time but after confirmation of sale, effect of—Deposit, whether can be made by cheque.

An application to set aside an execution-sale on the day of confirming the sale but subsequent to the confirmation is within time if it is within 30 days of sale.

A deposit under Order XXI, rule 89, must be a deposit in cash and not by a cheque.

Mr. Mya Bu, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Bilimoria, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was a judgment-debtor whose house was sold in execution under a mortgage-decree to the 2nd respondent on the 20th June 1914. On the 20th July the sale was confirmed, and on that day the judgment-debtor applied for leave to pay in the purchase-price of the house plus 5 per cent. and asked to have the sale set aside. The application was made at 3-30 P.M. and was subsequent to the confirmation of the sale. The District Judge passed the following order:—"The sale has already been confirmed. Application rejected."

On appeal to the Divisional Court it was held that the judgment-debtor was out of time. The judgment-debtor had thirty days from the date of the sale. He was, therefore, in time, but he did not deposit the amount; he merely stated that he was ready to do so and in his affidavit in the Divisional Court, it appears that he was ready to do so by means of a cheque on the Bank of Bengal. The deposit under Order XXI, rule 89, by the judgment-debtor must be a deposit in cash, which he has not made; and he has not shown that he was ready and willing to make such deposit but was prevented. His Advocate contends that if the Judge had objected to the cheque he would have then tendered cash, but it was for the judgment-debtor to comply with the provisions of rule 89.

This application is, therefore, dismissed, with two gold mohurs costs.

Application dismissed.

CRIMINAL REVISION APPLICATION No. 318 OF 1914.

December 22, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Davar, Mr. Justice Heaton and Mr. Justice Shah.

ANANDRAO BALKRISHNA RANGNEKAR—ACCUSED—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 52, 499—Defamation—'Lowers'—'In the estimation of others'—'Good faith'—Imputation, when in good faith—Care and attention must relate to occasion and circumstances—Reason to believe a thing to be true—Conviction, legality of—Defamation, charge of, proof of.

The accused felt aggrieved by an order made by the Mamlatdar complainant, and as he was entitled to do under the provisions of the Land Revenue Code, appealed to the Assistant Collector against the order praying that it may be reversed. In the petition of appeal it was stated that the Mamlatdar had acted towards the appellant unjustly and spitefully, that in passing the order appealed against he was actuated by personal ill-will and malice against the appellant and that the Mamlatdar had in acting as he had done exercised his authority with a view to cause harassment and loss to the appellant. The Mamlatdar charged the accused for defaming him.

Held by Davar and Shah, JJ.—That the accused was protected by exceptions 8 and 9 of section 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

Per Davar, J.—That as the Mamlatdar by his previous conduct had given ample reasons to the accused for believing rightly or wrongly that he was acting with personal ill-will against him, the imputation was made in good faith.

Per Shah, J.—The care and attention required by law must have relation to the occasion and the circumstances and the question as to what would be due care and attention must be determined with reference thereto.

Per Davar, J.—It is an elementary principle of law which Criminal Courts have always to keep in view that where a person is charged with having committed a criminal offence, the commission of that offence must be strictly proved against him, and every necessary ingredient of the section under which he is charged must be satisfied before an accused person can be convicted and punished.

To convict a man under section 499, Penal Code, it must be shown that the complainant has proved that the imputation has directly or indirectly lowered his moral or intellectual character or has lowered his character in respect of his calling or has lowered his credit in the 'estimation of others'. The words 'in the estimation of others', taken in conjunction with the word 'lowers' in Explanation 4 govern all clauses in that provision of section 499. It is not sufficient for the complainant merely to raise a presumption that the imputation may lower him or may lower his moral or intellectual character in the estimation of others, or that it may, in the estimation of others, lower his character in respect of his calling, or may lower his credit. These are matters that must be proved. There must be proof that the complainant has been lowered as to his character, credit, or calling, reputation or position in the estimation of some person or persons.

Bhoopa Money Dossee v. Natobar Biswas, 28 C. 452, 5 C. W. N. 659, dissented from.

Per Heaton, J.—That the imputation was not made in good faith.

It does not constitute 'good faith' necessarily that the person making the imputation believed it to be true. 'Due care and attention' implies genuine effort to reach the truth and not the ready acceptance of an ill-natured belief.

Explanation 4 to section 499, Penal Code, like the other three merely describes the quality or nature of the imputation and not its actual effects.

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Sessions Judge of Ratnagiri, confirming the conviction but modifying the sentence passed by the first Class Magistrate at Malwan.

Mr. Binning (with him Mr. A. G. Desai) for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

DAVAR, J.—Rao Saheb Anant Bhasker Nimkar, the mamlatdar of Vengurla, filed a complaint against Anandrao Balkrishna Rangnekar, in the Court of the first Class Magistrate of Malwan, Mr. Bijurkar, charging the said Rangnekar with having defamed him and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 500 of the Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate convicted the accused and sentenced him to three months' simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200, and directed that out of the fine, Rs. 75 should be paid as compensation to the complainant under section 545 of the Criminal Procedure Code. On appeal, the Sessions Judge remitted the sentence of imprisonment, but confirmed the conviction and sentence of fine. Against this, the accused has applied to us for revision, and the record and proceedings having been sent for, the case has been fully argued before us.

The questions that arise for consideration are, whether the accused is guilty of the offence of defamation, and whether, if what he wrote amounts to defamation, the same is covered by any of the Exceptions to section 499 of the Indian Penal Code, and whether he is properly convicted. In the course of the arguments before us, two very important questions have been argued namely, whether the proceedings in connection with which the offence is alleged to have been committed were judicial proceedings, and whether the accused is not entitled to absolute privilege as a party to such judicial proceedings independently of any question of good faith governing his action.

I propose in the first instance to deal with the main question in the case, viz., whether the conviction is proper and ought to be upheld. In doing so, I must first consider whether the petition presented by the accused to the Assistant Collector of Ratnagiri against the order of the complainant contains statements which are defamatory, and if so, whether they are or are not covered by any of the Exceptions to section 499. The facts which led to the filing of this complaint are shortly these. As far back as 1849 a portion of certain lands in the village of Kochre in the Ratnagiri District was mortgaged to the grandfather of the accused by one Ramchandra Jivaji Rege, and under the terms of the mortgage-deed the mortgagors paid the assessment on the mortgaged portion of the land, although the accused was in possession thereof. The mortgagors had been doing so for about fifty years, but in 1902, the accused alleges, there was a dispute as to who should pay the assessment and the then Revenue Authorities decided that the mortgagors should continue to pay the same. That order does not appear to be forthcoming but the fact remains that the mortgagors continued to pay the assessment till March 1913. About this time some new arrangement seems to have come into operation for the collection of revenue in the Ratnagiri District and what are spoken of as kabja khatas were opened, whereby the parties in possession of lands were primarily made liable to pay the assessment to Government. The last instalment for the year 1912/13 fell due in May 1913 and was not paid. The mortgagors' moveable property was attached in the first instance. After holding an investigation, the warrant of attachment against the mortgagors was cancelled by the complainant, and a warrant was issued against the accused to recover from him the overdue instalment of Rs. 6-1-4. This was on the 6th of July 1913. In consequence of the warrant the accused paid this amount. He, however, felt aggrieved by this order made by the complainant, Rao Saheb Nimkar, and as he was entitled to do under the provisions of the Land Revenue Code, appealed to the Assistant Collector of Ratnagiri against the order, praying that it may be reversed. The appeal he presented was in the shape of a petition which he sent to the Assistant Collector by post, and the mamlatdar complains that it is in this petition that the accused has made statements defamatory of him and thereby committed an offence for which he was prosecuted and convicted. The petition is in Marathi. It has been translated and placed before us and I have very carefully perused the contents of that petition. Put at its highest in favour of the complainant and at its worst against the accused, the defamatory statements amount to this that the mamlatdar acted towards the appellant unjustly and spitefully, that in passing the order appealed against he was actuated by personal ill-will and malice against the appellant, and that the mamlatdar had in acting as he had done exercised his authority with a view to cause harassment and loss to the appellant. The accused when questioned before the Magistrate admitted having sent the petition and admitted that he did make the allegations complained of by the mamlatdar. He pleaded that he was justified in making those allegations, because he believed them to be true and when asked by the Magistrate whether he did not think that in making those allegations his action came under section 500 of the Indian Penal Code, he answered that he had not exceeded the privilege given by law to aggrieved persons to make representions to superior officers. There is thus no question of the responsibility of the accused for the petition he presented, and there is no doubt that in that petition he has charged the mamlatdar that in passing the order he did against the accused, he was actuated by malice and personal ill-will against him. In justification for his attributing personal ill-will to the mamlatdar, the accused relies on a previous incident between himself and the mamlatdar, which is fully brought out in the cross-examination of the complainant before the Magistrate, and it is most important for the purposes of this case that the facts relating to that incident should be carefully scrutinized and taken into consideration. It appears that on the 18th of February 1913 two instalments of revenue, which became due in December 1912 and February 1913 amounting in all to Rs. 32, were in arrears. The mamlatdar went to the accused's village of Kochre, sent for him and told him to pay up the arrears of these instalments on that very day. The accused promised to pay the only due instalments on the next day. He did take the moneys to the mamlatdar on the next day, the 19th of February, but did so late in the evening. The mamlatdar seems to have directed an hour and a half before the accused went to him with the money that a warrant should issue for the distraint of the accused's moveable property not only for the two instalments that were in arrears, but also for the remaining two instalments for that year which had not become due and superadded a fine of Rs. 5 in the said warrant. Although the accused paid the two instalments that were due, the mamlatdar insisted on the warrant being executed against him for instalments that were not due and for the fine that was included in that warrant. The accused's moveable property was distrained and sold in execution and the mamlatdar confirmed the sale on the 10th of March 1913, the warrant having been executed on the 20th of February 1913. The property attached was valued by the punch at Rs. 45 and it was sold for Rs. 22. The mamlatdar, complainant, has stated to the Magistrate that he thought he had no power to recall the warrant he had issued when the accused paid up the arrears of instalments, but went further and said that even if he had the power, he "had no mind to revise the order." In justification for this action, the mamlatdar says that he acted as he did towards the accused "with intent to make a deterrent example in a case." He admits that there were other people in the village who were equally in default as the accused, but pleads that he selected the accused because his name was first in a list of about ten or twelve persons that was handed over to him and who were alleged to be prominent defaulters. This list was called for by the Sessions Judge, but has not been forthcoming. This conduct of the complainant though strictly legal was, in the opinion of the Magistrate, "exceptionally stringent and invidious" and in the opinion of the Sessions Judge was "of questionable propriety." The details of the action of the mamlatdar are clearly brought out in his cross-examination before the Magistrate by the accused's Pleader, and it is unnecessary to discuss them here with any further elaboration. The accused proved this incident of February, preceding the order of the Magistrate of July against which he appealed, as justification for his belief that the mamlatdar was actuated by personal ill-will against him in acting as he did.

These being the facts in the case, I will now turn to consider whether in the first instance the accused has been proved guilty of having committed the offence of defamation, quite apart from any question of the offence, if any, being excused or covered by any of the Exceptions to section 499. Under this section a person is said to defame another when "by words... intended to be read" he..."makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of such person." This description of the offence of defamation is governed by certain Explanations and Exceptions, and unfortunately, as it too often happens and as it has happened in this case, sufficient attention is not paid to the governing clauses of Explanation 4, to this section. This Explanation in clear and explicit terms lays down that "no imputation," such as is referred to in the section, "is said to harm a person's reputation unless that imputation directly or indirectly, in the estimation of others, lowers the moral or intellectual character of that person, or lowers the character of that person in respect of his...calling, or lowers the credit of that person." It is an elementary principle of law, which Criminal Courts have always to keep in view, that where a person is charged with having committed a criminal offence, the commission of that offence must be strictly proved against him, and every necessary ingredient of the section under which he is charged must be satisfied before an accused person can be convicted and punished. Therefore in this case, before the conviction of the accused can be sustained, it must be shown that the complainant has proved that what the accused wrote in his petition has directly or indirectly lowered his moral or intellectual character or has lowered his character in respect of his calling or has lowered his credit "in the estimation of others." The words "in the estimation of others" taken in conjunction with the word "lowers" in Explanation 4 govern all clauses in that provision of section 499. There is no evidence whatever in this case even alleging, much less proving, that the complainant, Rao Saheb Nimkar, has been lowered in the estimation of any person. It is most essential to remember that the word used by the Legislature is "lowers" and not "would lower" or "is likely to lower" or "tending to or intended to lower." It is not, therefore, sufficient for a complainant merely to say that the allegations he complains of have harmed or are likely to harm or were intended to harm his reputation in the estimation of others He must prove this before he can obtain a conviction. It is not sufficient for a complainant merely to assert that the allegations against him have caused him annoyance, harassment or mental worry. It is not sufficient for him merely to raise a presumption that such imputations may lower him or may lower his moral or intellectual character in the estimation of others, or that they may, in the estimation of others, lower his character in respect of his calling, or may lower his credit. These are matters that must be proved. In this case there is absolutely no proof whatever of all the requisites necessary before a conviction for defamation could be obtained. I have carefully gone through the whole of the proceedings before the Magistrate. Besides the complainant himself, two other witnesses have been examined. Vithal Krishna, the sheristedar of the officer to whom the appeal was presented, deposes to the receipt of the petition by post, of its being read by the addressee and of its being sent to the mamlatdar of Vengurla for report. All he says is he read it and the Barnishi Karkun read it, and not one word more. The second witness, Mukund Gopal Thucker, the Kulkarni of Kochre, merely proves the handwriting of the accused and his solvency and deposes to nothing else that is relevant in the case. There is not even an effort made to prove that the complainant has been lowered as to his character, credit or calling, reputation or position in the estimation of any single individual. Having regard to the requirements laid down by Explanation 4 to section 499, I have come to a very clear conclusion that, on the evidence adduced before the Magistrate, he ought not to have convicted the accused of having committed the offence of defamation, and this Court could not confirm the conviction. The accused may have, in writing his petition, been guilty of any other offence, such as using abusive language or insult or any other offence, but he is clearly not guilty of defamation as defined in section 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

While coming to this conclusion, I am not unaware of the fact that in the case of Gobinda Pershad Pandey v. Garth (1), Mr. Justice Prinsep has expressed a view of the law of defamation that is in conflict with my view of the requirements of section 499. Referring to the Sessions Judge, Mr. Prinsep observes:—

"He seems, however, to have followed the Magistrate into an error regarding the evidence necessary to prove the offence of defamation, for he points out that there is no evidence to show that the complainant has been injuriously affected by such alleged defamation. That, however, is not necessary to constitute an offence of defamation as defined in section 499, Indian Penal Code. The law requires merely that there should be an intent that the person who makes or publishes any imputation should do so intending to harm, or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm, the reputation of such person."

I am entirely unable to agree with the learned Judge's view of the law as laid down by section 499. It seems to me that the view taken by the Sessions Judge in that case was quite correct and that when Mr. Justice Prinsep stated his view of the requirements of section 499 of the Indian Penal Code, he entirely ignored or overlooked the provisions of Explanation 4 to section 499. There is no reference whatever to the limitations imposed by that Explanation, and reading the case under reference, one would be led to believe that section 499 stood by itself in the Statute Book without the explanation to which I have referred. The judgment, again, loses all force and importance by the fact that the learned Judge in pronouncing his opinion does not give one single reason for his dictum that it was not necessary to constitute an offence of defamation that the complainant should prove that he was injuriously affected. It must also be noticed that this view of the learned Judges is purely obiter, the question before them not being what were the requisites to constitute the offence of defamation, but whether the procedure followed by the Sessions Judge was correct under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. With all my respect for the learned Judges who decided this case, I cannot persuade myself to a belief that the view of the requirements of the section taken by the learnd Judges in this case is the right view. It is interesting to note that in the same volume is reported a civil case of Bhooni Money Dossee v. Natobar Biswas (2) decided by Mr. Justice Harrington. In that case the plaintiff Bhooni Money Dossee proved to the satisfaction of the learned Judge that the defendant Natobar Biswas had publicly addressed the following words to the plaintiff in the presence of several persons:—"You are unchaste, you are a prostitute: I will publish before the caste people that you are a prostitute, and stop invitations to you. I took you to the garden house at Kalighat and had illicit intercourse with you." The woman filed a suit to recover damages from the defendant for malicious slander. The learned Judge found on the evidence as a fact that the slander complained of was spoken of and published by the defendant. He further found that the words were not merely vulgar abuse but conveyed a distinct imputation of unchastity and alleged a specific charge of an act of immorality. He, however, dismissed the suit with costs, holding the words were not per se actionable and no damage in fact was alleged or proved.

If both the cases are correctly decided, we have this anomaly before us that a party against whose character and morality the very gravest imputations are publicly made would have no remedy in a Civil Court, unless he or she proves the actual damage, whereas according to Mr. Justice Prinsep, the same party could obtain a conviction in a criminal case without proving that he or she was "injuriously affected," for he says such proof "is not necessary to constitute the offence of defamation." I find it impossible to believe that that could have been the intention of the Legislature when framing section 499 and attaching thereto Explanation 4.

But assuming for argument's sake that the requirments of the section and Explanation 4 were satisfied, the next question that arises is, whether the petition presented by the accused contained imputations which were made in good faith for the protection of the accused's own interests and whether they were made to a person in lawful authority over the complainant. In order to claim the protection given by Exceptions 8 and 9, the accused must prove his "good faith." Section 52 provides that nothing is said to be done or believed in good faith which is done or believed without due care and attention. It cannot be disputed in this case that the Assistant Collector to whom the appeal was presented was a person in lawful authority over the mamlatdar, for he had the power to revise, re-call or reverse the order of the mamlatdar against which the accused appealed. It cannot also be disputed that the accused in presenting his appeal was protecting his own interests. Did he do and say all he did and said in good faith? If he did, he would be protected under Exceptions 8 and 9 to section 499. The mamlatdar admits that there has been no private quarrel or personal ill-will between him and the accused. The accused has no doubt attributed personal ill-will and malice to the complainant. The Sessions Judge in his judgment asks a very pertinent question. He says: "The question is whether a reasonable man in the appellant's position could have believed, when making the petition of appeal, that the mamlatdar had been moved by malice to take the step that he did take, to recover the sum of Rs. 6."

It is a pity that the learned Judge did not follow up this question and seek for its answer in the mamlatdar's own conduct. My answer to this question is in an emphatic affirmative. The mamlatdar by his previous conduct had given ample reason to the accused for believing rightly or wrongly that he was acting with personal ill-will against him. According to the Magistrate, his conduct towards the accused was "invidious and exceptionally stringent." According to the Sessions Judge, his conduct towards the accused was "of questionable propriety." He selects from the whole village in which there were numerous defaulters the accused and makes him a victim in order to set a "deterrent example" to other people. No Government officer has a right to act towards a subject with undue or unecessary harshness in order that other people may take an example by it. The accused had paid his assessment regularly for years, and not even a notice had been served on him before being called upon to pay. The assessment had fallen into arrears because admittedly the village accountant was inexperienced and incompetent, and the delay in the recovery of the assessment was entirely due to this cause. The accused only asked for a day's time, he tendered payment within less than a couple of hours of the issue of the warrant against him, he paid all that was due by him and yet, because the law allowed him, with unnecessary harshness the mamlatdar proceeded to sell the man's property for moneys that were not due. Not content with that he imposed and levied a fine. The accused's property was sold for half the value which was placed upon it by the punch. The mamlatdar's statement that he believed that he had no power to re-call the warrant is, to my mind, an idle pretence. It is equally a hollow pretence when he tells the Magistrate that the value placed on the property of the accused by the punch was higher than the real value. He confirms the sale days afterwards. He confesses that even if he had the power, he would not have re-called the warrant. He fails to prove that he selected this man because his name was first in some list which was handed to him but which is not now forthcoming.

(2) 28 C. 452; 5 C. W. N. 670.

Having regard to all these facts, I have no hesitation in holding that the accused had the gravest reasons for believing that the mamlatdar was actuated by malice and personal ill-will towards him in the present instance The mamlatdar's action in February had been most oppressive, and under these circumstances it seems to me astonishing that Government should have sanctioned the accused's prosecution and paid the expenses of it. Having regard to all these facts, I am very clearly of opinion that even if the offence of defamation had been proved against him, the accused is protected under Exceptions 8 and 9.

An extremely unsavoury feature of this case is the order of the Magistrate, Mr. Bijurkar, awarding Rs. 75 as compensation to the mamlatdar out of the fine which he imposed upon the accused. The complainant had not been put to the expense of one pice. The harassment, annoyance and hardship was all the accused's and none of the complainant's, and yet the Magistrate assesses the mamlatdar's mental worry at Rs. 75 and awards that sum to him out of the fine imposed by him on the accused. Quite apart from any consideration of its legality this order is one that, in my opinion, never ought to have been made by the Magistrate. I also think it very necessary to say that in my opinion even if the accused had been guilty of the offence charged against him, the sentence of three months' simple imprisonment was absolutely and wholly uncalled for and was quite out of proportion to the particular offence charged against the accused.

Having regard to the view I take of this case, it is quite unnecessary to discuss the other question whether the petition in question was presented in the course of judicial proceedings and whether the absolute privilege accorded to a party to judicial proceedings under English Law is or is not applicable to the present case.

I would acquit the accused and order that the fine should be refunded to him, and the compensation, if paid, to the complainant be re-called from him.

I cannot conclude this judgment without expressing my very deep regret that in this case my views are not in accord with those of my brother, Heaton. The great experience of my learned colleague in the administration of criminal justice in the Presidency entitles his views to be considered with the greatest respect. I am quite aware of the difficulties pointed out by him as to Explanation 4 in his judgment, which he has been good enough to let me see. My difficulty in accepting those views lies in the fact that the Legislature has in express terms laid down what is necessary to constitute the offence of defamation and as long as the explanation remains on the Statute book, it cannot be ignored nor its importance and significance minimised by Courts administering criminal law.

HEATON, J.—In this case as I have the misfortune, which I very greatly regret, to differ from my learned colleagues, I must say a few words as to my own view of the case. The petition we are concerned with, besides describing the order of the mamlatdar in effect as harsh and unjust, attributes to the mamlatdar personal spite. Apart from that the petition might be taken as criticising merely the order made by the officer and as not reflecting personally on the officer himself. But when personal spite is attributed, the matter is taken into the region of personalities and has to be dealt with as such. To attribute personal spite to a mamlatdar in the performance of his duties is a very grave imputation. If true, it would subject the Mamlatdar to the possibility of dismissal; to the probability of degradation or stoppage of promotion; and to the certainty at least of a very severe reprimand. A person who imputes such a thing to a mamlatdar must be taken to intend harm to his reputation. For, I cannot conceive why such a thing should be said in a written petition unless it was intended to harm the officer's reputation, in other words, to represent his conduct as improper and induce his official superior to believe it to be so. It seems to me, therefore, that the case, unless covered by some exception, falls precisely within the definition of section 499 of the Indian Penal Code. Both of my learned colleagues think, however, that the case is covered by one or other of the Exceptions and one of them thinks that, in consequence of the provisions of one of the explanations, the evidence in the case falls short of proof of the offence. He relies on Explanation 4. My own opinion is that Explanation 4 like the other three merely describes the quality or nature of the imputation and not its actual effects. To illustrate what I mean, I would suppose that a Judge of this Court is accused by some entirely unimportant and insignificant person of taking bribes. It would very probably be quite impossible for the Judge to prove that his character was actually lowered by this imputation. The obvious want of truth, coupled with the entirely insignificant character of the slanderer, would probably make it impossible for the Judge to prove that his character was lowered in the estimation of any one whatever. And yet if Explanation 4 relates to the effects of the imputation and not merely to its nature or quality, in the case I have supposed it would be impossible to convict the slanderer of the offence of defamation. I think, therefore, both from the words used and from the general intention of the law that Explanation 4 does not provide any difficulty in the way of upholding the conviction. Nor do I think that the case is covered by any of the exceptions. It can only be covered by them if the words constituting the imputation were used in "good faith." "Good faith" is defined in the Penal Code as meaning that which is done with due care and attention. It does not constitute good faith necessarily that the person making the imputation believed it to be true. "Due care and attention" implies genuine effort to reach the truth and not the ready acceptance of an ill-natured belief. In the case before us, I think that the language of the petition is the language of irritation, that it voices the grievance of the petitioner and not the reasonable reflections of even an ordinary man. That being so, I do not think the imputation, gross as it is, can be said to have been made in good faith. That is the positive conclusion at which I have arrived after considering the petition itself and the conduct of the mamlatdar as elicited from his cross-examination. It would, I think, ordinarily have been enough to say that I saw for myself no good reason for supposing that the lower Courts were wrong in their conclusion that the imputation was not made in good faith. But having regard to the views of my colleagues, I think it better to express a positive opinion of my own.

SHAH, J.—I agree that in this case the conviction and sentence should be set aside and the fine, if paid, refunded.

I hold with my brother Davar that the accused is protected by Exceptions 8 and 9 of section 499 of Indian Penal Code. I do not consider it necessary to give my reasons in detail for this conclusion as, generally speaking, I agree with the reasons given by my learned brother in his judgment for holding that the case is covered by Exceptions 8 and 9.

There could be no doubt in this case that the accused was acting in pursuance of a remedy allowed to him by law and presented the petition of appeal to the Tribunal authorised by law to entertain it. It is also clear that he was acting for the protection of his own interest. The only question, therefore, with reference to the applicability of the exceptions is whether he acted in good faith. It seems to me that the lower Courts in dealing with the question of good faith have approached the question from a wrong point of view and have failed to give effect to the circumstances under which and the occasion on which the accused is found to have acted. There is nothing in the case to show that he was acting otherwise than in good faith, and the facts, in my opinion, clearly point to the conclusion that he was acting in good faith, that is, with such care and attention as could be reasonably expected of him under the circumstances. The intrinsic evidence afforded by the petition itself fails to show that the accused did or believed anything without due care and attention. The care and attention required by law must have relation to the occasion and the circumstances, and the question as to what would be due care and attention must be determined with reference thereto. I am, therefore, of opinion that the accused ought to be acquitted. In this view of the case, it is unnecessary to express any opinion as to the other important points arising in this application.

Conviction and sentence set aside.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 6. 122—Hearsay evidence—Statement by by-stander—Husband and wife, communications between

A statement by a person alleged to be the eye-witness of a murder made to persons who came to the scene of occurrence after the murderers had left the place, cannot be proved against the accused for the purpose of showing that their names were mentioned as murderers.

In order to make the statement of a by-stander admissible, it must have been made, as contemplated by section 6 of the Evidence Act and illustration (a) to it, at the time the transaction was taking place, or so shortly before or after it as to form part of the transaction. If the transaction has terminated and then the statement is made, the statement is irrelevant. The admissibility is dependent on continuity.

The evidence of the wife of the accused as to certain communications between her and her husband is inadmissible under section 122 of the Evidence Act.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Shahpur Division, at Sargodha, dated the 9th June 1914, convicting the appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., and Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Fazl-i-Hussain, Jai Gopal Sethi, and Diwan Bahadur Daulat Ram (for the Government Advocate), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Sessions Judge of the Shahpur Division has convicted Sajawali, Muhammad and Shera of having murdered Sajawal alias Tali on the night of the 26th-27th of April 1914 at Mansa Gujranwala by striking blows on the head and throat with an axe and Jowala Sahai of having abetted the murder, and has sentenced each of the four accused to death. All of them have preferred, through Counsel, appeals to this Court from the order of conviction, the first three-named persons, Appeal No. 553 of 1914 and the last-named, Appeal No. 552 of 1914. The case is also before us under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code, for confirmation of the capital sentences. We have heard lengthy arguments by Messrs. Pestonji Dadabhai and Muhammad Shafi for the appellants and Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain for the Crown, given our most careful consideration to what these gentlemen had to urge before us and to the evidence on the record and come to the conclusion that the evidence does not establish the guilt of the accused and that their appeals must succeed.

The case for the prosecution is stated in extenso in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge and need not be repeated here at great length. It is clear that there was bitter enmity between the deceased Tali and each of the four accused. The facts in support of this allegation of the prosecution are fully given by the Sessions Judge (vide pages 40-41 of the paper-book) and borne out by the record. But enmity, while it supplies a motive on the part of the accused for committing the crime, constitutes at the same time a strong incentive for implicating falsely or suspecting persons who were not on good terms with the deceased and the members of his family. This is an aspect of the case which has to be borne in mind in weighing the evidence for the prosecution. Another fact which has been prominently brought to our notice is that the four accused were not the only persons in the village who were inimical to the deceased. It seems that he was a man often giving trouble to other persons and even the qualified statement made by his brother, Ali, does not give him a good character. Ali says: "My brother was perhaps a badmash and that was perhaps why he was called Tali," and the learned Sessions Judge correctly describes the deceased's relations with his co-villagers when he observes: "The deceased Tali, who appeared only recently before me in a forgery case against a patwari, appears to have been a man of a high-handed disposition, and there can be little doubt that he was done to death as he had made the lives of many people in the village more or less intolerable."

With these preliminary observations we now proceed to deal with the case against the accused. The story for the prosecution is that the four accused conspired together to murder Tali, three of them, namely, Sajawali, Muhammad and Shera, were to attack and kill him and the fourth accused, Jawala Sahai, was to remain in the background and supply the funds for defending the criminals and other necessary purposes. In pursuance of this conspiracy Jawala Sahai on the evening of the 26th of April visited Sajawal's house to call him and took the latter away. The three accused, Sajawali, Muhammad and Shera after midnight and before dawn went armed with axes to the courtyard where the deceased was sleeping and killed him by striking blows on the head and throat. They then went to a well outside the abadi, were seen on the way by Ditta, a tenant of the deceased, and remained there with Jawala Sahai until they were arrested on the afternoon of the 27th of April. There was an uproar in the courtyard and the mother, the two wives of the deceased, Dittu, Musammat Jawai, who is the wife of Sajawali accused and the sister of the deceased, and other persons were awakened by the noise and came to the scene of the murder. Ram Ditta, a private patwari of the deceased, also heard the outcry, went to the place, saw a large crowd there and then left it to send some one to fetch Ali, brother of the deceased, who was away at Shahpur, and to make the report at the Police Station. He met Ramzan chaukidar in the lane and told him to go to Ali and inform him that his brother had been killed and also either to report himself at the thana or to get Ali to do it. Ramzan at once went off to Shahpur, informed Ali of the occurrence and recorded a report at the Police Station there at 9 A. M. The Police arrived at the scene in the afternoon and began the usual investigation, which resulted in the prosecution of the four accused.

This, in brief, is the version of the prosecution and the medical evidence shows conclusively that three blows were inflicted on the head and throat of the deceased with a sharp-edged weapon like an axe and that death was due to the wound on the head. There is no doubt whatever that the deceased was murdered, and the only question for determination is whether the appellants committed the crime. Before dealing with the evidence it is necessary to say a few words with respect to the first information report. It is to be noted that it does not mention the accused either as the actual perpetrators of the crime or as suspects. In fact it does not state as to how or by whom Tali was killed and the reason given by Ramzan for this omission is that Ram Ditta, who sent him to report the occurrence at the thana, did not say who had murdered the deceased. Nor did he himself inquire as to the offenders, though he had been awakened by the outcry, came near to the house of the deceased and heard that Tali had been killed. We consider this reason assigned by Ramzan for the omission of the names of the appellants in the first report as wholly unsatisfactory. It must be remembered that Ram Ditta was the private patwari of the deceased and probably knew that it was most important to state in the first information report to the Police all the facts which were known at that time and that their suppression was likely to be used against the prosecution. Now it appears from the evidence for the prosecution that a large number of persons had been awakened by the "hall hall!" and had assembled in the courtyard where the murder had been committed. And Ram Ditta himself says that he saw a large crowd there. Dittu, it seems, was one of the first to reach the place and deposes that he stated that he had seen Sajawali, Muhammad and Shera going back with the axes. The same remark applies to Musammat Jawai. In fact, according to the prosecution the names of all the accused were mentioned at once and if that be the fact it is hard to understand why Ram Ditta, who is an enemy of at least Jawala Sahai and Muhammad, two of the appellants, did not come to know of the murderers. It is difficult to believe that neither he nor Ramzan made any inquiry with respect to the offenders before the latter left for Shahpur. It seems to us clear that the very first question which a man, after learning of a brutal murder like this, is likely to ask would relate to the persons by whom and to the manner in which it was committed. Yet we are told that Ram Ditta did not at that time find out who had killed Tali and that Ramzan, who had been roused from his sleep by the noise, came to the lane near the deceased's house and did not spend a few minutes in ascertaining the facts about the crime before leaving for the Police Station. In view of the above considerations we are inclined to think that the reasonable and probable explanation is that at the time when Ramzan was despatched to make the report the names of the accused had not been mentioned as the murderers. In fact Raja, P. W. No. 15, who was sent to call Muhammad Khan, the halqadar, deposes that before he left no one in the village told him who had committed the crime. The learned Sessions Judge states that "It has, owing to certain decisions, notably one of the Chief Court in the recent Jabbi murder in this district, come to be regarded as highly dangerous to mention the actual criminals in the first report, because it lays it open to the allegation that the case was concocted before the Police arrived." We are unable to say anything as to what is contained in the other judgments of which no particulars are given by the learned Judge, but as regards the Jabbi murder case (Case No. 272 of 1914), we must observe that the judgment of the Chief Court was not pronounced till the 12th of May 1914, i. e., about two weeks after the date of the report in the present case, and we fail to understand how that decision could possibly have any effect on a report made several days before. Further, after reading the judgment we do not find any remarks therein which deprecate the mention of the names of the actual offenders in the first report or make the slightest suggestion of that kind. The case for the prosecution there failed because the learned Judges of this Court were of opinion that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the conviction and made the following pertinent observations: "Indeed we do not say that any false evidence has been fabricated. We do, however, find that the evidence is not reliable and we cannot support the conviction." If, as the learned Sessions Judge states, there is an impression among the people that it is dangerous to mention the actual criminals in the first report, we take this opportunity of stating emphatically that it is altogether unfounded and that this Court always attaches very great importance to the statements contained in the first report, if it is recorded without unreasonable delay and considers it necessary that persons making the report should state all the details about the crime which are known at that time. Indeed the omission of the names of the offenders is, as in this case, urged always as a point against the prosecution and this defect should as far as possible be avoided.

Coming now to the evidence against the accused, we find that the case for the prosecution rests almost entirely on the testimony of four persons, namely, Dittu, Imam, Musammat Jawai and the tracker Allah Rakha, the first witness implicating only Sajawali, Muhammad and Shera, and the last proving footprints of only Sajawali and Shera. Sardara, the only person who is alleged to be the eye-witness of the occurrence, denied all knowledge both in the Committing Magistrate's Court and the Sessions Court. Any evidence as to what he said in the morning is clearly inadmissible as hearsay, and we are unable to agree with the learned Sessions Judge that under section 6 of the Indian Evidence Act the statement made by Sardara to other persons can be proved against the accused for the purpose of showing that the names of Sajawali, Muhammad and Shera were mentioned as the murderers. That section gives statutory recognition to a well-known rule of the law of evidence that facts which form part of the resgestæ are admissible in evidence. But this rule only applies when the facts are so connected together as to form part of the same transaction. As observed in Chain Mahto v. Emperor (1): "in order to make the statement of a by-stander admissible,...it must have been made, as contemplated by section 6 and illustration (a) to it, at the time the transaction was taking place or so shortly before or after it as to form part of the transaction. If the transaction has terminated and then the statement is made, the statement is irrelevant. The admissibility is dependent on continuity." To the same effect is the following passage in Ameer Ali and Woodroffe's Law of Evidence. The facts admissible under section 6 "must be necessary incidents of the litigated act in the sense that they are part of the immediate preparation for or emanations of such act and are not produced by the calculated policy of the actors. They are the act talking for itself, not what people say when talking about the act. In other words, they must stand in an immediate causal relation to the act—a relation not broken by the interposition of voluntary individual weariness, seeking to manufacture evidence for itself. Incidents that are thus immediately and unconsciously associated with an act, whether such incidents are doings or declarations, become in this way evidence of the character of the act. They are admissible though hearsay, because in such cases it is the act that creates the hearsay, not the hearsay the act. It is the power of perception unmodified by recollection that is appealed to; not of recollection modifying perception. Whenever recollection comes in, whenever there is opportunity for reflection and explanations—then statement ceases to be part of the res gestæ. Declarations to be admissible must be made during the transaction. If made after its completion they are too late." In the case before us, we find the murderers had left the place, the transaction had terminated and then the alleged statement was made to the persons who came to the scene of occurrence after hearing the noise. We cannot, therefore, regard this statement as forming part of the same transaction as the murder and must hold that it cannot be used against the accused. The case in Chain Mahto v. Emperor (1) is very similar and lays down the correct rule.

There is thus no direct evidence to prove the murder by the appellants and the circumstantial evidence is, in our opinion, not sufficiently reliable to warrant the conviction. The evidence of Dittu is to the effect that, at sargi wela, he went out for natural purposes and was coming back when some 25 karams from Tali's haveli, he saw the three accused with axes in their hands going away quietly and that they did not return any reply to his question as to what they had been doing and where they were going. The witness states that it was about dawn when he met them and that the place of meeting was an open maidan. Many villagers at that time usually go out for the purposes for which Dittu left his house and it is strange that though the murderers, with axes in their hands, were quietly moving along the maidan towards their well, they were not observed by any other person. Now Dittu has been a tenant of the deceased for some 15 years or so and has helped the latter in his acts of hostilities with the accused and his cross-examination shows that he is a very unsatisfactory witness. He pleads lack of memory with respect to several matters which he ought to remember and which would, if disclosed, materially detract from the value of his testimony. As observed already we do not understand why, if this man saw the three accused and mentioned the fact at once to the relatives of the deceased, it was not stated in the first report. But it is unnecessary to labour the point, because we think the learned Sessions Judge is right in stating that "in view of the fact that he (the witness) appears to have been more or less a retainer of deceased helping him in many acts of oppression, his evidence by itself must be received with so much caution, that I prefer to exclude it from consideration."

The next person whose evidence requires consideration is Imam. He deposes that on the night of the murder he was returning to his well after paying a visit to his uncle Ghulam at Sabowal and that when he passed by the well of Sajawali, he saw the four accused sitting there and conspiring together to murder Tali. Now we find that this witness and his cousin, the son of his uncle Ghulam, are both tenants of one Khuda Bakhsh and the certified copies of judicial records show that Jawala Sahai is not on good terms with Khuda Bakhsh, each having given evidence against the other on at least three occasions. It cannot, therefore, be said that Imam is a disinterested witness. Further, we think that his story is per se improbable. It is unlikely that Jawala Sahai who wanted to remain in the background should be so foolish as to hold a conference with the three accused in the open and talk to them in a sufficiently loud tone to be audible to a passer-by. Moreover it is strange that Jawala Sahai should continue to talk even when Imam, whom the accused must have recognised, had come near him. The reason given by this witness for going to Sajawali's well is not convincing when we know that his own well was very near and, therefore, there was no special necessity for going to Sajawali's well for a drink of water. Having regard to all the facts stated above, we are not prepared to hold that the evidence of this witness establishes the fact of the conspiracy at the well, more especially when there is not an iota of evidence to corroborate him.

The most important witness for the prosecution is Musammat Jawai, the wife of Sajawali accused and the sister of Tali deceased, and if her evidence is to be believed all the accused are undoubtedly guilty of murder. Her testimony relates to two matters. In the first place, she says that four days before the murder she, in the afternoon, went to fetch drinking water and while passing by Jawala Sahai's baithak overheard the four accused there conspiring to murder her brother. She then gives evidence as to certain communications between her and the husband which under section 122 of the Indian Evidence Act are clearly inadmissible in evidence and which the Sessions Judge should have excluded from the record [Vide Bishen Das v. Emperor (2)]. She further says that she went to her brother and informed him of the conspiracy and that he laughed at her and regarded the whole thing as a joke. The next matter deposed to by this witness is that on the night of the murder when all the members of the family had taken their meals and were about to retire, Jawala Sahai turned up, called her husband out and took him away.

She then went to sleep, was awakened by the noise from her brother's house and found that her husband was still absent. She hastened to the brother's house and found him murdered. This is an abstract of her statement and the question is whether her evidence should be believed. The husband's allegation is that the wife was unfaithful to him and had a liaison with Dittu, whose evidence we have already discussed, and that he (the husband) turned her out about two years before the murder. Some evidence has been adduced in support of this allegation, but after perusing it we think that the imputation upon her character has not been made out. The fact, however, remains that we have here a wife who, according to her own version, has always been on the best of terms with the husband and yet she gives most damaging evidence against him which, if accepted, must result in his conviction and in the sentence of death being passed upon him, with the inevitable consequence that she must be left a widow and her children without a father to look after them. She deposes not only to the husband having been taken away by Jawala Sahai the previous night, but also to the former taking part in the conspiracy four days previously in Jawala Sahai's baithak. Now it is clear that barring the accused, she is the only person cognizant of the alleged conspiracy on that day and it seems extraordinary that the wife should volunteer information about a matter which she could have easily withheld by simply keeping quiet and about which no other evidence was available. It is by no means rare to find a woman to do everything possible to save the life of her husband and even go so far as to tell a falsehood for that purpose. It is, indeed, hard to believe that a wife would tell even the truth against her husband in a serious case of this nature. But here we have a woman who, without going so far as to perjure herself, could have helped her husband by simply holding her tongue, but she does not do so. The position, as the Sessions Judge says, is extraordinary. Has she such an overwhelming regard for truth that she must depose not only as to whether her husband was at home on the night in question, which she was reasonably expected to know, but also as to a matter which is alleged to have happened four days previously and which no other witness was aware of? It is still more extraordinary that, according to her statement, nobody on behalf of her husband should have made the slightest attempt to get at her and dissuade her from giving evidence. We have known of criminals producing even outsiders to give false evidence in their favour but, in this case, the husband does not approach even his own wife, who is said to cherish most affectionate feelings towards him, with a request to desist from giving evidence against him. The situation is exceedingly improbable and we refuse to believe that mere regard for truth can account for her action in this case. We are forced to the conclusion that there must be some ulterior motive which has prompted her to adopt this attitude towards her husband and in view of the above-mentioned considerations we must take her evidence with a good deal of caution.

Furthermore, the story as to the conspiracy related by her seems to be improbable. Some of the reasons given in connection with Imam's evidence apply mutatis mutandis to her statement. and there is the further fact that it is unlikely that Jawala Sahai, who has already figured in many cases as a party or as a witness and is not unacquainted with what takes place in Courts of Law, should select his own baithak which is almost adjacent to the house of his enemy, Tali, for the purpose of conspiring to murder him and should deliver a lecture to the other three accused to induce them to commit the crime. This action of his exposed him to the risk of being overheard by Tali, his servants, Ram Ditta and Dittu, and his brother and other relatives. And if he selected his own baithak for the purpose, we fail to understand why he should talk in a loud voice so that any passer-by could hear him. The story is full of improbabilities and the facts deposed to by Jawai rest upon her uncorroborated testimony. Considering all the pros and cons and taking the statement as a whole, we cannot regard it as trustworthy.

As regards the tracker's evidence, which implicates only two accused, the only remark which need be made is that evidence of this kind cannot always be accurate and unless there is other independent evidence on the record to connect the accused with the crime, not much reliance can be placed on the track evidence. Even this tracker has, as the judgment of Mr. Ellis in another sessions case shows, made mistakes.

There is only one more incident which need be mentioned. It is stated by Muhammad chaukidar that on the morning of the 27th of April the four accused were together at the well of two of them, Shera and Muhammad, and that they refused to come to the village. Now the statement of this witness in cross-examination shows that he is not an impartial witness. It also appears that the time of the year was one when gram is harvested and when the agriculturists are expected to be out in their fields. With respect to Jawala Sahai, we do not understand why after the murder he should mix himself up with the other three accused and thereby create evidence against himself. He was, as already observed, anxious to remain behind the scenes and wanted other persons to do the crime and it would, therefore, be a most foolish act on his part to be in their company after the murder had been committed.

This practically finishes all that can be possibly urged against the accused. It is to be observed that each of the witnesses testifies to a separate fact which receives no corroboration from other evidence. It, therefore, becomes very difficult to test by cross-examination or otherwise whether the witnesses are really telling the truth, but after judging the evidence in the light of probabilities and looking at all the facts, we cannot help thinking that the evidence is insufficient to support the convictions. Direct evidence is wholly wanting in this case and the circumstantial evidence which is by no means convincing is given by persons who are biassed and inimical to the accused. There is a good deal of factious feeling in the village and the deceased was a troublesome person and had made many enemies. If we exclude the evidence that Sardara was sleeping with him on that night, it is clear that the deceased was alone in the courtyard, which was accessible to any outsider who wanted to come in and wreak his vengence upon him. It is, therefore, possible that murder was committed in the early part of the night when it was dark and as nobody else was with the deceased at that time, the offenders escaped without being detected by any persons and this probably explains why the names of the offenders were not stated in the first report. It is not, however, for us to offer conjectures. The simple issue before us is whether the evidence can justify an affirmative finding that the offence of murder has been proved against the accused. We think that the evidence which we have analysed above is not reliable and that it would be unsafe to pass, on the strength of it, sentences of death on four persons.

We accordingly accept the appeals, set aside the convictions and sentences and direct that all the accused be released forthwith.

Appeals accepted.

ABDUL GAFUR AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144—Cow-sacrifice—General order.

Under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, a District Magistrate can issue an order to the public generally who in certain particular circumstances cannot be individually addressed. Sub-section (3) of the section is intended to extend rather than to limit the scope of the order so as to include therein even casual or frequent visitors from outside the limits of the particular locality within which the order is to have application.

A general order issued by a District Magistrate to the effect that no person should sacrifice or cause to be sacrificed any cow or bullock within a certain specified boundary and period, is a legal order.

Application against an order of the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 17th February 1914, upholding that of the District Magistrate, Fyzabad, dated the 5th January 1914.

Mr. Mumtaz Husain, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the District Magistrate of Fyzabad by which two persons, Abdul Gafur and Abdul Wahid, have been convicted under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 150 each.

At the time of the Bakrid in 1912 some cows were brought to be slaughtered by certain Muhammadans in the town of Ajodhya. This led to a very serious riot, and to loss of life. On the 1st November 1913, with a view to obviate a recurrence of the trouble, the District Magistrate of Fyzabad, in anticipation of that festival, issued a general notice to the public not to drive cattle intended for slaughter through any public place in Ajodhya from the 2nd to the 12th of November. In the meantime Abdul Wahid and certain other persons applied on November 6th for permission to sacrifice cows in Ajodhya on the occasion of the Bakrid. On the 8th of November the District Magistrate rejected their application, and issued an order to 36 individuals in Ajodhya, including Abdul Wahid, not to kill or cause to be killed any cow or bullock on the 9th, 10th, 11th, or 12th November in their houses or elsewhere in Ajodhya. This notice was served upon Abdul Wahid. As a further precaution, the District Magistrate issued a general order on the 10th November in which he set out that whereas separate orders had been issued to 36 persons forbidding them to sacrifice cows or bullocks, but as there was reason to believe that other persons, to whom such orders were not issued, were intending to sacrifice cows or bullocks in connection with the Bakrid festival, it was ordered that no person should sacrifice or cause to be sacrificed any cow or bullock in any place within the boundaries of the city of Ajodhya at any time on the 9th, 10th, 11th, or 12th of November. This order was duly promulgated. On the 12th November at 9 A. M. Abdul Gafur reported at Ajodhya Police Station that he had that morning sacrificed a cow in Mohalla Bashishth Kund at the house of Abdul Wahid, with the permission of Abdul Wahid. The house in which the sacrifice took place was a vacant house belonging to Abdul Basit, a close relation of Abdul Wahid; and it is not denied that Abdul Wahid and Abdul Gafur were privy to the sacrifice which was carried out there. They were prosecuted and convicted of an offence under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code. Abdul Wahid was prosecuted for defiance of the orders of both 8th and 10th November, and Abdul Gafur for defiance of that of the 10th November only. It is not in set terms noted by the Magistrate in respect of disobedience of which order Abdul Wahid was convicted. The learned Sessions Judge in disposing of the appeal treated the conviction as having been directed against the contravention of the order of the 10th November, that is to say, the general order.

Application in revision has been filed in this Court to the effect that the order dated 10th November was not a legal order, and that the Magistrate had no power to fetter the exercise of a private right in private places, such as a house, by an order directed to the public generally. It is not pretended that the private right must not on proper occasions be subordinate to the public interest, and it is admitted that the District Magistrate had power to control the actions of a person in his own private house by a direct order addressed specifically to such person, under the second paragraph of section 144 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The order which the Magistrate issued on the 10th November was an order under section 144 (1) and was issued in accordance with the provisions of section 144 (3) which runs as follows:—

"An order under this section may be directed to a particular individual, or to the public generally when frequenting or visting a particular place."

Into this provision the applicants seek to read the word "public" so that the provision would run "or to the public generally when frequenting or visting a particular public place."

We can see no justification for any such interpolation. The temporary order contemplated in this Chapter is an order under section 144 (1), which would issue when immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable to prevent a disturbance of the public tranquility, a riot or an affray or danger to human life. Section 144 (1) contemplates an order to any person to abstain from a certain act, or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management. Section 144 (3) has nothing to do with the nature of the order, but is one of four sub-sections which refer to the manner of promulgation and to the duration of an order under section 144 (1). It is quite clear that the proper interpretation of section 144 (3) is that the order may be directed to a particular individual; and that when, because of the number of particular individuals, it is impracticable that the Magistrate could issue notice to each one of them, he can issue a general order to the whole number of such particular individuals, here designated as "the public generally;" and such order, in respect of each particular individual, will have the same effect as a separate order served upon him, provided of course that it has been so promulgated that it has come to his knowledge. The argument for the applicants is based upon a misapprehension of the word "public," which does not only mean here the corporate body pursuing its public avocations, but also means the whole number of particular individuals who in the circumstances cannot be particularly addressed. The order will have effect to control either the private or public actions of every such individual, according to its tenor. It is argued that by using the words "frequenting or visting a particular place," the Legislature intended to enact that no general order could be directed against residents, but rather that such a general order could only be directed against casual or frequent visitors. With this we cannot agree. The intention of the sub-section is to extend rather than to limit the scope of the order, so as to include therein even casual or frequent visitors from outside the limits of the particular locality within which the order is to have application. The order, therefore, as it was issued, was a legal order, and the two applicants, when disobeying it, rendered themselves liable to a prosecution under section 188.

Incidentally we may note that the order was further justified by section 118 of Act I of 1900, Municipalities Act.

The application is, therefore, rejected.

Application rejected.

KRISTA MANDAL—2ND PARTY—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 356—Order under s. 145—Procedure under s. 356 not complied with, effect of.

The provisions of sub-section (3), section 356, of the Criminal Procedure Code apply only to cases in which the evidence recorded under the first sub-section is not recorded in the Magistrate's own hand. The provisions of the first sub-section are imperative and where a Magistrate in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, does not follow this procedure, his order cannot be sustained.

Rule issued against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Magura, dated 18th March 1914.

Babus Hari Bhushan Mookherjee and Satis Chandra Ghatak, for the Petitioner.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule, issued at the instance of the first party to proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, called upon the District Magistrate and the opposite party to show cause why the final order made in these proceedings should not be set aside on two grounds, namely, first, that the evidence had not been recorded in the manner provided by section 356, Criminal Procedure Code, and secondly, on the ground that the Magistrate did not receive the oral and documentary evidence tendered by the petitioner. The District Magistrate has submitted an explanation. From this explanation we find that in fact the trying Magistrate did receive all the evidence, oral or documentary, that was offered. With regard to the first ground what the Magistrate says is that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, that is to say, the trying Magistrate made a memorandum of evidence in the manner required by the third sub-section to section 356, Criminal Procedure Code, and that the making of that memorandum should be regarded as a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law. We are unable to accept this contention. The provisions of sub-section (3), section 356, Criminal Procedure Code, apply only to cases in which the evidence recorded under the first sub-section is not recorded in the Magistrate's own hand. The provisions of the first sub-section are imperative and we are unable to condone the non-compliance therewith. We, therefore, make this Rule absolute and set aside the order complained of.

Rule made absolute.

Second appeal—Plea raised for the first time, whether can be allowed

The plaintiff sued his vendor and the brother and mother of the vendor for possession of a specific portion of a house, alleging that it represented his one-third share in the house which had been purchased in the name of the defendants and one-third of which had been sold to the plaintiff. The vendor confessed judgment, but the other defendants pleaded that in a partition after the purchase the house had fallen to the share of the defendant, who was vendor's brother. The plea was held proved by the original Court and the suit was dismissed, but the Appellate Court found that the plea was not established and passed a decree for possession of one-third of the house. On second appeal it was contended that the vendor, being a member of a joint Hindu family, had no right to alienate any portion of the house which the plaintiff could claim:

Held, that it was a new plea and could not be raised for the first time on second appeal.

Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Appellants.

Lala Dharm Das Suri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Ram Chand, Narain Das, and their mother Musammat Ditti, in 1891, bought a house for the consideration of Rs. 800. On the 6th January 1912, Ram Chand sold a specific portion of the house as his third share to the plaintiff-respondent. Plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for possession of the portion sold to her, or in the alternative for one-third of the house. The defendants pleaded that prior to the sale there had been a partition in virtue of which the house in dispute fell to Narain Das. The first Court found that plaintiff had proved the sale by Ram Chand in her favour, but the defendants had also proved their allegation as to the partition. On these findings it dismissed the plaintiff's claim. The Divisional Judge on appeal was of opinion that the evidence produced by the defendants was not satisfactory and that the alleged partition of the property had not been proved. He, therefore, accepted the appeal and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession of one-third of the house. Narain Das and Musammat Ditti have filed a second appeal in this Court.

The first three grounds of appeal traverse the lower Appellate Court's findings on questions of fact. These findings cannot be contested in second appeal. The fourth ground is the important one upon which Bhagat Gobind Das for the appellants has laid stress in his argument. He urges that Ram Chand, being a member of a joint Hindu family, could not sell any specific portion of the joint property without the consent of the other co-parceners. Piare Lal v. Ram Chand (1) is an authority in support of his contention. Mr. Dharam Das, on behalf of the respondent, contends that there was no plea by the defendants in the first Court that this property was the property of the co-parceners, members of a joint Hindu family, and that one co-parcener could not sell his share without the consent of the others. I have carefully considered the written pleas filed in the first Court and I am clear that this specific plea was never raised. Even if the defendants were members of a joint Hindu family, it does not follow that this house was part of the joint family property. In the deed of 1891, by which it was acquired, it was not stated that it was acquired for the family. It was simply stated that the purchasers were three persons whose names were specified. If the plea had been distinctly raised by the defendants in the first Court, the plaintiff would have had an opportunity of saying whether the property was joint family property or not, and an issue would have been struck and evidence would have been taken thereon. It certainly would not be proper to throw out the plaintiff's claim upon this ground which was never raised in the first Court.

The only question is, whether I should allow the plea to be raised and order a remand for further inquiry. In my opinion the plea should not be allowed now. Defendants never intended to contest the claim on this ground. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Hindu widow, alienation by—Legal necessity—Onus probandi—Consent of reversioners—Attestation by nearest contingent reversioner, effect of—Evidence of consent.

To be valid as against the reversioners, or to affect their reversionary rights, a charge created by a Hindu widow or an alienation effected by her can be supported only by proof aliunde that such debt was contracted or alienation was made for valid and legal necessity, and the onus of establishing such necessity rests heavily on the person who claims the benefit of transactions with a Hindu widow or other females taking similar estates. The requirements of the law as to valid and legal necessity may, however, be fulfilled by proving the consent or concurrence of the reversioners to or in the transactions. But the mere attestation by a relative even though he might be the sole contingent reversioner, does not necessarily import concurrence. When a stringent equity arising out of an alleged consent by the reversioners is sought to be enforced against them, such consent should not be inferred from ambiguous acts or be supported by dubious oral testimony, but must be established by positive evidence that upon an intelligent understanding of the nature of the dealings they concurred in binding their interests; and the kindred in such case must generally mean all those who are likely to be interested in disputing the transaction, or at all events there should be such a concurrence of the members of the family as suffices to raise a presumption that the transaction was a fair one and one justified by Hindu Law.

Jiwan Singh v. Mani Lal, 23 I. A. 1; 18 A. 146; 6 M. L. J. 47; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 675, referred to.

Consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court at Calcutta, dated the March 11th, 1909, affirming those of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, dated the June 22nd, 1908.

FACTS.—Two suits, in which these decrees were made, were instituted by the respondents, Bajrang Sahai Singh and Kashi Parshad Singh and Ram Parshad Singh, for the recovery of their respective shares of certain property as the reversionary heirs of one Shayamal Singh, deceased, whose widow had alienated the same. Both Courts in India decreed the suits, holding that there was neither valid and legal necessity for the alienations challenged, nor were they proved to have been made with the consent of the reversioners to make them binding on them. The defendants-appellants then preferred the present appeals.

Mr. Dunne, for the Appellants:—Where there is consent of the reversioners, the transaction by a Hindu widow is binding on them, and the question whether there is legal necessity or otherwise is immaterial. When such consent is once proved, there is a presumption that the transaction is a fair one, and unless those seeking to set aside the transaction show that there was fraud or something else that would vitiate the transaction, the transaction in question must stand: Raj Lukhee Debea v Gokool Chunder Chowdhry (1) and Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Vencata Narrainopah (2). Such consent may be given subsequently to make the transaction binding: Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh (3).

gage, for in the latter case she does not surrender the whole of her interest and consequently there is no acceleration. But the decision is not followed in Debi Prasad Chowdhry v Golap Bhagat (6), where a Full Bench has ruled that this doctrine of consent applies also in the case of a mortgage by a Hindu widow. It is submitted that the evidence establishes that there was such consent in respect of both mortgages, the first of which is attested by the sole contingent reversioner, and the second, though not attested by him, is given with the approval of one of his sons and other reversioners to pay off the interest on the first mortgage.

Mr. Lowndes, for the Respondents.

[LORD DUNEDIN asked Counsel to deal with the first mortgage only.]

The doctrine of acceleration applies when the widow makes an out and out conveyance to the next reversioner: Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal (7). It is, therefore, clear that it does not apply where the widow gives only a mortgage. The doctrine of surrender has been recognised as the basis of the validity of an out and out sale by a widow with the reversioners' consent, and it is, therefore, submitted that a mortgage by a widow even with the consent of the reversioners would not be binding on them.

Further, mere attestation by a reversioner is not sufficient to make the transaction binding on him: Raj Lukhee Debea v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhry (1).

The consent must be of all the kindred of the deceased husband and in order to raise the presumption arising from the reversioners' consent, it must be established that such consent was given with knowledge of the effect of what they were doing and that there was an intelligent intention to consent to such effect: Jiwan Singh v. Misri Lal (8) and Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (5). But in this case there is no evidence whatever to show that there was such consent. Moreover, what was sold under the mortgage decree was the right, title and interest of the mortgagor, that is, the estate of the widow. [Counsel was stopped].

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI.—The question for determination in these appeals relates to the validity, as against the reversioners, of certain sales held in execution of decrees obtained on mortgages effected by a Hindu widow, who had succeeded to her husband's estate on his death without leaving any issue. Shyamal Singh, the husband, died in 1842, and the widow, Dulhin Nawab Kumari, held the properties, which form the subject of the present litigation, until the transactions the validity of which is challenged in these suits.

The first mortgage was executed by Nawab Kumari in favour of the defendant-appellant on the 26th of November 1877 in respect of three of the properties in her possession On the 11th of July 1882 she mortgaged the rest of the properties to Bhagat for a further loan, and in 1889 she gave him what is usually called in India a ticca pottah of the shares of Shyamal Singh in all the mousahs save one. Under this usufructuary lease the defendant obtained possession of the shares covered by it.

In 1893 Bhagat brought a suit against Nawab Kumari on the mortgage of 1877 and in execution of the decree on that bond purchased the three properties to which it related. In 1897 he obtained a decree on the bond of 1882, in execution of which he himself purchased again the remaining properties held by the widow. He thus obtained possession of all the shares in the different villages which Nawab Kumari had inherited from her husband for a widow's estate.

Nawab Kumari died in 1900, and the plaintiffs, who are Shyamal Singh's brothers' sons and whose reversionary right to his estate, though questioned in the first Court, is not disputed now, brought the present suits to recover possession of the properties held by Bhagat under the execution sales of 1893 and 1897, their main contention being that neither the mortgages executed by Nawab Kumari nor the sales thereunder affected more than her interest, which ceased on her death.

Hari Kishen Bhagat is the principal defendant, but his sons have been impleaded in both actions, as they are joint in estate and living in commensality with him, and are, therefore, necessary parties.

The main defence to the plaintiffs' claims was that the mortgages were effected by the widow for valid and legal necessity under the Hindu Law, and, further, that they were concurred in by the reversioners, and that consequently the defendants by virtue of the sales in question acquired the interests of the widow as well as theirs. It is to be remarked that in neither of the mortgage suits were the reversioners made parties.

At the time when the bond of 1877 was executed, the nearest reversioner to Shyamal Singh was his sole surviving brother, Raghubir Singh. After him stood Raghubir's sons, of whom there were several, and the sons of two other brothers, Bhupal and Jagrup, who were dead at the time. Among these nephews of Shyamal Singh the names of Behary, the only son of Bhupal, and Bajrung Sahai, a son of Jagrup and a plaintiff in one of the present actions, should be particularly mentioned, as they figure in the transactions in question.

In the instrument of 1877 the name of the widow is written by Bajrung Sahai Singh. He also appears to have purchased the stamp paper on which the bond is inscribed. Among the witnesses to the document are Raghubir and Behary.

The name of the widow in the mortgage of 1882 appears to be written by Behari Singh, and one of the witnesses to this bond is Bajrung Sahai. On the lease of 1889 Nawab Kumari's name is written by Modenarain, a son of Raghubir, and the witnesses are Ram Parshad, another son of Raghubir, Bishan Parshad, one of the sons of Behary, and Bajrung Sahai, who also appears to have identified the lady to the Registrar. Both the Courts in India have found that so far as the ticca pottah of 1889 is concerned, the debt contracted thereunder has been satisfied out of the usufruct of the properties covered by the lease.

The points for determination in these appeals depend on the transactions of 1877 and 1882 respectively. The law relating to the dealings of a Hindu widow with her husband's estate which devolves on her in default of issue is now too well settled to need a prolonged consideration. To be valid as against the reversioners, or to affect their reversionary rights, a charge created by a Hindu widow or an alienation effected by her can be supported only by proof aliunde that such debt was contracted or such alienation was made for valid and legal necessity, and the onus of establishing such necessity rests heavily on the person who claims the benefit of transactions with a Hindu widow or other females taking similar estates. The requirement of the law may, however, be fulfiled by proving the consent or concurrence of the reversioners to or in transactions.

In the present cases the Trial Judge in a careful and well-considered judgment held that the defendants had failed to prove any valid and legal necessity for the mortgages executed by the widow. This view has been affirmed on appeal by the High Court of Calcutta, and there being thus a concurrent finding of fact by the two Courts in India, that subject is now out of the region of discussion. Both the Courts have further held in effect that the part taken by the reversioners with respect to the transactions in question did not amount to a consent to bind their interests. In view of the facts and circumstances of the case, their Lordships have no hesitation in expressing their concurrence with the conclusion at which the Courts in India have arrived. The Trial Judge has carefully examined the phraseology of the two instruments and he is of opinion that their language is fully consistent with the fact that the interest of the widow alone was intended to be charged. Nor is there anything to show that the reversioners who helped her to raise the loans understood it otherwise. There is no evidence that they benefited from the transactions, or that so far as they were concerned there was any need for the mortgages. Their Lordships think that when a "stringent equity," to use Lord Hobhouse's expression in the course of the argument in Jiwan Singh v. Misri Lal (8), arising out of an alleged consent by the reversioners is sought to be enforced against them, such consent must be established by positive evidence that upon an intelligent understanding of the nature of the dealings they concurred in binding their interests; and that such consent should not be inferred from ambiguous acts or be supported by dubious oral testimony, such as appears to have been relied upon in this case

In Raj Lukhee Debea v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhry (1), this Board refused to affirm the proposition that mere attestation by a relative necessarily imports concurrence, and they added that when the consent of the husband's kindred is relied upon for the validity of alienations effected by the widow, "the kindred in such case must generally be understood to be all those who are likely to be interested in disputing the transaction. At all events, there should be such a concurrence of the members of the family, as suffices to raise a presumption that the transaction was a fair one, and one justified by Hindu Law." The observations of the Board in that case seem to their Lordships to apply with particular force to the facts of the present case.

On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the judgments appealed from are right and ought to be affirmed, and that these appeals ought to be dismissed with costs. And they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeals dismissed.

In order to constitute a direction it is not necessary that anything should be said. If a testator in making his mark is assisted by some other person and acquiesces and adopts it, it is just the same as if he had made it without any assistance.

Wilson v. Beddard, 12 Sim. 28; 10 L. J Ch. 305; 5 Jur. 624; 59 Eng. Rep. 1041, referred to.

It is sufficient for the purposes of section 50 of the Succession Act if each of the two or more witnesses to a Will speaks either to the signature, or to the fixing of the mark, or to the signature by another person, or to the personal acknowledgment.

The Indian Law does not require that the witnesses to a Will must be present at the same time as the English Law does.

Appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 4th April 1912.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chakrabarti, for the Appellant.

Babus Satya Charan Sinha and Dhirendra Kumar Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed to the property of one Khirodebasini Debi who died on the 7th February 1911 after having, it is said, executed her last Will on the 6th of February, the day previous. The learned Judge has refused to grant Letters of Administration, holding that there was no independent evidence as to the execution of the Will and that the attestation was not legally proved. The learned Judge found, and we think rightly found, upon the evidence that the lady wanted to make a Will or in any case some disposition of her property in favour of the beneficiary in this case, that is, Bhupendra Nath Roy Chowdhuri, the son of Mukta Nath Roy Chowdhuri. Of this there can be no doubt. She was living in the same house with Mukta Nath and his children, and this boy Bhupendra Nath is said to have been very much loved by her. So far as the motive of the testatrix is concerned, it is in favour of the Will having been executed.

As regards independent evidence, objection has been taken that nearer relations were not made to attest the Will nor her spiritual guide. Her nearer relations were, however, not residing at Cossipur where she resided and died. It is true that her spiritual guide resided at Cossipur. But as she did not want to make any disposition in favour of her spiritual guide, it would not look proper to have the spiritual guide attesting a document in which he was disappointed of any expectation that he might have had upon the property of the dying widow. In any case the people who were about her and who were principally to be benefited by the execution of the Will, would not take initiative in calling the people who might induce her at her last moment to make deductions from what they expected to get, so that these other people might be benefited. Four witnesses are said to have attested the Will and all of them have been examined. With regard to Mukta, who was the writer, he cannot be said in this case to have attested the Will as a witness, because there is no evidence that he signed the Will after the testatrix. As regards Kripa Nath, the learned Judge is not inclined to believe that he was present at the time of the execution of the Will and we are not prepared to differ from him. As regards other witnesses, however, there does not seem to be any particular reason for disbelieving them, specially seeing that the Will is in accordance with the wishes of the testatrix expressed during her life-time before reliable witnesses. Now, as regards these witnesses. Shibendra and Keshab, Shibendra guided her hand in fixing her mark and also put down the name of the testatrix under the mark by his own pen. If the writing of the name of the testatrix by her direction and by the pen of Shibendra be considered as the execution of the Will, then Shibendra cannot be considered as an attesting witness. It is contended, however, that apart from that signature there is the mark and under the law execution was complete as soon as the testatrix put down the mark upon the document intending the document to be her Will. Then the question is whether the mark put upon the document has been proved in accordance with the provisions of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, which has been made applicable to the Wills of the Hindus. Shibendra says that "I think her finger mark was taken by catching hold of her finger." In cross-examination he says that "I got her make the finger mark by taking hold of her finger." It is contended that this cannot be taken as execution of the document by the testatrix, because the motive power was that of Shibendra and that there is no evidence that this was done in accordance with the direction of the testatrix. Shibendra, however, says that Khirodebasini made the Will, that he read over the Will to Khirodebasini, that when he asked her whether he would sign the Will for her she nodded her assent and that she had sense when the Will was read over to her. If her finger was guided to make the mark in this state of things and she did not snatch away her finger or opposed the finger mark being made on the document, it cannot be said that the finger mark was made against her will. On the other hand considering the occasion on which the finger mark was put, the surroundings and the evidence that the Will was executed at her desire, the better opinion seems to be that the finger mark was placed upon the document by her desire. We may in this connection refer to the case of Wilson v. Beddard (1), where the Vice-Chancellor is reported to have said that "in order to constitute a direction, it is not necessary that anything should be said. If a testator, in making his mark, is assisted by some other person and acquiesces and adopts it, it is just the same as if he had made it without any assistance." Then there is the evidence of Keshob Chandra Majumdar. This witness was somewhat confused in his cross-examination. But taking the purport of his whole deposition it seems that his evidence that the testatrix told him that she had made the Will and directed him to sign as a witness, may be taken as correct. If that be so, then we have the direct evidence of Shibendra that the mark was put upon the document by the testatrix and the evidence of Keshab that the testatrix acknowledged the Will before him.

The next question is whether this would be a sufficient attestation in accordance with the provisions of the 3rd clause of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act which provides that, "The Will shall be attested by two or more witnesses, each of whom must have seen the testator sign or affix his mark to the Will, or have seen some other person sign the Will in the presence and by the direction of the testator, or have received from the testator a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, or of the signature of such other person." Now, it is contended by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the attestation will not be in accordance with the law unless each of the witnesses proves the same state of things, that is, unless each of the two witnesses speaks either to the signature or to the fixing of the mark or to the signature by another person or to the personal acknowledgment. This interpretation of the section may be plausible, but we do not think that it is a reasonable interpretation of the section. There may be cases in which one witness saw the testator sign the document and the Will was acknowledged before another. Such cases would go out of the category of properly executed Wills, if this interpretation of the section be accepted; and the language of the section is not incapable of an interpretation in accordance with which it would be quite sufficient if each of the two or more witnessess conforms to one of the alternatives. In this view we think that the evidence of Shibendra as regards the putting of the mark taken with the evidence of Keshob that the Will was acknowledged before him, is sufficient to meet the requirements of the section as regards the attestation. The Indian Law does not require that the witnesses must be present at the same time as the English Law does. The learned Judge is not, therefore, right in objecting to the evidence on this ground. On the whole we think that the Will ought to be supported and Letters of Administration granted in due course.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed with costs, two gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
FULL BENCH.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1804 OF 1911.
September 24, 1914.

Present:—Sir John Edward Power Wallis, Offg. Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Ayling, and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

PONNAMMAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
RAMAMIRDA AIYAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, rr. 1, & 2—Suit for possession of land only—Subsequent suit for mesne profits payable before institution of suit for possession, whether barred—Claims for possession and for mesne profits—Causes of action.

Claims for recovery of land and claims for mesne profits are separate causes of action.

If a plaintiff sues for possession only when he might have joined in the same action claims for profits and damages, it is open to him to sue subsequently for the profits which became payable before the institution of the suit and which might have been included in such suit.

Monohur Lall v. Gouri Sunkur, 9 C. 283; 12 C. L. R. 434; 5 Shome L. R. 128, Tirupati v. Narasimha, 11 M. 210, Lalessor Babui v. Janki Bibi, 19 C. 615, Gutta Saramma v. Maganti Raminedu, 31 M. 405; 4 M. L. T. 192, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suit No. 840 of 1910, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Mannargudi, in Original Suit No. 117 of 1909.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 9th February 1914, the Court (Sankaran Nair and Ayling, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

"Plaintiff is the daughter-in-law of one Sundarappier. In a partition between him and his sons 30 mahs of land were allotted to him, which under the partition-deed on his death were to devlove in equal shares on the plaintiff's husband and his brothers, defendants Nos. 1 and 3. He died in 1888. On account of the minority of the plaintiff's husband, the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 continued in possession of the entire property including the plaintiff's husband's share, paying him his share of the profits till 1890. After her husband's death, the plaintiff sued for partition of her husband's share and got a decree. She now sues for mesne profits. The question for decision is, whether her claim for mesne profits prior to the institution of the suit for partition is barred.

"The following cases are relied upon in favour of the plaintiff's contention:—

Monohur Lall v. Gouri Sunkur (1), Tirupati v. Narasimha (2), Lalessor Babui v. Janki Bibi (3), Gutta Saramma v. Maganti Raminedu (4).

"On behalf of the defendants, the following cases are relied upon:—

(2) 11 M. 210.
(3) 19 C. 615.
(4) 31 M. 405; 4 M. L. T. 192.

Venkoba v. Subbanna (5), Mewa Koer v. Banarsi Prasad (6), Shanmugam Pillai v. Syed Ghulam Ghose (7).

"All these cases are referred to and discussed in Subbraya Chetti v. Rathnavelu Chetti (8) in which, however, the question argued before us was not decided.

On this question which we propose to refer to a Full Bench for decision, there is a real difference of opinion. We accordingly refer to the Full Bench the question:—

If a plaintiff sues for possession only when he might have joined in the same action claims for profits and damages, is it open to him to sue subsequently for the profits which became payable before the institution of the suit and which might have been included in such suit?"

This second appeal coming on for hearing as per order before a Full Bench, Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar appeared for the Appellant and Mr. T. R. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondents.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The cause of action for possession and the cause of action for mesne profits are quite distinct causes of action; but the two may be joined together (Section 10 of Act VIII of 1859). That is the result of the English authorities. [See also Gledhill v. Hunter (9).] The provisions of Order II, rule 4, are only enabling, not compulsory. It corresponds to Order II, rule 2, of the Supreme Court Rules. Kuppusamy Aiyar v. Venkatramier (10) shows that claim a for mesne profits does not arise out of the same cause of action as the one for recovery of land.

Tirupati v. Narasimha (2), which follows Monohur Lall v. Gouri Sunkur (1), and Gutta Saramma v. Muganti Ramireddu (4) are clearly in my favour. Also Lalessor Babu v. Janki Bibi (3). Monohur Lall v. Gouri Sunkur (1) is based on the Full Bench decision in Pratap Chandra Barua v. Rani Swarnamayi (11). There is no difference in meaning between the words 'arising out of' and 'entitled to make in respect of' in the old section 43 and the new Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, for it is still necessary that the cause of action must be identical to apply Order II, rule 3. In Subbraya Chetti v. Rathnavelu Chetti (8), suits for possession and for rent though arising out of obligations created by the same contract are held to be on distinct causes of action. Kashinath Ramchandra v. Nathoo Keshav (12) is based on identity of media of proof or the evidence to substantiate the two claims. It is not quite consistent with the view taken in Subbraya Chetti v. Rathnavelu Chetti (8). Venkoba v. Subbanna (5) and Mewa Koer v. Banarsi Prasad (6) are against me. But subsequently cases in this Court have not followed them. Shanmugam Pillai v. Syed Ghulam Ghose (7) is distinguishable. It clearly comes within Order II, rule 2, and is like the illustration to that rule itself. Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (13) also shows that Order II, rule 2, has no application where the causes of action (in that case the one on a pro-note and the other on the original consideration) are different.

Mr. T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents:—There is a distinction in principle between cases of subsequent suits for mesne profits after date of the prior suits for possession, and cases of subsequent suit for possession after a prior suit for mesne profits. In the former class of cases the cause of action for the subsequent suit arises after the first suit. It is a new cause of action based on the subsequent continuance of wrongful possession. The actual decisions in Tirupati v. Narasimha (2), Monohur Lall v. Gouri Sunkur (1) and Pratap Chandra Barua v. Rani Swarnamayi (11), therefore, do not really apply. It is only the dicta in them, which are too general, that can be relied on, on the other side. In Subbraya Chetti v. Rathnavelu Chetti (8) there were two independent causes of action, one on tort and the other on contract, and that case has no application. The only decisions which are really in point are Venkoba v. Subbanna (5) and Mewa Koer v. Banarsi Prasad (6), and they are in my favour. There is only one cause of action in cases of claims for possession and mesne profits for the period up to that suit, namely, the wrongful possession. Order II, rule 4, clause (a), only applies to cases where possibly there may be a difference in the causes of action for possession and mesne profits. It does not mean that in all cases they are distinct. Clause (c) clearly shows that claim for mesne profits can form part of the claim arising from the cause of action for recovery of the land.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, in reply:—Order II, rule 4, clause (c), applies to cases like partition suits where partition of moveables can be asked for along with partition of immoveable property as the claims for both arise from the same cause of action. It is not intended to apply to any case of claim for mesne profits.

OPINION.—The answer to the reference must be in the affirmative. It seems to us that claims for possession and claims for mesne profits have always been treated as separate causes of action in the Code of Civil Procedure following in this the English Law. At Common Law claims for ejectment and for mesne profits were separate causes of action, and before the Common Law Procedure Act 1852, an action for mesne profits did not lie until judgment had been recovered in ejectment. Section 10 of the Code of 1859 expressly provided that a claim for the recovery of land and a claim for mesne profits arising out of such land should be deemed to be distinct causes of action within the meaning of the two preceding sections, which dealt with joinder of causes of action in the same suit. When the Code was remodelled in 1877 after the Judicature Act and the Rules of Practice framed thereunder had come into force in England, the language of these rules was in many instances substituted for the language of the Code of 1859, and in this way section 10 dropped out and was re-placed by section 44 (now Order II, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908), the language of which was taken from Order XVII, rule 2, of the English Rules. The effect, however, is the same because, when the rule says that no cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property except (a) claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed, or any part thereof, it is quite clear that the Legislature considered that claims for the recovery of land and claims for mesne profits were separate causes of action, and that it was not intended to depart from the express provisions to that effect in section 10 of the Code of 1859. We have also been referred to Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (13), a decision on section 34 of the Ceylon Code of Civil Procedure, which is in the same terms as section 43 of the Code of 1882, in which their Lordships discuss the scope of that rule and lay down that it is not intended to secure the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action, even if they arise out of the same transactions, and point out that the provision that an obligation and a collateral security for its performance should be deemed to constitute but one cause of action is a substantive enactment, making, what would otherwise be two independent causes of action, one cause of action for the purposes of the section. This shows that the distinction between different causes of action must be strictly observed. For the foregoing reasons and following the decisions quoted in the reference, Monohur Lall v. Gouri Sunkur (1), Tirupati v. Narasimha (2), Lalessor Babui v. Janki Bibi (3) and Gutta Saramma v. Maganti Ramineidu (4), we answer the reference in the affirmative.

GURMUKH SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

KANSHI RAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 9 — Death of one of the defendants during pendency of suit—Legal representative not made party within time—Abatement—Sufficient cause for setting it aside.

A preliminary decree in a suit for rendition of partnership accounts was made on the 1st November 1909 and the appeal against it was finally dismissed by the Chief Court on the 20th December 1911. In the meantime one of the defendants had died in September 1910 and when the record was returned to the first Court on the 17th January 1912, it directed that the deceased defendant's representatives shall be impleaded, which was done on the 17th February 1912. The Court then decided that the suit abated as against the deceased and decreed it against the others. On appeal the Divisional Judge held that the suit failed against all the defendants:

Held, that the deceased defendant was an essential party to the suit and as the plaintiffs did not make an application for impleading his legal representatives on the earliest possible date after the first Court was again seized of the case, there was no sufficient cause for the delay and the suit failed.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 16th of May 1913, reversing that of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 4th of October 1912, decreeing claim.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Appellants.

Bhagat Govind Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for rendition of partnership accounts, which has been declared by the lower Appellate Court to have abated by reason of the fact that one partner died during the pendency of the case and no application within limitation was made to bring his legal representatives on to the record.

It is admitted for the appellants-plaintiffs that the deceased partner was an essential party to the suit, at any rate, in the first instance, but it is urged that as a preliminary decree was issued against him, he was not an essential party to the rest of the proceedings; in other words, the suit could proceed to an end in his absence, and the suit abated against him alone and could proceed against the other defendants.

The facts are that the parties each took a license for the vend of liquor, but after receiving their licences, they entered into a partnership by which they agreed each to work his shop and divide the profits of all.

The preliminary decree issued on 5th November 1909, and the Commissary, who examined the accounts, made a report on 3rd January 1910, but before any final decree ould be pronounced, one of the defendants appealed to the Divisional Court which dismissed the appeal on 11th April 1910.

From that dismissal there was a further appeal to this Court on 5th June 1910, which was dismissed on 20th December 1911 on the ground that one of the defendants, Than Singh, had died in September 1910 and his legal representatives had not been made a party within limitation.

On 17th January 1912 the record was returned to the first Court, which directed that Than Singh's representatives should be impleaded and this was done on 17th February 1912. The first Court then decided that the suit abated as against Than Singh, but proceeded with the case against the other defendants and decreed for plaintiffs.

The defendants appealed to the Divisional Judge, who dismissed the suit on the ground that Than Singh was an essential party, that the suit against him had abated and, therefore, failed against all defendants. The learned Divisional Judge in this respect followed the line of argument employed in the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chevis' order of 20th December 1911.

Thus it has been decided between the parties that Than Singh was an essential party to the suit, but appellant attempts to avoid this conclusion by pointing out that the preliminary decree is in existence against Than Singh and that the local Commissary had settled Than Singh and other persons' liability before Than Singh died. The preliminary decree, however, established no specific liability against Than Singh and the Commissary's conclusions have not any force till adopted by a Court.

But appellant further argues that he should be permitted to bring Than Singh's representatives on the record even at a late date, for he took action shortly after the suit was returned to the first Court from this Court.

Now no party can be allowed to reprobate and approbate the same thing, as it suits him. The plaintiffs objected to the impleading of Than Singh's representatives in this Court, but were anxious to implead them when the case returned to the first Court.

No doubt this Court was bound suo motu to notice that the application was time-barred, but there is on the record an objection by plaintiffs, dated 20th December 1911, to the impleading of Than Singh's heirs.

But it is urged that Than Singh died at a time when the suit could not be continued by reason of the presence of the record in this Court, yet if it be granted that this is correct, still I find that when the record was returned to the first Court, the plaintiffs were not ready with an application at the first hearing and when a fortnight later they did put in an application, they stated that they did so only in obedience to the Court's order. It should be needless to say that the matter was one in which the Court should have issued no orders or suggestions. The words employed in Order XXII, rule 9, are :—"prevented . . . . from continuing the suit", and I am inclined to agree with appellants' contention that the suit could not be continued by the plaintiffs-appellants whilst the defendants-respondents' appeal lay before the Chief Court, but on the other hand I find that the plaintiffs did not make an application on the earliest possible date after the first Court was again seized of the case, and when they did make an application, it was made reluctantly.

My conclusion is that appellants' delay was due to a careless mistake of law and there was no sufficient cause for the delay. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

MUNNA LAL PARRUCK AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

SARAT CHUNDER MUKERJI AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation—Mortgage—Preliminary mortgage decree—Application for sale of mortgaged property—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 88, 89—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 183.

Where a High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction passes a preliminary mortgage-decree under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, an application under section 89 of the Act for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property made after twelve years from the date of the preliminary decree is barred by Article 183 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, 1908.

Appeal from an appellate order of the High Court at Calcutta, dated the 20th July 1911 and reported in 11 Ind. Cas. 943, which affirmed an order made on the 13th of May 1910 by Mr. Justice Fletcher sitting on the original side of the said High Court.

FACTS.—The sole question for determination on the present appeal was whether an application made on the 3rd July 1909 to execute or enforce a decree made by the said High Court on the 16th December 1886, was or was not barred by the Indian Limitation Act.

On the 25th January 1886, Sarat Chunder Mukerji executed a mortgage in favour of Amlook Chand Parruck, the first respondent (now represented by the appellants), of his share in certain family property, including houses No. 30, Clive Street, Calcutta, Nos. 2 and 3, Bishoo Babu's Lane, Kidderpore, and the family dwelling-house at Kidderpore.

On the 10th of December 1886 the mortgagee instituted a suit on the said mortgage in the High Court at Calcutta (original side), and on the 16th December 1886 a decree was made by consent in the terms following :—

"It is ordered and decreed with the consent of the plaintiff by his Counsel and of the defendant in person that the defendant do at the end of six months from the date hereof that is, on the fifteenth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and eighty seven, on the middle floor of the Court House opposite the Registrar's room pay to the plaintiff the sum of rupees twenty-five thousand three hundred and eighty-two and eight annas with interest thereon at the rate of twelve percent. per annum from the date hereof until payment: And it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that upon payment as aforesaid the plaintiff do reconvey or re-transfer the properties, comprised in the mortgage in the plaint in this suit mentioned, free from incumbrances done by him or any persons claiming by, from or under him and do deliver up all deeds and writings in his custody or power relating thereto upon oath or solemn affirmation to the defendant or to whom he shall appoint: But in default of such payment as aforesaid it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that the properties comprised in the said mortgage be sold with the approbation of the Registrar of this Court to the best purchaser or purchasers that can be got for the same. provided the said Registrar shall consider that a sufficient sum has been offered and in order to such sale let the plaintiff produce before the said Registrar upon oath or solemn affirmation all deeds and writings in his custody or power relating to the said property: And it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that the money to arise by such sale be paid into Court to the end that the same may be duly applied in payment of the said sum of rupees twenty-five thousand three hundred and eighty-two and eight annas with interest thereon as aforesaid: And it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that if the money to arise by such sale shall not be sufficient for the payment in full of the said sum of rupees twenty-five thousand three hundred and eighty-two and eight annas with interest thereon as aforesaid, the defendant do pay to the plaintiff the amount of the deficiency, together with the plaintiff's costs of this suit to be taxed by the Taxing Officer of this Court under the heading (class 1, short causes.)"

On the 2nd May 1887 an ordinary application to execute the said decree was made, but the application was, however, not pressed and no further proceedings were taken till the 3rd July 1909, when the mortgagee made the application now in dispute for "liberty to proceed to sell pursuant to the decree made in this suit on the 16th day of December 1886 an undivided quarter share of the said defendant, Sarat Chunder Mukerji, of and in the premises No. 30, formerly No. 49, Clive Street, in the town of Calcutta and Nos. 2 and 3 of Bishoo Babu's Lane, Kidderpore, and the family house at Kidderpore" and prayed that "for the purpose of such sale all necessary directions may be given to the Registrar."

The application was heard by Mr. Justice Fletcher, who held that it was to enforce the decree, dated the 16th December 1886, and was barred by Article 180 of the Limitation Act 1877 as not being made within 12 years from the 15th June 1887. The material part of his judgment was as follows:—

"It is said this is an application under the Transfer of Property Act and that since it has been decided by this Court on certain appeals from Courts which are subordinate to it that there is no limitation within which an application for an order for sale may be made under that Act, the Court is bound to make an order for the sale of the property.

"But without in any way wishing to cast doubt on the authorities in this Court in support of that proposition, I have in the present case to decide what is the effect of the consent decree in this suit. Now it seems to me that the portion of the decree which orders the defendant to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 25,382-8-0 on the 15th June 1887 is the real and substantial portion of the decree, the rest of the decree being purely conditional on the defendant failing to obey the order to pay the amount on the 15th June 1887.

"What then is the real substance of the present application? It seems to me on the decree that it is merely an application to enforce the decree and that being so, it is barred by Article 180 of the Limitation Act 1877 as not being made within 12 years from the 15th June 1887.

"The argument of the learned Counsel for the plaintiff that the present application could be made at any time after the decree, even if it be more than 100 years, is an alarming one.

"Whatever may have been held in the cases cited by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff during his argument, I hold that the present application is merely one to enforce the decree made by this Court in its original jurisdiction and, therefore, is barred by limitation."

On the mortgagee's appeal the Court of Appeal (Jenkins, C. J., and Woodroffe, J.) affirmed the order of Mr. Justice Fletcher dismissing the application, and decided that the said application was also barred under the Limitation Act, 1908, Schedule I, Article 183. [For the full judgment see 11 Ind. Cas. 943.]

The appellants, who represent the mortgagee, then appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Jenkins, K. C. (with him Sir W. Garth), submitted that the application was not one to enforce a decree within the meaning of either Article 180, Schedule II, of the Limitation Act, 1877, or Article 183, Schedule 1, of the Limitation Act, 1908, because the decree of the 16th December 1886, being merely a preliminary mortgage decree, could not be enforced but required another supplemental decree, a decree absolute for the purpose of being executed. The application was, therefore, not barred. No period of limitation was provided for such applications either in the Limitation Act or the Code of Civil Procedure. Reference was made to the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 85, 86, 87, 88 and 89, Limitation Act 1877, Schedule II, Article 178, and Limitation Act, 1908, Schedule I, Article 181.

[MR. AMEER ALI referred to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, Order XXXIV, rule 5.]

[SIR JOHN EDGE remarked that the mortgagee's right under the decree of 1886 was extinguished by virtue of section 28 of the Limitation Act, 1877.]

[Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., for the Respondents, referred to Batuk Nath v. Musammat Munni Dei (1) and Chaudhri Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (2), where their Lordships of the Privy Council recently held that there was a period of limitation provided for such an application under the Limitation Act, 1877].

Counsel submitted that the case of Madhab Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (3) was in his favour, but said that in view of the cases cited against him he could not carry the argument any further.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and R. Macklin, for the Respondents, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—Their Lordships see no reason for interfering with the decisions of the Courts below, and they will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

THE LIQUIDATORS OF THE MARWAR BANK, LTD., IN LIQUIDATION—DEFENDANTS—PETITIONERS

versus

PANNA LAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 215—Winding-up of Company—Proceedings in Court, stay of—Discretion of Court.

In the case of a compulsory liquidation the creditor is debarred from proceeding by way of action, unless he can show special grounds for granting him leave to do so.

In the case of a voluntary liquidation the onus is on the Liquidator to show that an order should be made staying an action brought against the Company for prima facie the ordinary tribunal is the proper one to decide upon a claim against the Company. The proceedings may be stayed when sufficient ground is shown to do so, e g., when existence of the liability is substantially admitted and the dispute is only as to what is the exact amount due.

The plaintiff sued the Company for refund of a certain sum of money alleged to have been paid on some shares, which the plaintiff alleged were allotted to him subject to a condition The Company went into voluntary liquidation and the Liquidators moved the Chief Court for an order under section 215 of the Companies Act, 1913, to stay proceedings in the suit filed against the Company. The claim was denied in toto by the Liquidators.

Held, that no sufficient ground was shown for passing the order prayed for Petition, under section 215, Indian Companies Act of 1913, for stay of proceedings in the case of Panna Lal v The Marwar Bank in Liquidation, pending in the Court of the Munsif, first Class, Ambala.

Mehta Bahadur Chand, for the Petitioners,

Mr. Santanam, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The Liquidators of the Marwar Bank, Limited, which is being wound up voluntarily, have applied to this Court under section 215 of the Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913, to pass an order for the staying of an action brought against the Company by the respondent, Lala Panna Lal, and now pending in the Court of a Munsif at Ambala. It appears that the action was brought on the 16th of March 1914 for the recovery of Rs 510, the amount paid by the respondent on 51 shares which, he alleged, were allotted to him subject to a condition. He asserted that in consequence of the failure of the Company to perform the condition, the contract to take shares did not come into existence and that he was, therefore, entitled to obtain re-payment of the money already paid by him. On the 1st of April 1914, the Company filed its written statement in answer to the claim, and on the 12th of May the Court struck the issues which arose on the pleadings of the parties. On the 20th of June, the Company went into voluntary liquidation, and on the 25th June, the Liquidators, who are petitioners before me, were impleaded as defendants in the case. Thereafter, several dates were given for producing evidence, but on account of the non-attendance of witnesses, it could not be recorded. It was on the 12th of October 1914 that the present application was made to this Court and the question, which I have to determine, is whether having regard to the facts stated above and to the law bearing on the subject I should accede to the prayer of the petitioners.

There is no doubt that section 215 of the Act empowers the Court to stay an action pending against a Company in voluntary liquidation, if the Court is satisfied that the required exercise of the power will be just and beneficial. It will be observed from a comparsion of the provisions of that section with those of section 171 that, while in the case of a winding-up by the Court, no suit or other legal proceeding can be proceeded with or commenced after the winding-up order except by leave of the Court, no such leave is necessary in the case of a voluntary liquidation and that it is for the Liquidator to make out a case for staying an action brought against the Company. In the first case, the stay of an action or proceeding is the rule and its continuance is an exception. In the second case, it is just the other way. The Court has got a discretion to make an order for the staying of suit or proceeding, but the discretion can only be exercised upon special ground being shown by the Liquidator for the exercise thereof. The law draws a clear distinction in this respect between a winding-up by the Court and a voluntary winding-up, and it seems to me that the distinction is often overlooked. "Whereas in the case of a compulsory liquidation," observed Collins, M. R., in Currie v. Consolidated Kent Collieries Corporation, Limited (1), "the creditor is debarred from proceeding by way of action, unless he can show special grounds for granting him leave to do so, in the case of a voluntary liquidation the onus appears to be thrown on the Liquidator of showing that an order should be made staying an action brought against the Company. One looks for some basis in principle for this distinction being made, and it would seem that it must have been because the Legislature thought that prima, facie in the case of a voluntary liquidation the ordinary Tribunal was the proper one to decide upon a claim against the Company. The Court had, no doubt, stayed the action in cases where the Liquidator could show some sufficient reason for its not being decided in the ordinary way. Where, for instance, the existence of a debt or liability was substantially admitted, though there might be some question of the exact amount due, the ordinary practice seems to have been that, liability not being really contested, but only the exact amount due, the matter was treated as one which might properly, and ought to, be determined in the liquidation. But that practice does not appear to apply to a case like the present, where there is real dispute as to the existence of any liability. It seems to me that the learned Judge at Chambers was right. We have not been referred to any decision which establishes that, in the case of a voluntary liquidation, the burden is, in all cases, thrown on the creditor of showing special grounds why his action should not be stayed and the presumption appears to be prima facie in his favour."

Now what are the circumstances of the present case? The Liquidators dispute the claim of the respondent in toto and it is manifest that if I accede to the application the respondent is bound to be settled on the list of the contributories and he would then move this Court to determine the question (and this is the real bone of contention between the parties) of his liability to be placed on that list. In that event, the whole matter would be gone into by this Court and there would really be, in substance though not inform, a trial of an action. Can it be said that any good would accrue by staying the action? It is further observable that the suit had been instituted more than three months before the Company went into liquidation, and that certain proceedings had in the meanwhile been taken, and that even after the commencement of the winding-up, this Court was not promptly moved to exercise its power of staying the suit.

For the aforesaid reasons, I have no hesitation in holding that the petitioners have absolutely failed to make out a case for the exercise of my discretion. Accordingly I reject the application with costs.

Application rejected.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Arts. 144, 44, 91—Sale by one member of joint Hindu family—Suit to set aside sale and for possession—Limitation

A suit to set aside a sale executed by one member of a joint Hindu family, and for possession of the property is governed by Article 144 of the Limitation Act and not by Article 44 or 91.

Shama Chandra Dajadar v. Gadadhar Mandal, 9 Ind. Cas. 877; 13 C. L. J. 277, referred to.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Budaun confirming that of the Munsif, Sahaswan.

Mr. Benode Behari, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. C. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondents to set aside a sale, made by their brother Sardar Singh and their mother Kaunsilia, of a 16, biswansi 13 kachwansi 5 nanwansi-share in a village and for possession of the property.

The share in question is part of a 1 biswa 19 biswansi 15 kachwansi-4 tanwansi 2 nanwansi share in the village, which was the joint property of the three brothers and their father, who died many years ago when all three brothers were minors. During their minority their mother Kaunsilia mortgaged a 1 biswa 15 biswansi 13 kachwansi share to one Raghunath Singh and placed him in possession. In 1895 after the eldest brother Sardar Singh had attained full age, he and his mother sold the share now in suit to the aforesaid Raghunath and a man named Subadar Singh. The mortgage-money was paid off out of the usufruct by June 1909, and the two purchasers then took possession as such of the share which they had purchased.

The present suit was instituted in August 1912. The plaintiffs-respondents say that they did not get to know of the sale till August 1911, and they suggest that the purchasers, who are represented in this suit by the appellant Kalyan and another, fraudulently concealed the fact of the sale from them.

It has been found by both Courts below that no legal necessity for the sale has been established by the purchasers' representatives. The only question for decision is whether the Courts below were right in holding that the suit was brought within time. It has been found, and it is now admitted, that both the plaintiffs-respondents attained majority more than three years before the suit. If, as contended by the appellant, Article 44 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act applies, then the suit is plainly barred by limitation unless the case is saved by section 18 of the Act. Both Courts below have held that the suit is governed, not by Article 44, but by Article 144 and is within time, because the possession of the purchasers did not become adverse till 1909, when the mortgage was cleared off. The plaintiffs-respondents have treated the mortgage as binding upon them as they were entitled to do [see Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali(1)] and, therefore, possession of the purchasers did not become adverse to them till the mortgage was cleared off. If Article 144 applies the suit is well within time.

I am unable to accept the contention that Article 44 applies to this suit. When the sale was made, Musammat Kaunsilia was not guardian of the property of the plaintiffs-respondents [see Ghariballah v. Khalak Singh (2)]. The property was part of the joint family property of the plaintiffs and their brother, Sardar Singh. Musammat Kaunsilia must, I think, be disregarded altogether. She had no right whatever to deal with the property of the family after Sardar Singh came of age. Regarded as a sale by her alone, the sale was void altogether and Article 44 does not apply to such a case [see Sham Chandra Dafadar v. Gadadhar Mandal (3)]. The sale should, I think, be regarded as having been made by Sardar Singh and even if it be assumed that he was karta of the family, he was not guardian of the property of his brother within the meaning of Article 44. This Article has never been applied to a suit to set aside a sale by a karta of joint family property. Nor, as far as I am aware, has Article 91 ever been applied to such a case as this. It appears to me that the relevant Article is 144, that the prayer in the plaint that the sale may be set aside is probably superfluous and that the suit is well within time. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 13 (3), scope of—"Contract to the contrary" in s. 13, cl. (3), meaning of—Interpretation of Statute—Act, whether retrospective—Improvement by tenant—Payment of higher rent, when enforced—Contract before Act, effect of—Sadelwar and Madiri Kasuvu, whether illegal cess.

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—The words 'contract to the contrary" in section 13, clause (3), of the Madras Estates Land Act refer only to contracts made after the passing of the Act and the section has no retrospective operation in cases where rent claimed was payable under a contract which would have been legally enforceable under the Rent Recovery Act or any other law in force at the time of the passing of the Estates Land Act.

Per Kumaraswami Sastri and Napier, JJ.—Section 13, clause (3), of the Madras Estates Land Act does not enable a tenant to claim exemption from liability to pay a higher rate of rent for crops raised with the help of improvements made at his sole expense, where the improvements had been effected before the Act came into force and where there had been a contract entered into between him and the landlord before the passing of the Act for the payment of such enhanced rent.

An Act is always prospective in its operation, and to make it retrospective stronger words than those found in section 13, clause (3), of the Estates Land Act are necessary.

Sadasiva Aiyar, J., (dissenting).—Clauses (1) and (2) of section 13 of Act I of 1908 merely declare the existing law and do not create new rights, and there is no reason to hold that section 13, clause (3), is intended to apply only to prospective improvements made by the tenant.

A landlord is not entitled to increase the annual assessment by the addition of a second crop assessment.

Sadelwar and Madiri Kanva are part of rent and not illegal cesses.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ.—In the case where the payment of higher rate of rent for crops raised with improvements effected by tenants has gone on for over 60 years, consideration for agreement to pay at the higher rate should be presumed.

These second appeals and the memoranda of objections in all except in S. A. No. 1067 of 1913 coming on for hearing and having stood over for consideration, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The appellant is the minor Rajah of Karvetnagar. He was the defendant in the twenty suits out of which these twenty, second appeals have arisen. The suits were brought under section 55 of the Madras Estates Land Act by several tenants in the estate, who are the plaintiffs in the suits, for obtaining pattahs for Fasli 1321. The Revenue Divisional Officer of Chandragiri Division, in whose Court the suits were brought, passed a decree directing the defendant to grant pattahs containing certain terms which that officer found to be proper and legal. The learned District Judge on appeal modified the decrees of the Court of first instance in one important respect and confirmed the decrees in other respects. In nineteen of the twenty-second appeals before us, the tenants (the plaintiffs) have filed memoranda of objections as regards the points decided against them. In the appeals by the minor Rajah the questions for decision are:—

(a) Whether the Appellate Court's finding that the wells on the lands of the tenants were sunk at their own expense is correct?

(b) Whether the zemindar is entitled to charge rent on dry lands, on which garden crops are raised with the aid of the water in such wells, at the higher rate claimable for lands classed as wet, that is, a rate higher than is charged per gunta on dry lands cultivated with dry crops without the aid of well water.

As regards the question (a), I do not see sufficient reason not to accept the concurrent findings of the lower Courts that the wells were excavated at the sole expense of the tenants. Though the direct evidence is not very satisfactory, the lower Courts were justified in finding the wells to have been dug at the tenants' sole expense, having regard to all the circumstances and especially seeing that the defendant in his written statement did not deny that the plaintiffs dug the wells but merely said that it was not at their sole expense that the wells were dug.

The answer to question (b) depends upon the answers made to the following subsidiary questions:—

(*b*1) Whether under the law before the Estates Land Act came into force the condition in the pattah to pay the higher wet assessment for garden crops raised on dry lands with the aid of the tenants' well water was a lawfully enforceable term?

(*b*2) Whether after the enactment of section 13, clause (3), of the Estates Land Act such a term in the pattah would be valid?

(*b*3) Whether section 13, clause (3), applies to a case where the improvement at his sole expense, relied on by the tenant, was effected before the Madras Estates Land Act came into force.

In Arumugam Chetti v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (1), Mr. Justice Subrahmanya Aiyar held that a custom to pay enhanced rent for lands improved by the improvements effected by a tenant at his own cost is illegal as opposed to the provisions of the Rent Recovery Act, that it made no difference whether the tenant constructed the well (at his own cost) prior to or after the passing of the Act of 1865, that in either case, a higher rent cannot be claimed by the landlord and that payment for a number of years of the enhanced rent may be evidence of an agreement to pay at that rate but that it will not be binding as a contract unless supported by consideration. The learned Judge left open the question whether if payments at the higher rate had continued to be made for a great many years, so as to make it unfair to the landlord, on account of such lapse of time, to be compelled to prove the existence of some consideration when the payment commenced, whether, under those circumstances, the Court should not presume a lawful origin for the payment at the higher rate, on the analogy of the lost grant principle availed of to support long possession and enjoyment. In that particular case in Arumugam Chetti v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (1), the learned Judge found that in that suit and the connected suits, the payment at the higher rate had begun only from between 1 and 18 years before the date of the suits and that hence the passing of consideration for the agreement to pay at the higher rate cannot be presumed.

In the case now before us, the payments at the higher rate had gone on from about 1846 for more than 60 years and I think that consideration for the agreement to pay at the higher rate can be presumed in these cases. If so, under clause (1), section 11, of the Rent Recovery Act of 1865, all contracts for rent between the landlord and the tenant should be enforced and I would answer the question (*b*1) in the affirmative.

(1) 28 M. 444; 15 M. L. J. 292.

As regards the question (*b*2), section 13, clause (3), of the Estates Land Act begins with the words "Notwithstanding any usage or contract to the contrary", and hence under the new law even a contract (that is, an agreement supported by consideration) to pay at the higher rate for lands improved at the sole expense of the tenants cannot avail the landlord.

We have lastly the question (*b*3), whether the tenant can claim the greater protection given by the Estates Land Act in cases where the improvements had been effected before the passing of the Act.

I am free to admit that I have found it very difficult to arrive at a satisfactory answer to this last question. Section 13 of the Madras Estates Land Act contains three clauses. Under the first clause, neither the ryot nor the landlord can prevent the other party from making an improvement to the holding. Under the second clause, the ryot has ordinarily the prior right to make the improvement, but the landlord has the prior right if the improvement affects not only the holding of the ryot who wishes to make it, but also the holding of another ryot. Then the third clause says: "a ryot shall not, by reason of making an improvement at his sole expense, become liable to pay a higher rate of rent on account of any increase of production as a consequence of such improvement." Under the first two clauses, it may be fairly argued that the Legislature has enacted those provisions in respect of improvements contemplated to be made by the landholder or the ryot after the passing of the Act, as it is almost useless for the Legislature to legislate about their respective rights to make the improvements which had already been made. Pursuing the same argument, it might be contended that the third clause about the ryot not being liable to pay a higher rate of rent on account of improvements effected at his sole expense also contemplates the raising of rent in future in respect of improvements to be made in future. After the best consideration which I was able to give, however, to these three clauses, I have come to the conclusion that the third clause is intended to give a right to the tenant to claim exemption from payment of enhanced rent from the date the Act came into force, even in cases where the improvements had been effected by him before the Act came into force. Clauses (1) and (2) of section 13, in my opinion, merely declared the law which existed even prior to the passing of this Act. Sir S. Subrahmanya Aiyar, J., says in Arumugam Chetti v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (1): "It is impossible to understand why the landlord's permission for the sinking of the well was necessary. And even supposing that a custom supporting the averment can be shown, such custom must be held to be bad, if not for its unreasonableness, at least on account of its utter inconsistency with the policy of the proviso to section 11 of the Rent Recovery Act, which expressly admits the tenant's unqualified right to make improvements free from any liability to make any payment to the landholder in respect of the benefit accruing therefrom.....

.....It is scarcely necessary to add that the tenant's right to relinquish the whole or any part of his holding ..in no way detracts from the tenant's right to make such an improvement as the sinking of a well during the subsistence of the tenancy." If then clauses (1) and (2) do not create new rights as regards the making of improvements, it is unnecessary to hold that clause (3) contemplates only the effect of future improvements on the right of the tenant to claim exemption from enhancement of rent. If Sir S. Subrahmanya Aiyar's view in Arumugam Chetti v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (1), that whether the wells were constructed before or after the passing of the Act VIII of 1865, no additional rent can be claimed unless there was a contract, is correct law, it seems to me that clause (3) of section 13 was intended only to further benefit the tenant, that is, further than even Sir S. Subrahmanya Aiyar's dictum, by taking away the restriction imposed by the old Rent Recovery Act that if there was a contract to pay the higher rate (as opposed to an agreement without consideration), the tenant ought to pay the higher rate. In other words, it seems to me that the opening words of section 13, clause (3), "Notwithstanding any contract or usage to the contrary," were specifically intended to favour the tenant even further than the old law and not to take away the right already vested in him, under Sir S. Subrahmanya Aiyar's decision, to claim exemption whether the improvements were made before or after the passing of the Act VIII of 1865, that is, it was not intended to take away his right to claim exemption from enhancement in some cases on the mere ground that the improvements had been effected before the Estates Land Act. In Maharajah of Venkatagiri v. Sheik Mohadeen Sahib (2), it was held that the tenant was not liable to pay enhanced rent when he had improved his holding by digging a well at his own cost. It appears from the facts of that case that the wells were dug in that case and the connected cases by the tenants or their ancestors before the Estates Land Act came into force. That decision, however, is not a direct authority on the question whether section 13, clause (3), affected the improvements made before the Act came into force, and it can only be said that the appellant's learned Vakil in that case did not put forward any argument that section 13, clause (3), would not affect the landlord's right to enhance where improvements had been made before the Act came into force.

It is, no doubt, hard upon the landlord that where he had been obtaining the enhanced rent on account of a contract from long before the Act came into force, it should be held that notwithstanding that contract he should lose his right to the enhanced rent owing to the passing of the Act. But the Estates Land Act does favour the tenant, notwithstanding "contracts to the contrary" and whether the contracts were made before the passing of the Act or after it in numerous other respects (see section 187, clauses (1) (a) to (g), and section 188). When rights under contracts entered into before the passing of the Act are not intended to be taken away but only rights under contracts made after the passing of the Act, apt words are used to so conserve the rights created under prior contracts (see section 12). I am, therefore, of opinion that after the passing of the Act the landlord cannot claim enhanced rent on account of the enhanced outturn of the crops due to the improvements made by the ryot, whether the improvements were made before or after the passing of the Act and whether or not there was a contract to the contrary and whether such contract was made before or after the passing of the Act.

In the result, I would dismiss the appeals preferred by the landlord, but under the circumstances without costs.

Coming to the memoranda of objections by the tenants, the questions raised by them are:

(a) that the lower Appellate Court ought to have allowed only the lowest manavari dry rates, that is, Rs. 15-12-0 per 100 guntas, and not the higher dry rate of Rs. 26-4-0 per 100 guntas,

(b) that the District Judge erred in holding that the landholder was entitled to charge for a second crop raised with the aid of improvements by the ryot,

(c) that the District Judge ought to have held that sadelwar and madiri kasuvu are illegal cesses not payable by the ryot.

As regards contention (a), as the landholder is entitled to charge for the best dry crops that can be grown on a dry land there is no force in the contention.

As regards contention (b), I would follow the decision in Maharaja of Venkatagiri v. Sheik Mohadeen Sahib (2) and hold that the landlord is not entitled to increase the annual assessment by the addition of a second dry crop assessment.

On the contention (c), I am prepared to follow the decision in Second Appeal No. 57 of 1896 and to hold that sadelwar and madiri kasuvu form part of the rent of the lands and are not additional illegal cesses. In the result, the lower Court's decrees will be modified by disallowing the direction to enter second crop assessments in the pattahs. There will be no order as to costs in these memoranda of objections.

NAPIER, J.—I regret that I am unable to concur in the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother. I accept with some hesitation the finding that the wells were excavated at the sole expense of the tenants, though it is a little difficult to see on what evidence this finding is arrived at: and I agree with him in applying the decision in Arumugam Chetti v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (1) to the facts of this case that consideration, for the agreement to pay a higher rate, should be presumed in the circumstances of this case. I differ from him, however, on the construction of clause (3) of section 13 of the Estates Land Act. I cannot apply the words "shall not, by reason of making an improvement . . . . . become liable" to anything but improvements after the Act, in view of the fact that the rest of the section obviously applies to improvements after the Act. It is clear that the rate of rent was lawfully payable at the date of this Act, and I cannot hold that this clause was intended to tear up contracts lawfully made and give a claim for a reduction by reason of words forbidding the imposition of a higher rate. In my opinion, section 28 applies and the rent payable at the time being lawfully payable, it should be presumed to be fair and equitable until the contrary is proved. I would, therefore, allow these appeals.

BY THE COURT:—Under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we refer to a third Judge for decision the question of law on which we differ, namely, whether section 13, clause (3), of the Estates Land Act enables the tenant to claim exemption from liability to pay a higher rate of rent for crops raised with the help of improvements made at the tenant's sole expense, where the improvements had been effected before the Act came into force and where there had been a contract entered into between the landlord and the tenant before the passing of the Act for the payment of such enhanced rent.

These second appeals and the memoranda of objections coming on for hearing under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure, before Kumaraswami Sastri, J., his lordship expressed the following OPINION.—The question for decision is whether section 13, clause (3), of the Estates Land Act enables the tenant to claim exemption from liability to pay a higher rate of rent for crops raised with the help of improvements made at the tenant's sole expense, where the improvements had been effected before the Act came into force and where there had been a contract entered into between the landlord and the tenant before the passing of the Act for the payment of such enhanced rent.

The facts found by the learned Judges are:—

(1) that the rent claimed by the semin-

dar has been paid by the tenants for over 60 years,

(2) that there was a valid contract to pay the rent which was legally enforceable under the provisions of the Rent Recovery Act,

(3) that the improvements in respect of which the enhanced rent had been paid ever since 1846 were effected by the tenants.

Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar was of opinion that in spite of these facts the landlord was not entitled to sue for the rent at the rate paid ever since 1846, as section 13, clause (3), of the Estates Land Act was retrospective and prevented the landlord from claiming higher rent in consequence of improvements effected by the tenants, even though such improvements have been effected before the passing of the Act and the rent claimed was legally recoverable under the Rent Recovery Act. Mr. Justice Napier took the opposite view and held that the section only applied to improvements made after the passing of the Act.

The question resolves itself into whether section 13, clause (3), has retrospective operation. There is nothing in the wording of the section to indicate that the Legislature intended it to be retrospective. Clause (3) runs as follows:—"Notwithstanding any usage or contract to the contrary, a ryot shall not by reason of making an improvement at his sole expense become liable to pay a higher rate of rent on account of any increase of production or of any change in the nature of the crop raised as a consequence of such improvement."

It would require very strong grounds for holding that the Legislature intended to disturb vested rights which landlords had under valid and enforceable contracts. It is no doubt true that the Madras Estates Land Act was intended in a large measure to benefit tenants, but that is no ground for construing the Act on the hypothesis that in every case tenants were to have all the rights and landlords were only to be subject to all the liabilities incident to the ownership and possession of property.

The principles guiding the interpretation of a Statute, where retrospective effect is sought to be given to provisions so as to defeat vested rights, have been clearly laid down in several decisions. In Reid v. Reid (3), Bowen, L. J., observed as follows: "The particular rule of construction which has been referred to, but which is valuable only when the words of an Act of Parliament are not plain, is embodied in the well-known trite maxim omnis nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet non praeteritis, that is, that except in special cases the new law ought to be construed so as to interfere as little as possible with vested rights. It seems to me that even in construing an Act which is to a certain extent retrospective, and in construing a section which is to a certain extent retrospective, we ought nevertheless to bear in mind that maxim as applicable whenever we reach the line at which the words of the section cease to be plain. That is a necessary and logical corollary of the general proposition that you ought not to give a larger retrospective power to a section, even in an Act which is to some extent intended to be retrospective, than you can plainly see the Legislature meant." The same rule has been expressed by Lindley, L. J., in Lauri v. Renad (4), where he observes as follows:—"It is a fundamental rule of English Law that no Statute shall be construed so as to have a retrospective operation, unless its language is such as plainly to require such a construction; and the same rule involves another and subordinate rule to the effect that a Statute is not to be construed so as to have a greater retrospective operation than its language renders necessary." The same view was taken by him in Muhammad Abdussamad v. Qurban Hussain (5), where their Lordships of the Privy Council held that "it was not in accordance with sound principles of interpreting Statutes to give them a retrospective effect."

In Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Aiyar (6), it was held that the Estates Land Act had no retrospective operation so as to affect the period of limitation in respect of contracts falling under Article 116 of the Limitation Act.

(5) 31 I. A. 30; 6 Bom. L. R. 238; 8 C. W. N. 201; 26 A. 119 (P. C.).

(6) 18 Ind. Cas. 64; 24 M. L. J. 54; (1913) M. W. N. 303.

The result of the decisions has been well summarised by Craies in his work, 'Statute Law,' where he observes (page 322*): "And perhaps no rule of construction is more firmly established than this—that a retrospective operation is not to be given to a Statute so as to impair an existing right or obligation otherwise than as regards matter of procedure, unless that effect cannot be avoided without doing violence to the language of the enactment. If the enactment is expressed in language which is fairly capable of either interpretation, it ought to be construed as prospective only." As observed by Maxwell, the rules laid down in Lauri v. Renad (4), Reid v. Reid (3) and West v. Gwynne (7) have special operation "where the enactment would prejudicially affect vested rights or the legal character of past transactions or impair contracts."

Section 6, clause (b), of the General Clauses Act and section 8, clause (d), of Madras Act I of 1891 also provide that the repeal of an Act shall not affect any rights accrued under the enactment repealed.

Applying these well-known rules to the construction of section 13 of the Estates Land Act, it seems to me that a retrospective operation cannot be given to clause (3) of the section. Clauses (1) and (2) to the section can only refer to improvements to be effected in future and if the Legislature intended clause 3 to be retrospective, it would have given some indication of such intention. On the contrary the use of the words "shall not by reason of making an improvement become liable" indicate that only future improvements are intended.

It appears from other sections of the Act that where the Legislature intended any provision to be retrospective, it used words "whether before or after the commencement (or passing) of this Act." A reference to sections 8, 37, 187 and 188 makes this clear.

So far as rent is concerned section 28 provides that in all proceedings under the Act, the rent or rate of rent for the time being lawfully payable by the ryot shall be presumed to be fair and equitable until the contrary is proved. Under the law, as it stood prior to the passing of the Estates Land Act, a contract to pay increased rent even though improvements were made by the tenant was legally enforceable. It was, therefore, rent "lawfully payable by the ryot" when the Estates Land Act was passed and was to be presumed to be fair and equitable. It is difficult to see under what canons of interpretation it can be held that section 13, clause (3), should be construed as taking away such a right. It is argued by the respondent's Advocate that the policy of the law has always been to give to the tenant the benefit of improvements made by him. This may be so, but the law as it stood prior to the passing of the Estates Land Act did not prevent additional rent being legally recoverable in case where it was payable under a contract.

I am of opinion that the words 'contract to the contrary' refer only to contracts made after the passing of the Act and that section 13, clause (3), has no retrospective operation in cases where rent claimed was payable under a contract which would have been legally enforceable under the Rent Recovery Act or any other law in force at the time of the passing of the Estates Land Act.

Appeal allowed.

Res judicata—Suit for partition—Compromise—Agreement not carried out—Second suit for partition, if barred—Continuing right

Where a suit for partition is dismissed upon a compromise whereby the defendants promise to sell their entire interest in the property for consideration to the plaintiff, a second suit for partition is not barred by res judicata if the agreement is not carried out.

The right to bring a suit for partition, unlike other suits, is a continuing right incidental to the ownership of joint property.

First appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Dehra Dun.

Dr. S. C. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for partition of a house. The plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to three-fourths of the house whilst the defendants were entitled to one-fourth. The Court below, without going into the merits of the case, held that the suit is not maintainable, upon the ground that there was a previous suit between the plaintiff and the predecessor-in-title of the defendants for partition of this very house which was dismissed on the 11th of November 1905, and the plaintiff did not obtain permission to bring a fresh suit. It appears that when the previous suit was instituted, the predecessor-in-title of the defendants agreed to execute a sale-deed to the plaintiff of all his rights in the house for the sum of Rs. 5,750. It is admitted on both sides that this agreement was never carried out. The plaintiff says in his plaint that after repeated attempts to get the sale-deed executed the predecessor-in-title of the defendants refused to execute the sale. We think the decision of the Court below was wrong. As soon as the defendants or their predecessor-in-title failed to carry out the compromise, the parties were relegated to their rights as they existed prior to the compromise. The right to bring a suit for partition, unlike other suits, is a continuing right incidental to the ownership of joint property. It may be that at one time the desire for partition may cease, circumstances may again occur which make it desirable or necessary that partition should take place. Reliance has been placed by the respondents on the case of Gulkandi Lal v. Manni Lal (1), where the facts were very similar to the facts of the present case. We find that the question involved had been previously decided in the case of Nasratullah v. Mujibullah (2). This case was followed in the case of Bisheshar Das v. Ram Prasad (3), one of the learned Judges being the same as had decided the case of Gulkandi Lal v. Mannu Lal (1). There is a Calcutta ruling to the same effect, viz., Madan Mohan Mondul v. Baikunta Nath Mondul (4).

We may observe that no question of title was determined in the previous litigation and so no question of res judicata arises.

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court with directions to re-admit it under the original number on the file, and proceed to hear and determine the same according to law. The appellant will have his costs of this appeal. Other costs will be costs in the cause.

Appeal decreed, Case remanded.

Hindu Law—Alienation by uncle and mother of a minor acting as his guardian—Minor and his uncle members of an undivided Hindu family—Mother not the legal guardian—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 44, if applicable.

Where a minor and his uncle were members of an undivided Hindu family and certain joint family property was sold by the uncle and the mother of the minor, who was put forward as his guardian:

Held, that, as the undivided paternal uncle was the guardian in law of the minor and not the mother, a suit to set aside the sale would not fall under Article 44 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore in Appeal Suit No. 164 of 1911, preferred against the preliminary decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Pattukota, in Original Suit No. 17 of 1910.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Doraiswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is not disputed that the plaintiff's vendor and his uncle were members of an undivided family at the date of the alienation in plaintiff's favour. Under Hindu Law the undivided paternal uncle will be the guardian of his minor nephew. The sale-deeds were executed by the uncle and by the mother of the minor who was put forward as his guardian, and the question is whether a suit to set aside the sale falls under Article 44 of the first Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. If the mother was not in law the guardian, it is difficult to see how Article 44, which refers to suits to set-aside sales by guardians, could have any application. All the cases referred to by the appellant are cases where the mother was admittedly the guardian.

It is argued that the recital in the sale-deeds must be taken to have severed the status and that consequently the mother must be deemed to have been the guardian. This point was not raised in the lower Courts and we do not think that a mere perusal of the sale-deeds would enable us to decide that the minor and his uncle were divided when the sale deeds were signed.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

B obtained a decree against S in execution of which he attached S's one-sixth share in a house. S meanwhile sued B and others for partition of the house and obtained a decree on the condition to pay Rs. 237 into Court. S did not pay the money and the decree remained unexecuted. B brought to sale and purchased the specific share allotted to S in the partition suit. B paid Rs. 237 into Court and obtained possession. R sued for declaration of her right and that B was not entitled to possession of the house by virtue of his purchase:

Held, that B was not entitled to separate possession of any specific portion of the house by virtue only of his purchase at the execution-sale, as what passed to him was the right, title and interest of S in an undivided one-sixth share.

Second appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur.

Mr. S. C. Choudhri, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first respondent obtained in a Munsif's Court a decree against the second respondent in execution of which, some time before the end of March 1908, he attached the second respondent's one-sixth share in a house. In September 1908 while the share was under attachment, she brought a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court against the appellant and others for partition and separate possession of her share, and in March 1909 she obtained a decree which was subject to a condition that she should pay Rs. 237 into Court. She has never paid in the money and consequently the decree has not been executed. In July 1911 the first respondent brought to sale in execution of his decree and purchased himself the specific share allotted to the second respondent by the decree in the partition suit. In February 1912 he paid Rs. 237 into the Court of the Subordinate Judge and immediately afterwards he applied to the Munsif for delivery of possession of the specific share purchased by him. The appellant objected but her objection was disallowed, and she then brought the present suit claiming a declaration that she is owner and in possession of the house and that the first respondent is not entitled to obtain possession of the house by virtue of his purchase at the execution-sale. The first Court dismissed the suit on a ground that is clearly untenable. On appeal the District Judge confirmed the dismissal of the suit, upon the ground that although the second respondent was not entitled to a specific share in the house till she paid the sum of Rs. 237 into Court, and therefore no specific share passed to the first respondent at the execution-sale, yet the latter must have acquired the right, title and interest of Musammat Sunder and was entitled to stand in her shoes, and having paid the required sum into Court before execution of the decree became time-barred was entitled to execute the decree obtained by her.

ROSHAN LAL v. MOOL CHAND.

The appellant is obviously not entitled to the relief claimed in the plaint, for at the date of the suit she certainly was not the sole owner of the house and the first respondent had never attempted to get possession of the whole house, but the facts are all before us and we may properly give her such relief as she may be entitled to. It appears to us that what passed to the first respondent at the execution-sale was the right, title and interest of Musammat Sunder to and in an undivided one-sixth share, even though it may have been wrongly described as a specific or separate share in the house, and the first respondent was entitled to go to the Munsif and get himself placed in possession of the undivided share. It is not for us to decide whether before or after obtaining possession of the share in this way the first respondent was or is entitled to go to the Court of the Subordinate Judge and execute the decree obtained by Musammat Sunder. That is a matter for the Subordinate Judge to decide. It is quite clear that the first respondent was not, by virtue only of his purchase, entitled to be placed by the Munsif in separate possession of that portion of the house which would have passed into the possession of Musammat Sunder if she had executed her decree, and we think that the appellant was and is entitled to a declaration that the first respondent is not entitled to separate possession of any specific portion of the house by virtue only of his purchase at the execution-sale. We allow the appeal and make a declaration to this effect. The parties will pay their own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 42, 52—Declaration—Injunction—Mortgagor and mortgagee, right and liability of—Mortgagor, right of, to enhance rent of tenant—Reduction of mortgage-debt—Suit for declaration and injunction, maintainability of.

H usufructuarily mortgaged certain shops to R. The tenants of the shops paid Rs. 30-8 per mensem as rent, which the mortgagee had to realise in lieu of interest. The mortgage-deed provided that in the event of the tenants paying less amount, the mortgagor would make good the deficiency, and in the case of enhancement he would take the excess. The mortgagor served a notice on two of the tenants to vacate the shops in their occupation and to the mortgagee to compel them to do so, on the ground that there was a man who was willing to pay Rs. 4-12 in excess of what was being paid by them. Both the tenants and the mortgagee failed to comply with the requisition. The mortgagor then sued both the tenants and the mortgagee for (1) an injunction to direct the mortgagee to enhance the rent payable by the tenants to the extent of Rs. 4-12 per mensem and (2) a declaration that in the event of his failing to do so the mortgagor would be entitled to have the excess credited in reduction of the mortgage-debt.

Held, that the suit as brought was not maintainable as there was no allegation that over a specified period of time the mortgagee had persistently and without reasonable cause been letting the shops for less than their fair letting value.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge of Aligarh.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. C. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from an order of remand passed under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The suit was one by mortgagors against mortgagees, and for the determination of the question in issue before us it is necessary to consider carefully both the terms of the mortgage-deed and the frame of the suit. The mortgage was one of four shops, and in terms it purported to be a usufructuary mortgage in the full sense of the word, with delivery of possession. There were, however, some curious provisions, not wholly consistent with the ordinary status of a mortgagee in possession. Not only were the mortgagors liable for repairs, but there was a special stipulation with regard to the letting of the shops. The recital in the deed was that the four shops were let for a sum of Rs. 30-8 per mensem, and that the mortgagees were entitled to receive this as interest on their money. It is provided further that, in the event of the shops letting for less than this amount, the mortgagors are to make good the difference. Then comes a further provision that the right to grant abatement of rent, or to enhance the rent, is reserved to the mortgagors, and that if the mortgagors can succeed in letting the shops so as to bring in a larger sum than Rs. 30-8 per mensem, the mortgagors are to receive the amount of such enhancement month by month.

The suit as brought was against two sets of defendants, the first set being the mortgagees and the second set being tenants occupying two of the shops. With regard to the other two shops not occupied by the defendants second party, nothing is said in the plaint. As regards these two particular shops, the plaintiffs allege that they are prepared to put in tenants who will pay a rent of Rs. 4-12 per mensem in excess of that at present being paid by the defendants second party. It is on that ground that the plaintiffs had served notices calling on the defendants second party to vacate the shops and on the defendants first party to compel them to do so; but both sets of defendants had refused to act on these notices. The relief sought is (1) an injunction to direct the defendants first party to enhance the rent payable by defendants second party to the extent of Rs. 4-12 per mensem; and (2) a declaration that, in the event of their failing to do this, the plaintiffs shall be entitled from the month of September 1911 to have the sum of Rs. 4-12 credited month by month in reduction of the mortgage-debt. The Court of first instance framed five issues, but decided only the first and the fifth. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the suit as brought was premature and not maintainable and he dismissed it accordingly. The District Judge on appeal has discussed the question solely from the point of view whether the suit could be said to be "premature," in the sense in which that expression had been used by the Court of first instance. The learned Subordinate Judge had expressed an opinion that all matters of account as between a mortgagor and his mortgagee could only be decided upon a suit for redemption of the mortgage, and he has given this as one of his reasons for holding that the suit was not maintainable. The learned District Judge has dissented from this view of the law and has accordingly set aside the decree of the first Court and remanded the case under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code, recording his opinion that the suit as brought is maintainable and not premature, though whether it can succeed or not is a point to be determined when the evidence has been taken and all issues in the case decided.

After hearing both parties, the conclusion we have come to is substantially this. The suit is not "premature" in the sense in which that expression was used by the Courts below; but we are, nevertheless, of opinion that the first Court was substantially right and that the suit is not maintainable as brought. In other words, we are of opinion that the facts stated in the plaint disclose a cause of action upon which the plaintiffs might have sought immediate relief, but their suit has been entirely misconceived and the reliefs sought by them could not possibly be granted. We have to deal with a mortgage-deed containing peculiar and somewhat anomalous provisions. It is necessary for us to put some reasonable interpretation on the provision of that deed which reserves to the mortgagors the right of enhancing the rent. We think this provision was inserted in order to protect the interests of the mortgagors in the event of any considerable rise in the letting value of the property. We do not think that it was intended that the tenants in possession should be tenants of the mortgagors, or that the mortgagors should be entitled to eject them at pleasure. In fact the plaintiffs did not put forward any such claim in the present suit. Had they desired the Court to accept any such view as this, they would have asked for the ejectment of the defendants second party, as tenants who are refusing to vacate the premises after having been duly served with notice by the proprietors. What we do think the provision in question means is that the mortgagors are entitled, in the event of any definite appreciation in the letting value of the mortgaged property, to call upon the mortgagees to secure them the benefit of that appreciation. It is obvious to us, on the terms of the deed as it stands, that if the mortgagees had in fact succeeded in letting this property so as to bring in a monthly rental of Rs. 35-4, instead of Rs. 30-8, and had endeavoured to keep the difference of Rs. 4-12 monthly in their own pockets, upon a plea that this was a matter which could be decided only upon a suit for redemption, the mortgagors would be entitled to claim that the deed gave them a right to the present benefit and enjoyment in respect of the enhancement of rent. They could have maintained a suit for recovery of arrears of enhanced rents from the hands of the mortgagees, and they could have maintained such a suit even during the pendency of the mortgage. From this it seems to us a reasonable inference to hold that, if the plaintiffs are in a position to prove that over a specified period of time the mortgagees have persistently and without reasonable cause been letting the shops for less than their fair letting value, the latter will be liable under the terms of the deed for not securing to the mortgagors the benefit of the enhanced rent. If this view is correct, it is obvious that neither the claim for an injunction nor the claim for a declaration can be maintained. The declaration in any case is an impossible one, because it is difficult to conceive of evidence which would justify a Court in holding that, from any given period upto such indefinite period as may be marked by redemption of the mortgage, the letting value of the shops is certain to be a specified sum in excess of that at present assessed.

The only other question which we have to consider is whether, if the order of remand be maintained and the suit sent back to the Court of first instance, the plaintiffs might not obtain some relief after asking for an amendment of the plaint. We have duly considered this point, and are of opinion that an amendment, such as would satisfy the view which we have taken as to the respective rights and liabilities of the parties, would so change the entire nature of the suit that it would not be proper for any such amendment to be permitted at this stage of the suit. On the facts stated by them the plaintiffs have a continuing cause of action, in this sense that they are entitled to claim damages for any period over which they can prove that these mortgagees are persistently and without reasonable cause under-letting the mortgaged property. The only penalty which they may have to pay for the failure of this suit would be their inability to recover damages for a comparatively short period between the month of September 1911 and the date of the institution of the present suit. We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that this suit was not maintainable, inasmuch as it claimed reliefs not warranted by the facts upon which the cause of action was alleged to be based.

On this ground we accept this appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The defendants will get their costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 20th of January 1913, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, second Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 20th of April 1912, dismissing plaintiff's suit.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The present appeal relates solely to the claim of the plaintiff Indar, and it is contended that his suit should have been dismissed on the following grounds :—

(a) That he was bound by the agreement entered into by his father on the 23rd of June 1874,

(b) that Khema, defendant, has been in adverse possession of the land since 1882, when (upon the application of Musammat Chando) his name was recorded in the revenue papers as owner and in possession, and

(c) that he was a party to the razinama which was filed in the suit of 1890.

All these points have been considered by the Divisional Judge and he has decided them against the present appellant. I have heard Mr. Tek Chand at some length, but I see no reason to differ from the conclusions of the lower Appellate Court. In my opinion the agreement of the 23rd of June 1874 required registration and being unregistered, was inadmissible in evidence. Mr. Tek Chand argues that it amounted merely to a memorandum reciting past facts and that in any event there is no proof that the value of the right in immoveable property surrendered by Musammat Chando's reversioners was more than Rs. 100. I cannot agree upon either point. According to the agreement the reversioners surrendered any rights which they might have to succeed in respect of the property in dispute upon the death of Musammat Chando, and this was clearly an extinguishment of their contingent rights and not merely a recital of events which had already occurred. As regards the value of the property, both Courts are agreed that it must have been above Rs. 100 and I see no reason to take a different view. The learned Divisional Judge has a considerable experience of land in the Hoshiarpur District and his estimate may well be accepted as fairly accurate. The argument [founded upon Abdool Hoosein Mulla v. Goolam Hoosein Ally(1)] that the surrender by a reversioner of rights possessed by him under the customary rule of the Punjab does not amount to the extinguishment of the right in immoveable property, is opposed to a ruling of this Court to be found reported as Khairti v. Matab (2), an authority which, if I may venture to say so, appears to be perfectly correct and in accordance with the Customary Law of this province.

As regards the alleged adverse possession of Khema, the only facts upon which Mr. Tek Chand could rely were that Musammat Chando had in 1882 appeared before the revenue authorities and had mutation effected in favour of Khema who had remained in possession ever since. This entry was made at a time when Indar's father was dead and Indar himself was a minor. There is nothing to show that it was ever brought to Indar's knowledge and the fact that Musammat Chando had ever since the death of her husband been living with Khema and that Khema had been managing her property, would account for no action being taken with regard to the continued possession of Khema. So far as I can see, Indar had no knowledge that the possession of Khema, as it existed prior to 1882, had after that date been transformed into possession as owner. Finally as regards the razinama executed in 1890, it is sufficient to point out that there is no proof that Indar was a party to it. Admittedly, he was a pro forma defendant in that case and was in no way concerned one way or the other. The Divisional Judge is of opinion that the scratch, which purports to have been Indar's mark, was probably made in his absence, for while the other parties to the deed were examined and made statements in Court, Indar did not appear or make any such statement.

Upon a consideration of all the facts, I find that there is no ground to justify my differing from the lower Appellate Court, and I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6—Contract not to claim property by inheritance in future for good consideration, legality of.

There is nothing illegal in a person, for good consideration, contracting not to claim a share in a property in the event of his becoming entitled to it on the decease of a living person.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Moradabad.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor and the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellants.

Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid and Mr. Hamid-ullah Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for partition. The defence was that many years ago one Khurshed Jahan, through whom the plaintiffs claim, compromised certain disputes by abandoning not only all rights which were then vested in her, but also the possibility of her succeeding to shares as one of the heirs of her mother. There is no doubt that a suit was compromised by the lady upon these terms and that the compromise was acted upon, an arbitration held and the award incorporated into a decree in accordance with the award. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that under the provisions of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is impossible for any person to transfer the chance of becoming entitled to a share in the property of a living person. This no doubt is quite correct, but it seems to us that there is nothing illegal in a person, for good consideration, contracting not to claim in the event of his becoming entitled on the decease of a living person. This is in reality the substance of what happened in the year 1868. We accordingly agree with the view taken by the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

A widow can adopt a son to her late husband only when she has been authorised by the latter to make the adoption, or possibly where her late husband's kinsmen assent to the adoption and there has been no express or implied prohibition by her husband.

It is not competent to the widows of two persons, even if brothers, to take the same person in adoption, either at the same time or at different times.

Where the plaintiff put in a certain document of which the language was found to be "absolutely plain and unambiguous," but the plaintiff himself was no party to the document and did not rely upon it exclusively as establishing his title to the property and the plaint as well as the plaintiff's statement before the framing of the issues were very vague:

Held, that under the circumstances the plaintiff was not debarred from adducing oral evidence in support of his contention.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 1st June 1912, dismissing plaintiff's suit.

Mr. A. B. Broadway, for the Appellant.

Mr. Suraj Narain and Lala Balwant Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The family-tree showing the alleged relationship of the parties is given in the judgment of the District Judge. The property in suit is a house in Delhi and belonged originally to Sukh Deo Das, who died on the 31st December 1897. After his death it passed to Kishen Lal, who was either the son or the adopted son of Sukh Deo Das, and upon Kishen Lal's death in 1900, his widow, Musammat Ram Piari, remained in possession till her death in 1908, when Musammat Panna, present defendant, who is the daughter of Sukh Deo Das, took possession. Plaintiff, Gopi Kishen, in the present suit seeks to recover possession on the ground that he is the adopted son of Fakir Chand and as such entitled to succeed to the property in preference to Sukh Deo Das' daughter, inasmuch as by the custom obtaining among Maheshries of the Bikanir State, Musammat Panna has no right to it either as a daughter of Sukh Deo Das or as a sister of the last male owner, Kishen Lal.

Defendant traversed the allegations of plaintiff, and denied that plaintiff was ever adopted by Fakir Chand.

The District Judge framed six issues, but found it necessary to discuss the second issue alone, viz., whether plaintiff had been validly adopted by Fakir Chand. Upon this issue he found against plaintiff and as the latter's claims were based solely upon his alleged adoption, the learned Judge dismissed the suit with costs.

Plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and we have heard all that his learned Counsel had to urge in support of his client's alleged adoption, but we did not consider it necessary to call upon the respondents to reply, as we were satisfied that the finding of the District Judge was correct.

Mr. Broadway did not contend that Gopi Kishen had any right to the house in suit otherwise than as the adopted son of Fakir Chand, and his argument was confined to establishing his client's status as such adopted son. His contention was two-fold. In the first place, he maintained that plaintiff had been actually adopted by Fakir Chand himself in his lifetime, and in the second place, he urged that if there was no sufficient proof of this adoption by Fakir Chand, plaintiff had at all events been adopted by Fakir Chand's widow, Musammat Kakji, and that such adoption was valid by the custom of the family and had been recognized as such by the Courts at Bikahir where the family had their ancestral home.

As regards the first contention, the learned Counsel relied upon the evidence of certain witnesses called by the plaintiff. The learned District Judge in his judgment held that this evidence was inadmissible, as plaintiff relied upon a written document (Exhibit page 2) of which the language "was absolutely plain and unambiguous" (Section 94 of the Indian Evidence Act). But plaintiff himself was no party to the document in question, nor did he rely upon it exclusively as establishing his title to the property. The plaint is exceedingly vague and in point of fact makes no mention of any adoption, though in the family-tree which is therein set out, plaintiff is shown as the son of Fakir Chand. He was examined before issues were framed, but his statements were again exceedingly vague (see page 22 of the paper-book) and he merely stated that he was "adopted", but that he himself knew nothing about the adoption as he was an infant at the time. In these circumstances, we do not think the evidence adduced by him in support of his first contention was inadmissible. At the same time we have no hesitation in saying that it certainly does not prove that Fakir Chand adopted him. On the contrary, it is quite clear from the statements made by his own witnesses, Dhan Sukh Das (page 27, Answer 3), Musammat Basanti (page 39, Answer 7), Ram Lal (page 54, line 24), that the alleged adoption was effected, if at all, not by Fakir Chand but by his widow Musammat Kakji. Hem Raj (P. W. No. 1), no doubt, says that Fakir Chand adopted plaintiff, but he had to admit subsequently that his knowledge was derived from hearsay. But the strongest piece of evidence against this contention consists of the khulanama executed by Musammats Kakji and Chandni on the 11th Magh Sudi, Sambat 1949 (page 4). According to this document, it was these 2 ladies who adopted Gopi Kishen and the terms in which the document is written, and especially the reference to Gopi Kishen as the son of Ragnath Das (his natural father), preclude the idea that the ladies were merely acknowledging afresh an adoption that had already been effected by Fakir Chand. It is thus abundantly proved that no adoption was effected by Fakir Chand himself.

The next question is whether plaintiff was validly adopted as son of Fakir Chand by the latter's widow. It is a well-established principle of Hindu Law that a widow can adopt a son to her late husband only in those cases when she has been authorised by the latter to make the adoption, or, possibly, where her late husband's kinsmen assent to the adoption, and there has been no express or implied prohibition by her husband. In the present case there is no evidence to support the argument that the adoption was made with the authority of Fakir Chand, though apparently at one time Fakir Chand did broach the subject to plaintiff's natural father, Ragnath Das. The latter is said to have declined the offer, and Fakir Chand appears to have done nothing further in the matter.

According to plaintiff's witness, Ram Lal, the adoption was not effected until some 17 or 18 years after Fakir Chand's death, and though this may not be strictly correct it is conceded that it did not take place for many years after that event. Furthermore, there is no mention whatever in the khulanama (which was obviously drawn up with great care) of any authority given by Fakir Chand, an omission which would be very remarkable if the widow was merely carrying out her deceased husband's wishes. It must, therefore, be held that the act of Musammat Kakji was one for which she had no authority from her late husband and it is not alleged that the adoption was effected with the assent of Fakir Chand's kinsmen. Mr. Broadway laid stress upon the fact that the adoption has been recognised as valid by the Bikanir Courts and in this connection has referred us to a copy of the judgment of Munshi Raghbir Singh, printed at pages 13-17 of the paper-book. We may assume that the adoption has been so recognised, but obviously this fact cannot prejudicially affect defendant who was no party to that case. Further, it is in evidence that the Bikanir State has its own peculiar laws and rules upon such matters, and these laws and rules can have no application when we have to decide a question to succession to house property situate in Delhi and lately the property of a Hindu of the Maheshri caste. Sukh Deo Das and his branch of the family appear to have left their ancestral home in Bikanir and to have settled down in Delhi, and succession to their property must clearly be determined (in the absence of any proof that they were governed by some family custom) by the principles of their personal law. So considered, the adoption by Musammat Kakji must be held invalid, as it is not shown that she had any authority either from Fakir Chand or his kinsmen to effect it.

Quite apart from that objection, the adoption is open to the equally fatal objection that it purports to have been effected by the widows of two men, Fakir Chand and Amar Chand, to both of whom plaintiff was thus made an adopted son and heir. If it is not possible for two persons, even if brothers, to take the same person in adoption, either at the same time or at different times (Trevelyan's Hindu Family Law, page 149), a fortiori, it would not be competent to their respective widows to make such an adoption.

In our opinion plaintiff's suit has been rightly dismissed and we, therefore, reject this appeal with costs.

Appeal rejected.

The illness of one of the petitioners for restoration of a petition for review is no ground for extending the period provided by Article 160 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, 1908, specially when the absence of the petitioner's Counsel and of the other co-petitioner is not explained.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Bepin Chandra Bose, for the Petitioner.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Brojendra Kumar Chakrabarty, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule to show cause why an order of the District Judge refusing to reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge in appeal should not be set aside. That order was that the applicant could not be added as a party defendant on the ground of his having purchased the property in dispute subsequent to the institution of the suit from the defendant No. 2.

It appears that before the Subordinate Judge both plaintiff and defendant No. 2 objected, on the ground that the alleged transfer was a fictitious and paper transaction without consideration.

The learned Subordinate Judge holding that the cases cited before him, which have also been cited before us in support of the applicant's contention, only applied where the transfer is admitted and also that the applicant would not be affected by any decree passed against the defendant No. 2, rejected the application.

On appeal the learned Judge, while not satisfied that an appeal lay under Order XXII, rule 10, of the Civil Procedure Code and holding that no appeal lay under Order I, rule 10 (2), held on the merits that as in certain interlocutory proceedings, to which the applicant was not a party but in which he gave evidence in support of his vendor, the question of bona fide sale had been fought out and as the High Court had set aside the decision on that matter on a question of jurisdiction and not on a different view of the evidence and had refused costs and as the suit was six years old, he was not inclined, in the exercise of his discretion, to add a party of his own motion who, as far as he could see on evidence, has no bona fide interest.

Before us it is contended, first, that a person can continue a suit as a defendant under Order XXII, rule 10, and that that rule does not only apply to a plaintiff or a person seeking to represent a plaintiff.

Secondly, that the Judge had no jurisdiction to decide the matter on evidence taken in an interlocutory proceeding to which the applicant was no party, and thirdly, that the case was hung up through a probate dispute in plaintiff's family and never came on for hearing till the 20th March 1914, on which date the applicant put in his petition to be added. As regards the Subordinate Judge's reason for refusing the application the case of Rajaranee Dassee v. Debendra Nath Shaw (1), where Sale, J., following an unreported order of Jenkins, J., directed that a disputed transferee should be added without prejudice, no inquiry being made into the bona fides of his claim, is cited.

(1) 8 C. W. N. 754.

As to the first contention, we are not prepared to say that Order XXII, rule 10, can only apply to plaintiffs and their representatives. Nor has any authority been put before us to show that it does. The case of Moti Ram v. Kundan Lal (2) shows that an admitted transferee can appeal against the original decree if he was not added as a party in the suit, and this implies that he had a right to be made a party defendant.

In the case in Rajaranee Dassee v. Debendra Nath Shaw (1), the application was under section 372 of the Civil Procedure Code corresponding to Order XXII, rule 10, and no doubt was expressed by the Court or urged at the Bar that such an application would lie on behalf of a person seeking to continue the suit as a party defendant. The only question there was whether the transfer must be admitted, before the assignee could come in. As regards the second point we are of opinion that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to decide the question on evidence recorded in another proceeding to which the applicant was not a party.

As regards the third point it certainly appears that the case did not come before the Court for hearing till March 1914 and is not really a case of six years standing.

As regards the grounds stated by the Subordinate Judge he is clearly wrong in saying that the applicant's interests will not be affected. If the doctrine of lis pendens is applied, the decree will bind him and although the defendant No. 2 now denies the transfer, it was clearly admitted by him when his property was attached in May 1913 and he called in the applicant to support the case of the transfer.

It, therefore, appears to us that his denial at this late stage of the case is as Sale, J., pointed out in Rajaranee Dassee v. Debendra Nath Shaw (1) of little value and the transfer must be taken as an admitted transfer as far as the defendant No. 2 is concerned.

The case of Ahmedbhoy Hubibhoy v. Vulleebhoy Cassumbhoy (3) is clear authority for the proposition that an admission by the defendant of the transfer is sufficient to entitle the transferee to be made a party under section 372 (i. e. Order XXII, rule 10) as well as under section 32, i. e., Order I, rule 10 (2), and the same view has been taken by the Allahadad Court in Durga Prasad, In the matter of the Petition of(4), and although in the case of Rabbaba Khanum v. Noorjehan Begum (5), the case was only under section 32, the Judges held that it was erroneous to hold that no person should be added as a defendant unless the plaintiff recognises some right in the party who seeks to be added to share in the thing in respect of which the interpleader suit is brought.

They, however, held that an erroneous order under section 32 was not an error going to the jurisdiction which could be interfered with under section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code.

In this case the learned Judge in appeal has refused jurisdiction under Order XXII, rule 10, and we are not concerned with his findings under Order I, rule 10 (2), although he has erroneously decided this question on evidence recorded in a proceeding to which the applicant was not a party. On his finding that the defendant No. 2 admitted the transfer in May 1913, we are bound to hold that the applicant is entitled to be added as a defendant.

The Rule is, therefore, made absolute, the order of the District Judge is set aside and the applicant will be added as a party defendant under Order XXII, rule 10, and the case will proceed from the point it had reached on the 20th March 1914. The applicant is entitled to his costs from the respondent, two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 148, O. XXXIV, rr. 7 (1) (d), 8 (2)—Mortgage—Simple—Court's power to enlarge time of paying mortgage amount.

In the case of a simple mortgage, an order debarring all right to redeem on a fixed date should not be passed in view of Order XXXIV, rule 7 (1) (d) and rule 8 (2), Civil Procedure Code, 1908. Section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, gives a Court power to enlarge the period of redemption if it thinks fit.

Mr. N. N. Burjorjee, for the Applicants.

Mr. Villa, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

HARTNOLL, J.—The applicants brought a suit for redemption of two mortgages and on March 30th 1912 obtained a decree for redemption, on payment into Court of Rs. 835 and interest on or before 30th April 1912. It was ordered that if such payment was not made by such date the applicants should be debarred from all right to redeem. Payment was made within time. This is not disputed. The defendant appealed and on the 24th February 1914 this Court modified the decree of the District Court by ordering the applicants to pay in a further sum of Rs. 1,420 with interest by the 24th May 1914 It was also ordered that if such payment was not made by the 24th May 1914, applicants should be debarred from all rights to redeem. The further sum was not paid in by the date fixed, though the sum said to be due on the appellate decree, Rs. 1,823-14-6, was paid in on the 24th July 1914.

This is an application to extend the time for payment.

On the 26th June the original defendant's representatives applied for an order to the District Court that the applicants be debarred from all rights to redeem and that they, the representaives, be placed in possession, and an order to that effect was passed on the 16th November 1914. Mg. Aung Gyi in support of this application says that he did not understand that the further sum ordered to be paid by the Appellate Court had to be paid by the 23rd May 1914 and that his illness caused further delay in paying it in. The plea as to illness is not substantiated. The reasons given by Mg. Aung Gyi are not, in my opinion, sufficient to condone the delay.

But it was urged at the hearing of the application:

(1) that an order debarring the applicants from all right to redeem should not have been passed at all, as the mortgages were simple mortgages; and

(2) that in Order XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code six months are always allowed within which to pay mortgage monies due.

As regards the first point, from a perusal of the proceedings the mortgages do appear to have been simple ones. That being so, an order debarring all right to redeem on a fixed date should not have been passed: Order XXXIV, rule 7 (1) (d), and rule 8 (2).

The second point taken seems also to be correct.

Reliance was also placed on the proviso ending Order XXXIV, rule 8; but such proviso seems only to refer to the fourth paragraph of rule 8. But section 148 of the Code itself gives this Court time to enlarge the period of redemption if it thinks fit.

Considering the two main points raised and which I have set out above, I think that we should be exercising a sound discretion if we enlarged the time fixed for redemption in this case, but I would give interest on Rs. 1,420 from the 24th May 1914 at Rs. 6 per cent per annum.

I would, therefore, set aside the order of the District Court of the 16th November last and enlarge the time of payment up to the 31st March next, on condition that in addition to the sum further ordered to be paid by the Appellate Court an extra sum of interest at 6 per cent. per annum be paid on Rs. 1,420, the extra sum to be calculated from the 24th May last to the 31st March next. If all sums due in accordance with this order and that of the Appellate Court are not paid by the 31st March next, then, as it has not been appealed against, that portion of the decree of the Appellate Court debarring the applicants from all right to redeem will be of full force and virtue. As regards costs I think the applicants should pay respondents' costs of this application, which I would fix at three gold mohurs.

Fox, C. J.—I concur.

Custom—Inheritance—Exclusion of daughter from inheritance—Balayan Jats in Meerut Division.

There is no custom excluding a daughter from inheritance among Balayan Jats in Meerut Division.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge of Meerut, dated the 19th April 1913.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him Mr. Durga Charan Banerjee), for the Appellant.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of the estate of one Sher Singh, Jat.

The plaintiffs-respondents are the nearest male agnates of Sher Singh. The defendant is the daughter of Sher Singh. The plaintiffs pleaded a special custom in their family, village, the neighbourhood and the caste, under which a daughter is excluded from inheritance.

The Court of first instance, on the evidence, held that the custom alleged had not been established.

The lower Appellate Court held that the evidence was sufficient to prove the existence of the custom.

The only point before me is whether taking the evidence as accepted by the Court below, it is sufficient in law to establish an immemorial, invariable custom.

There is no plea that the parties are not Hindus. The custom alleged is one at variance with the ordinary rule of Hindu Law and is both harsh and unnatural, and it lay on the plaintiffs to prove it by clear and cogent evidence.

The parties are Balayan Jats and the story is that this class of Jats inhabit 84 villages in the Meerut Division, that they came from Malanai in the Delhi District and are, therefore, Punjabi Jats as having come from the Punjab.

The plaintiffs called in evidence some 18 witnesses who mentioned 36 instances (some five or six from this very village) of the custom having been followed. These were not supported by any documentary evidence relating to these instances.

Fifteen Wajib-ul-arzis were produced. In only one of these was the daughter expressly excluded in terms, though the inference to be drawn from the others is that the daughter was to be excluded.

Some six judgments were quoted in cases in which the custom was upheld, one at least being connected with this very village.

On the other hand the defendant also called witnesses who quoted 24 instances (some 4 or 5 from this very village) in which the daughter had inherited her father's estate, one being in the very family of the parties. Khewats were produced in support of this oral evidence to show that the instances were genuine, and not imaginery.

Several judgments have also been quoted in cases in which it was held that the custom did not exist, the latest being that in First Appeal No. 173 of 1912 [Musammat Bhagwani v. Khushi Ram (1), to which I myself was a party] decided on 16th June 1914.

In regard to the claim that the plaintiffs are Punjabi Jats (among whom the custom prevails) in that they came from the Delhi Division, I need only point out that prior to the Mutiny Record of 1857 the Delhi Division had never at any time formed part of the Punjab. Till then under the British Rule it was part of these Provinces and as far as can be discovered from historical records, it was not at any time included in the Punjab. What is now called the Punjab Province includes a considerable area outside the Punjab proper. Jats who lived in the Delhi District prior to the Mutiny were not and could not have been Punjabi Jats at that time. The Balayan Jats settled in the Meerut Division long long prior to the Mutiny. The claim to be called Punjabi

(1) 24 Ind. Cas. 982

Jats has no real basis in history. The lower Court started with a presumption that being Punjabi Jats, the Balayan Jats brought with them their own customs from the Punjab, but they came not from the Punjab. Taking the evidence accepted by the lower Court the case is

(1) that 36 instances one way and 24 the other way have been established;

(2) that there are decisions in cases both ways;

(3) that 15 Wajib-ul-arzs of the year 1863 contain entries which support the plaintiffs and at least go to show that even if there was no universal custom, at least there was a strong feeling among the Jats of this Province, in the 15 villages, that daughters should not be allowed to inherit.

But it must be proved that the custom is at least both immemorial and invariable before the Courts can uphold it, as it is at variance with the rule of Hindu Law. It is impossible to say in the state of the evidence that either of these two necessary qualifications has been proved, when we find that in so large a proportion of instances the daughters have actually inherited within the memory of man.

The evidence taken, as it stands, is clearly insufficient to establish this custom.

I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Court of first instance. The appellant will have her costs in both this and the lower Appellate Court, including in this Court-fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—"Heard and finally decided"—Compromise—Relief claimed in plaint not dealt with in compromise—Fresh suit, whether barred—Cause of action—Estoppel by judgment.

When a matter was not "heard and finally decided" in a suit but a decree was passed on the basis of a compromise agreement, the reliefs claimed in the plaint but not included in such a decree, should not be deemed to have been refused so far as to bar a fresh suit for the said reliefs, if the cause of action in the succeeding suit had not arisen on the date of presentation of the plaint in the prior suit.

Minalal Shadiram v. Kharsetji, Kharsetji v. Minalal Shadiram, 30 B. 395; 8 Bom. L. R. 296; Rajah Kumara Venkata Perumal Raja Bahadur v. Thatha Ramasamy Chetty, 9 Ind. Cas. 875; 35 M. 75 at p. 83; (1911) 1 M. W. N. 290, 9 M. L. T. 487; 21 M. L. J. 709, followed.

There can be an estoppel by judgment in a consent decree only when the question raised by the subsequent suit was present to the minds of the parties and was actually dealt with by the consent decree. In all these cases the question is whether the parties did intend that the question at issue should be finally settled between the parties by the consent decree, and did the consent decree so actually settle that question.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 958 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Manamadura, in Original Suit No. 623 of 1910.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The contention that under the compromise arrangement in the former suit, the 2nd plaintiff's vendor transferred his right as owner to the defendant cannot be upheld. The said compromise petition merely allowed the defendant to redeem the 2nd plaintiff's vendor (first mortgagee of both items Nos. 1 and 2) and did not transfer to the defendant the rights obtained by the 1st mortgagee as the purchaser of the mortgagor's right, a purchase not binding on the defendant so far as his right to redeem the 1st mortgage was concerned. The decree also does not, in terms, convey the 1st mortgagee's interest as such owner of the equity of redemption to the defendant.

It is, however, argued that the 1st mortgagee ought to have insisted on the relief of the redemption of item No. 2 from the defendant being given to him in the former suit, that that relief should, therefore, be deemed to have been refused to him under Explanation 5 to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code and that by such refusal he and his vendee, the second plaintiff (who stands in his shoes), are barred from bringing the present suit for that relief.

This ingenious contention as res judicata was not set up in the written statement in the first suit, did not form the subject of any issue in the present suit and was not raised in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court. Nor do I think that any of the grounds in the memorandum of second appeal raises the question. Even if the defendant is entitled to argue it before us, I am not satisfied that when a matter was not "heard and finally decided" (see section 11, Civil Procedure Code) in a suit but a decree was passed on the basis of a compromise agreement, the reliefs claimed in the plaint but not included in such a decree should be deemed to have been refused so far as to bar a fresh suit for the said reliefs, if the cause of action in the succeeding suit had not arisen on the date of the presentation of the plaint in the prior suit. In Minalal Shadiram v. Kharsetji, Karsetji v. Minalal Shadiram (1), it is said on page 408: "The lower Court was also wrong in holding that the defendant is barred by section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code" (present section 11) "from raising the questions of fraud or wager. . . . . In Suit No. 105 of 1897 there was no hearing and disposal of any matter in issue and the provisions of section 13 have, therefore, no application. It has, however, been argued that the consent decree . . . . . operates as an estoppel by judgment. . . . . but when the facts of the case and the wording of the Purshis," (that is, the application for the passing of the consent decree) "above set out, are borne in mind, the reason and the scope of the consent decree at once become apparent."

The above case is quoted with approval in the judgment of this Court in Rajah Kumara Venkata Perumal Raja Bahadur v. Thatha Ramasamy Chetty (2), and the learned Judges proceed to say: "What then is the test for determining whether there is an estoppel in any particular case in consequence of a decree passed on a compromise? In our opinion the answer must depend on the answer to the question 'Did the parties decide for themselves the particular matter in dispute by the compromise?' and was the matter expressly embodied in the decree of the Court passed on the compromise or was it necessarily involved in, or was it the basis of, what was embodied in the decree?' For settling this point it would be legitimate, and sometimes necessary, to look into the pleadings between the parties in the suit terminated by the compromise decree." Then at pages 85 and 86, the learned Judges say: "What the Court has to do in determining with respect to what matter each of the parties to a compromise decree is estopped, is to find out what it was that the parties agreed to in the previous action; and for this purpose it would not be enough merely to see what was the relief granted in the decree of the Court, but it would be necessary also to examine what was the basis on which it was granted." The present suit is not for the same relief as in the former suit (which was brought for the redemption of item No. 2 alone on payment of what was due to the defendant on the second mortgage of item No. 2) but is brought for redemption of both items Nos. 1 and 2 on payment of what was due to the defendant on the 1st mortgage of items Nos. 1 and 2 discharged by him in pursuance of the compromise decree in the first suit and of what was due to him on the 2nd mortgage of item No. 2. "The basis on which" the former decree "was granted" was clearly the following: that if the defendant pays up to the 1st mortgagee (the plaintiff in that case) the mortgage amount, he (the defendant) shall become the mortgagee of items Nos. 1 and 2 for that amount so paid, while remaining the 2nd morgagee of item No. 2 alone for the 2nd mortgage amount. His own liability to be redeemed as a person holding rights as mortgagee in those two capacities after he redeems the first mortgage, was not intended to be finally decided and was not decided by the compromise decree in the former suit. It was only in case he did not pay up the 1st mortgage amount that his liability to allow the redemption of item No. 2 alone was intended to be decided, but as he did pay up the 1st mortgage, his said contingent liability under the former decree never became an actual enforceable liability under that decree. To borrow the language of Abdur Rahim and Krishnasawmy Iyer, JJ., in Hukdar Syed Bacha Saheb v. Karuppana Pillay (3), "Does what is decided" in the former suit "involve a decision" as to the plaintiff's right after the defendant redeemed the first mortgage? No such decision negativing the plaintiff's rights as under his Court auction purchase of the mortgagor's right is involved in the decree passed on this compromise agreement.

(1) 30 B. 395; 8 Bom. L. R. 296.
(2) 9 Ind. Cas. 875; 35 M. 75 at p. 83; (1911) 1 M. W. N. 200; 9 M. L. T. 487; 21 M. L. J. 709.

There is, therefore, no force in the contention that the present suit is barred on account of estoppel by the judgment or the decree in the former suit.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

NAPIER, J.—I entirely concur. I agree with my learned brother that we should follow Rajah Kumara Venkata Perumal Raja Bahadur v. Thatha Ramasamy Chetty (2) as correctly laying down the principles on which compromise decrees should be interpreted.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage—Mortgagee in possession—Mortgage to terminate ipso facto on a certain date—Mutation of redemption—Suit for possession by mortgagee—Condition making mortgagor liable for rent due from village tenants, meaning of.

A mortgage-deed executed on the 25th February 1895, contained an express stipulation to the effect that the mortgagees should remain in possession up to the 15th July 1907, on which date the mortgage was to determine, without the payment of any further sum, and that the mortgagors should be liable for any amount of rent left due to the mortgagees from the village tenants. In 1908 the Revenue Tahsildar at the instance of the mortgagors ordered a mutation of redemption. On the 7th June 1909, the plaintiffs-mortgagees instituted a suit for possession of the mortgaged area, on the allegation that no redemption could be made until the sum due by the mortgagors on account of arrears of rent had been made good to them

Held, (1) that the mortgage-deed did not contemplate that rent due from the mortgagors as tenants should be secured upon the mortgaged property and that as a large portion of the sum claimed by the plaintiffs was made up of rent alleged to be due not by the village tenants, but by the mortgagors themselves in their capacity of tenants of the mortgagees, the plaintiffs could not get a decree for possession on the strength of the stipulation in the mortgage-deed;

(2) that the accounts put in by the plaintiffs had not been proved and the suit must, therefore, be dismissed.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurgaon, dated the 27th May 1910, decreeing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellants.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case arose from a mortgage of the land in dispute executed on the 25th February 1895. The mortgage debt was Rs. 5,500 and it was stipulated that the mortgagees should remain in possession up to the 15th July 1907, on which date the mortgage was to determine without the payment of any further sum. The immediate cause of the litigation occurred in 1908 when the Revenue Tahsildar, at the instance of the mortgagors, came to the conclusion that the mortgage on the land had determined by the lapse of time stipulated and ordered a mutation of redemption. More than a year later, on the 7th June 1909, the plaintiffs-mortgagees instituted this suit for possession of the mortgaged area, on the allegation that Rs. 4,616-1 were still due by mortgagors on account of arrears of rent and that no redemption could be made until that sum had been made good to them. The District Judge has given the plaintiffs-mortgagees a decree for possession until Rs. 4,616-1 have been paid to them, and this appeal is from that decree.

Before us the appellants' Counsel has argued that the conditions of the mortgage were inequitable and unconscionable, that as a fact there were no arrears of rent due to the mortgagees, that the plaintiffs have not proved that the amount claimed by them was in fact due, and that, even if it was due, they were not for that reason entitled to retain possession of the land until that sum was paid. Finally, it is argued that the conditions of the mortgage constituted a clog on the equity of redemption and cannot legally be enforced. We have considered the conditions of the mortgage-deed very carefully and have come to the conclusion that they were not unconscionable or oppressive. It would appear that even before this mortgage-deed of 1895 was executed the land was already in the possession of the plaintiffs as mortgagees under an earlier mortgage-bond. Under the mortgage-bond now in dispute the mortgagees became liable for the Government revenue and the only liability undertaken by the mortgagors was in respect of any land that might become uftadah and in respect of defaults in payment of rent made by tenants of the village. As the mortgagees dwelt in a village other than that in which the mortgaged property was situate and as the mortgagors reside in the village where the land is situate, it was only natural that the mortgagees should have some guarantee that the mortgagors would aid them in securing a proper return on their investment. Clause 3 of the mortgage-deed runs as follows:—"If any amount of rent is left due to the mortgagees from the village tenants on account of the latter's being poor or by reason of their deserting the land, we, all the mortgagors, shall be liable therefor." Now it appears that a large portion of this sum of Rs. 4,616-1 in respect of which the plaintiffs now sue for possession, is made up of rent alleged to be due not by the village tenants, but by the mortgagors themselves in their capacity of tenants of the mortgagees. We do not consider that it was contemplated by the mortgage-deed that rent due from the mortgagors as tenants should be secured upon the mortgaged property. No doubt the mortgagees at that time considered that they could always recover their rent from the mortgagors by the usual rent suit in a Revenue Court. The position as regards the tenants of the village was, however, different, because village tenants have little or no property of their own and it was for this reason, we take it, that the mortgagors became, as it were, surety for the payment of the rent by the village tenants. Viewed in this light the stipulation in the mortgage-deed did not warrant the grant to the plaintiffs of a decree for possession until arrears due by the mortgagors themselves have been paid, although such a decree might be granted until such time as the mortgagors shall pay the arrears due by the village tenants.

It remains, then, to consider what sums are still due as arrears of rent (1) by the mortgagors themselves and (2) by the village tenants. In order to prove this point the plaintiffs rely upon two sets of evidence: (1) oral evidence that discussion took place between the parties and that the balance now in suit was admitted by the defendants to be due; and (2) bahis purporting to have been kept by the plaintiffs. To the oral evidence we are unable to attach any importance. If, as is alleged, an agreement between the parties had really been arrived at, we should expect some admission reduced to writing. Secondly, it is remarkable that the admission is not referred to in the plaint. Thirdly, though the parties are said to have reached this agreement in June 1907, no mention whatever was made of it during the mutation proceedings in 1908. As for the bahis, it is noteworthy that they were put in only at a late stage of the suit, viz., on the 16th or 17th of December 1909, and that we can find on the record no evidence that these bahis were formally proved. The bahis were produced by one of the original mortgagees who, at the time of the suit, had divested himself of the share of the mortgage and was no longer concerned with it. Nevertheless he produced the bahis on which the plaintiffs' case is based, but he did not depose that he had written the bahis; and beyond certain loose statements of the mortgagees' agent, Puran, that the bahis had been written up from his dictation by one or other of the mortgagees, there is no proof at all who wrote these bahis. The bahis themselves do not constitute a regular system of accounts and it is worthy of remark that though the mortgagees have separate bahis of their own, the income from this mortgage, which is alleged to have been divided amongst them, finds no place in their own private bahis. It is, therefore, impossible to check the entries in the bahis produced in this case by comparison with the entries in the private bahis of the mortgagees. We must, therefore, come to the conclusion that the accounts put in by the plaintiffs-mortgagees have not been proved, and this is sufficient to decide the appeal. We would, however, further note that the accounts produced show that some of the items of arrears are of considerable value and we think it peculiar that the plaintiffs neither brought a suit against the defaulters for the recovery of these arrears of rent nor even sent notice to them to demand payment: and we regard this omission as all the more peculiar in that we find that the mortgagees' agent on at least two occasions did recover rent from defaulters by a suit in the Revenue Courts.

In conclusion we are of opinion that in all probability some rent was due to the mortgagees, but in view of the fact that the bahis have not been formally proved by anybody and particularly that none of the plaintiffs has gone into the witness-box to support the accounts produced by statement on oath, we are forced to hold that the plaintiffs have failed to prove the exact sum which is outstanding. On these grounds we accept the appeal and dismiss the suit, but in the circumstances we direct that parties bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 62, applicability of—Money had and received—Suit by some heirs on mortgage—Decree in favour of them and property purchased by them—Other heir, right of, to realize his share—Limitation.

M, a Muhammadan, died leaving his widow, N, and other heirs. The other heirs brought a suit on a mortgage in favour of the deceased making N a defendant. They obtained a decree and in its execution purchased the properties themselves:

The Hon'ble Mr. Abdul Raof (with him the Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal), for the Appellants.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (with him Mr. Iqbal Ahmed), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This and the connected Appeal No. 436 of 1912, arise out of one suit being cross-appeals from the same decree. The main facts are not in dispute and are as follows:—

Sheikh Minnat Ullah died leaving as his heirs his widow, the present plaintiff, and his father, Khadim Hus'ain. Under Muhammadan Law, the widow inherited a ¼th share in his estate and the other 3/4ths went to the father. The latter died subsequently, leaving the present six defendants as his heirs.

Under a mortgage-deed, dated 14th February 1891, Nasrat Ullah and Musammat Karamat Bibi borrowed Rs. 7,296 from Minnat Ullah.

After the death of Khadim Hussain, the first defendant, Musammat Amina Bibi, his widow, obtained a succession certificate in regard to this debt due from the mortgagors.

Then she and the remaining defendants jointly sued to recover the mortgage debt, impleading the present plaintiff as a pro forma defendant, admitting that she was entitled to a ¼th share but alleging that she refused to join as plaintiff.

On 14th May 1903, they obtained a decree for the recovery of Rs. 17,168-8-0 plus future interest at 9 per cent. per annum from the date of suit upto the date of payment. In addition to this they were awarded their costs.

They put the decree into execution.

Thereupon the present plaintiff applied to the Court to be added to the proceeding as a decree-holder. To this the decree-holders naturally objected as she was not a decree-holder and stated that they would pay her ¼th of the amount recovered after deducting the costs of the suit and execution proceedings.

Her application was disallowed on the 19th February 1904.

The mortgaged property was put to sale and sold for Rs. 23,590. The decree-holders obtained sanction to bid at the auction.

According to the statements in the plaint and the written statement in this suit, the property was purchased by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, but it is stated before us that the property was knocked down to all the defendants and that then the other defendants withdrew, saying that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were the purchasers. This is of little consequence.

The amount of the debt itself due under the decree inclusive of interest upto the date of sale was Rs. 22,205-13, so that the purchase was for a sum of Rs. 1,384-13-0 in excess of this. The costs of the suit and execution proceedings amounted to a little less than 1,384-13-0. The purchasers applied under Order XXI, rule 72 that the purchase-money and the amount due under the decree might be set off against each other and satisfaction of the decree entered up. This was allowed by the Court and they paid into Court the small amount which was due on their bid over and above the total amount of the decree.

The sale was confirmed on 15th July 1906. The present suit was brought by the plaintiff on 1st June 1912 against all the defendants.

She sued in the alternative for two reliefs. Primarily she sought to recover Rs. 8,562-3-6, being Rs. 5,551-7-4, her ¼th share of Rs. 22,205-13-0, plus 3,010-12-2, interest from 21st May 1906, the date of the auction-sale upto the date of suit.

The date on which the cause of action arose was given as 15th July 1906 the date of the confirmation of the sale.

Apparently in apprehension that the date on which the cause of action arose might be taken to be the date of the sale (21st May 1906), she alleged that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had been absent from India on a pilgrimage to Mecca from September 1911 to March 1912 (some six months) and that this period should be allowed to her for the purpose of calculating the period of limitation.

In the alternative she pleaded that if the first relief could not be granted, then she might be awarded possession of a ¼th share in the property (valued at Rs. 5,897-8-0) and be granted mesne profits.

The defendants among other pleas urged

(1) that the suit for a ¼th share of the money was barred by limitation;

(2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover a share in the property purchased;

(3) that the defendants Nos. 4 to 6 were in any case not liable, as they had neither recovered the money nor purchased the property.

The Court below held

(1) that the money claim was not barred by limitation;

(2) that the defendants Nos. 4 to 6, not having received the plaintiff's share of the decretal money or purchased the property in lieu of the decretal money, were not liable to pay anything to the plaintiff.

It came to no decision in regard to the claim for a share in the property.

It gave the plaintiff a simple money decree, disallowing a part of the claim for interest.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have appealed, and the point pressed is that the suit for money is barred by limitation as Article 62 applies.

The plaintiff has also appealed as against all the defendants, and the sole point she takes is that she is entitled to all the interest she claimed; she does not on her appeal claim that she is entitled to a decree for possession of the ¼th share in the property.

We take first the question of limitation. The plea taken is that Article 62 of the Limitation Act applies, and not Article 120 as applied by the Court below, to the money claim.

In our opinion Article 62 clearly applies. The suit is clearly on the face of it one for money had and received by the defendants for the plaintiff's use. The Court below based its decision that Article 120 applied, on the authority of the ruling reported as Umardaraz Ali Khan v. Wilayat Ali Khan (1). The head-note in the report is, we think, misleading.

In that case one heir of a Muhammadan recovered a debt due to her deceased husband. The other heirs sued to recover their shares thereof from the widow. In respect to this claim the Court of first instance applying Article 120 held that the suit was barred by limitation, it having been brought more than six years after the cause of action arose.

The plaintiff appealed and urged that Article 123 applied. This Article governs a suit for a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator or for a distributive share of the property of an intestate and allows a period of twelve years.

A Bench of this Court repelled this. It held that Article 123 refers to a suit in which a plaintiff seeks to obtain his share from a person who, either as an executor or an administrator, represents the estate of a deceased person and is under a legal obligation to distribute shares to those entitled to them and that the suit before them was not one of such a nature. They quoted the ruling in Sithamma v. Narayana (2). They then observed: "In a recent case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, Mahomed Riyasat Ali v. Hasin Banu (3), which was a suit of a nature similar to the present, their Lordships refused to apply Article 123 and held the claim to be governed by Article 120."

Nowhere in the judgment did the Judges, who decided this case, say that Article 120 was the proper Article to apply, though prehaps this might be inferred to be their opinion from the passage quoted above. Article 62 was not mentioned in the judgment nor apparently was the question now before us discussed at the hearing. For the purpose of that appeal it was unnecessary to discuss or decide whether Article 62 or Article 120 applied. In either case the suit was barred by limitation as having been brought more than six years after time. The only point decided was that Article 123 did not apply.

In the case of Mahomed Riasat Ali v. Hasin Banu (3), the plaintiff sued to recover the estate of her deceased husband from the latter's brother, Riyasat Ali, who had taken possession of it. She based her title on a special custom. The estate consisted of both moveable and immoveable properties. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held in regard to the cash and moveables wrongfully seized by the defendant, that neither Article 123 nor Article 49 applied but that Article 120 applied. In regard to Article 49 their Lordships remarked: "This latter Article does not appear to be applicable to a suit to establish a right to inherit the property of a deceased person." It is obvious that the present suit is not one to establish a right of inheritance.

The plaintiff's right to a ¼th share in the money in suit has not at any time been disputed. On the contrary, it has always been openly admitted by the defendants who, in the execution proceedings, when they objected to the plaintiff being brought on the record as a decree-holder, stated that they would pay to the plaintiff her ¼th share in the amount recovered from the judgment-debtor after deduction of costs.

When the amount of the decretal debt was set off in part against the amount of the defendants' bid at the auction, this was done as a matter of convenience and it was as if the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had paid in the amount of their bid and had then with defendants Nos. 4 to 6 recovered the amount due under the decree, and we have no hesitation, on the facts of the suit before us, in holding that Article 62 applies. The money was received by the defendants for the plaintiff's use. The decision in Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (4) supports us.

It is urged that section 10 of the Limitation Act applies and that there is really no period of limitation for such a suit as the present. It is clear, however, that section 10 only applies to express trusts and not to circumstances such as those of the present suit.

It is also pleaded that if the money claim be held barred by time, then the Court ought to give the alternative relief, i. e., possession of a ¼th share in the property. In the first place we must point out that though the plaintiff has appealed, she has not appealed on this point at all. In the next place we fail to see that she is equitably entitled to a ¼th share in the property. She was not a co-decree-holder, nor did the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, put the decree into execution to recover only a sum of money in the whole of which the plaintiff had a ¼th share. The money recoverable by the decree included the costs of the suit and execution proceeding. The property was purchased for a sum of money greater even than the full amount of the decree. Moreover, in equity the defendants were entitled to recoup to themselves the costs incurred in obtaining the succession certificate. Moreover, the amount due under the decree was set off only in part against the money due from the defendants-purchasers under their bid at auction. The purchase was made on behalf of only three of the decree-holders and not on behalf of all. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff has no cause of action to recover a ¼th share in the property.

The plaintiff was entitled to recover a ¼th share in the decretal debt after deduction of all expenditure incurred legitimately by the defendants in recovering the debt. She waited for six years and nine days after the date of the sale before she sued, though her right had been admitted, and has only herself to blame for the result of her own delay.

The suit is barred by limitation. We allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 3453 OF 1910.

JADU NATH BOSE—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage by administrators erroneously appointed by competent Court, if operative and binding on estate—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 90—Interest, high rate of—Powers of Court—Interest not specified in petition for sanction of mortgage.

All acts done by an executor or an administrator in the due and legal course of administration are valid and binding, even though the letters issued by the Court are afterwards revoked or the incumbent discharged from his trust.

A mortgage granted by the administrators, though erroneously appointed as such with the sanction of the District Judge, to satisfy a debt of the estate which the executor himself was compellable to pay, is operative and binding on the estate.

Where in an application by an administrator to the District Judge for sanction to mortgage a property the principal amount required was mentioned, but no mention was made about interest and when the deed was executed, the administrator covenanted to pay compound interest at 30 per cent per annum.

Held, that the claim for payment of interest at such a high rate was unreasonable.

Section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) authorizes an administrator to grant a mortgage of the immoveable property vested in him only with the previous sanction of the Probate Court, and this implies a sanction by the Court of all the essential elements of the mortgage transaction.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Bankura, dated the 30th July 1910, affirming that of the Sub-Judge of that place, dated the 25th May 1909.

Babus Bepin Behary Ghose and Khetra Mohan Sen, for the Appellants.

Babu Monmotha Nath Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by some of the defendants in a suit to enforce a mortgage security. The substantial question in controversy between the parties is, whether the mortgage is operative upon the property now in the hands of the appellants. The circumstances under which the mortgage was created are not in dispute at this stage and may be briefly stated. The property formed part of the estate of one Durgadas Chatterjee, who made a testamentary disposition on the 6th April 1885. The testator died in 1890, and on the 8th December of that year probate was granted to his eldest son, Annada Prasad Chatterjee, who was named as the executor in the Will and figures as the first defendant in this litigation. On the 20th February 1894, the widow of the testator and one of his grandsons, who are the second and third defendants respectively in this suit, applied to the Probate Court for removal of the executor on the ground of his misconduct and for revocation of the probate issued to him. On the 19th July 1894, the probate was revoked and the appointment of the first defendant as executor was cancelled. On the 17th August 1894, the Probate Court appointed the widow and the grandson as joint administrators and four days later issued to them Letters of Administration (inaccurately described in the order-sheet as "probate") with copy of the Will annexed. On the 10th September 1894, the executor whose apppointment had been revoked, lodged an appeal in this Court against the order of the District Judge. On the 31st July 1896, the appeal was allowed and the order of the District Judge reversed on the ground that the alleged misconduct and mismanagement did not constitute a just cause for removal of an executor under clause 4 of section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act: Annoda Prosad Chatterjee v. Kalikrishna Chatterjee (1). Thereupon, the probate originally issued to him, which had been recalled and cancelled, was re-issued to him by the District Judge on the 19th February 1897, pursuant to an order made in that behalf on the 11th February 1897. Meanwhile, on the 26th April 1895, in execution of a decree for money against the executor, the disputed property was sold and was purchased by Pitambar Chatterjee, now represented by the appellants. The decree had been obtained by a co-proprietor of the estate in a suit for contribution in respect of revenue payable to Government by all the proprietors. The administrators, who were in possession of the estate at the time of the sale, applied to the District Judge on the 4th May 1895 for permission to raise money by mortgage of part of the estate with a view to have the sale set aside under section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. They represented—and the accuracy of their statement has not been called in question—that the property was worth more than Rs. 1,000, and that if the sale, which had taken place for Rs. 495 only, was allowed to stand, serious loss would result to the estate. The District Judge sanctioned the mortgage and directed that the very property, which would thus be saved, be given by way of security. The plaintiff thereupon advanced Rs. 550 to the administrators, who applied the money for cancellation of the sale and on the 21st May 1895, executed in his favour the mortgage now sought to be enforced, by which they undertook to re-pay the loan on the 12th April 1893. On the 21st April 1898, i. e., after the executor had been restored to his office as the result of the appeal to this Court, the disputed property was sold in execution of a money decree against him as executor of the estate and was purchased by the decree-holders who subsequently transferred the same to Pitambar Chatterjee, predecessor of the present appellants on the 29th December 1898. On the 9th April 1908, the plaintiff commenced this litigation to enforce his security and he joined as defendants eleven persons, namely, the executor as the first defendant, the administrators as the second and third defendants, and the representatives of the purchaser as the remaining defendants. The claim was contested by the last-named defendants only, on the ground that the mortgage was inoperative, because granted by administrators erroneously appointed as such. The Courts below have concurrently overruled this defence, and have decreed the suit. On the present appeal, the decree of the District Judge has been challenged on two grounds, namely, first, that the mortgage granted by the administrators does not bind the estate, and, secondly, that as the provision for payment of compound interest at a high rate was not sanctioned by the District Judge, the claim for interest cannot be sustained.

The first point taken on behalf of the appellants raises the question of the effect of revocation of a Probate or Letters of Administration, upon which there has been some divergence of judicial opinion. The effect of revocation of a grant of Probate or Letters of Administration has been made to depend mainly upon whether the grant was void ab initio or merely voidable. In Abram v. Cunningham (2), it was decided that where administration is granted on concealment of a Will which appointed executors, the grant is void from its commencement, and all acts performed by the administrator in that character are equally void and cannot be made good, even though the executor should afterwards appear and renounce. But in Sands and Peckham's case (3); it was held that if the administrator had paid funeral expenses, debts, or legacies, which the law forced the executor to pay, the administrator, in an action against him by the executor, should recoup so much in damages, because he was compelled to pay it, and the true executor had no prejudice by it, for as much as he himself would have been bound to pay it. Again, from Graysbrook v. Fox (4), it appears that in an action by the true executor against the purchaser of goods sold to him by the administrator, the sale is indefeasible, if made to discharge the funeral expenses or the debts which the administrator or executor was compellable to pay. Where, however, the act in question is one which the administrator was not compellable to do, but is a voluntary act on his part, it has been sometimes said that it is simply void and no title is thereby conferred on a purchaser [Hewson v. Shelley (5)] or mortgagee [Ellis v. Ellis (6)] from him, and the vendor is also liable in damages in an action by the true executor : Wolley v. Clark (7). In Boxall v. Boxall (8), it was held that where the Will does not appoint an executor, the repealed grant obtained by suppressing the Will is not void ab initio, and, therefore, a sale under it was held to be a valid transaction. But wherever the grant of administration is voidable only, as where it has been granted to a party not next of kin, or where the executor having acted and the Court, not knowing it, committed administration to another, or without citing the necessary parties, all lawful acts done by the first administrator are deemed valid as against the subsequent administrator: Packman's case (9) Blackborough v. Davis (10).

It is worthy of note that the earlier cases to which we have referred were criticised by Lord Redesdale in Doyle v. Blake (11), and a view more favourable to the rights of the bona fide transferee for value without notice has been taken in modern decisions to which we shall now refer. Thus in Debendra Nath v. Administrator-General of Bengal (12), where the Judicial Committee affirmed the decision of the majority in Debendra Nath v. Administrator-General of Bengal (13), Lord Macnaghten observed that so long as the Letters of Administration remained unrevoked, the person in whose favour the grant had been made was to all intents and purposes administrator and his receipts were valid discharges for all moneys received by him as administrator. The full significance of this observation is appreciated when it is borne in mind that the Letters of Administration had been obtained by fraud and by suppression of the fact that the deceased had left a Will. A similar view had been previously indicated by Woodroffe, J. in Gopal Das v. Budree Das (14), which may be difficult to reconcile with the obiter dictum in Prayrag Raj v. Gonkaran Pershad (15), and was subsequently adopted by Neville, J., in Craster v. Thomas (16). It will be observed that in the case last mentioned the administration had been granted, notwithstanding the existence of a Will which had been kept back from the Court, and it was thus precisely a case in which it might be argued with plausibility that the grant was void ab initio ; yet the Court held that the grant was voidable and not void. Consequently, if the view is maintained that a grant of administration made by a competent Court, though erroneously, is voidable, that is, operative till it has been revoked by that Court or set aside by a superior Tribunal, there is no room for controversy that the mortgage in suit is binding upon the estate. But even if we take a more restricted view, namely, that adopted by Walsh, J., in Graysbrook v. Fox (4), the mortgage is clearly indefeasible, because it was created to satisfy a debt of the estate which the executor himself was compellable to pay. The executor had failed to pay the Government revenue due, which had thereupon been satisfied by one of the joint proprietors of the estate. The executor thereafter did not reimburse the co-proprietor, who was consequently constrained to sue and to obtain a decree. Even then the executor did not satisfy the judgment-debt. Execution followed, with the result that a valuable property was sold for an inadequate price. Under these circumstances, the administrators, with the sanction of the District Judge, raised a loan and saved the property which it was their paramount duty to do. They did nothing beyond what it would have been obviously incumbent upon the executor to do for the protection of the estate, if he had been in possession at the time, and we are unable to discover any conceivable principle of justice, equity and good conscience to support the contention that the mortgage was ab initio void, because granted by administrators erroneously appointed by the Probate Court. It may be added that the more liberal view indicated above has been adopted in the American Courts, where it has been ruled that all acts done by an executor or an administrator in the due and legal course of administration are valid and binding, even though the letters issued by the Court are afterwards revoked or the incumbent discharged from his trust: Bigelow v. Bigelow (17), Foster v. Brown (18), Fisher v. Bassett (19). But reference has been made to a dictum in Boxall v. Boxall (8), that if a grant is reversed by a Court of Appeal it must be deemed void ab initio, though revocation takes effect only from the time of the recall, and it has been argued that all intermediate acts of the executor or administrator, pending an appeal which results in a reversal of the former sentence, are void, because, it is said on the strength of a dictum in Price v. Parker, (20), the appeal suspends the former sentence, which, on its reversal, places all the parties in the position which they would have occupied if it had never existed. This contention does not appear to be well founded on principle, and cannot, at any rate, be applied to the Indian system of law which explicitly recognises the doctrine that an appeal does not operate as a stay of proceedings under the decree or order challenged by way of appeal (Order XLI, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908). It is worthy of remark that in the Courts of the United States, although in some cases [State v. William (21), Muirhead v. Muirhead (22)] the view has been maintained that an appeal suspends the operation of a decree and leaves the executor or administrator in office as before, there is respectable authority for the contrary opinion that an appeal by an executor from an order revoking Probate of the Will does not continue the powers of the executor pending the appeal: Harney v. Scott (23), Crozier's estate (24), In re Marsh (25). But the appellants are in a further difficulty in the present case. The executor was actually removed and the administrators were placed in possession long before the appeal was preferred; consequently, there is no room for the application of the doctrine that the appeal suspended the operation of the order for revocation. We may add that in systems where the view is maintained that an appeal against an order of revocation suspends the operation of the order, practical difficulty in the management of the estate is avoided by the appointment of an administrator pendente lite, and plainly no question could arise as to the legality of the mortgage in suit, if the administrators here are deemed to have been in essence at least administrators pendente lite. We need not, however, have recourse to what might be called a fiction and, for the reasons previously assigned, we hold that the mortgage granted by the administrators with the sanction of the Probate Court bound the estate.

The second point taken on behalf of the appellants raises the question of the validity of the claim for interest. In the application to the District Judge for sanction of the proposed mortgage, the principal amount required to be raised was stated as Rs. 550, but no mention was made about interest. When the deed was executed by the administrators, they covenanted, however, to pay compound interest at Rs. 30 per cent.

per annum with half-yearly rests. Under section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act, an administrator is authorised to grant a mortgage of the immoveable property vested in him, only with the previous permission of the Probate Court. This implies a sanction by the Court of all the essential elements of the mortgage transaction, and there is no room for doubt that, from the point of view of the burden imposed on the estate, the provision for payment of interest may be even more effective than the principal amount of the loan required to be raised. See Ganga Pershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (26), Thakur Prasad v. Gauripat Rai (27), which arose on the corresponding provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act, XL of 1858, section 18, and VIII of 1890, section 29. See also Abhiram Pal v. Mukunda Lal Dutt (28), Roy Radha Kishen v. Nauratan Lall (29), Nemai Chand Adhya v. Mir Golam Hossein (30). In the case before us, the clause for the payment of compound interest at a high rate was manifestly unreasonable, and the lender obviously made the best of the embarrassing situation in which the administators found themselves. We accordingly reduce the interest to simple interest at 9 per cent. per annum and we do so partly in view of the fact that the mortgagee has waited till very nearly the last day of the period of limitation, clearly with the object that the claim for interest may reach the maximum possible amount. Such interest as we allow is recoverable from the date of the mortgage and must be added to the mortgage-money as was done by the Judicial Committee in Chajjmal v. Brij Bhukan Lal (31). The decision in Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (32) is clearly distinguishable, as there was no covenant at all for payment of interest post diem in that case, and the amount allowed, though added to the mortgage dues, was treated as damages, a distinction not always recognised: Gordillo v. Wegueliu (33).

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part, the decree of the District Judge discharged, and, in lieu thereof, the usual mortgage decree made in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 1,502-14-0, namely, Rs. 550 as principal and Rs. 952-14-0 as interest thereon at 9 per cent. per annum from the 21st May 1895 to the 21st August 1914, which we fix as the date for redemption. The plaintiff will also be allowed his costs in the Court of first instance on the sum now decreed, such costs to be ascertained in this Court and added to the mortgage dues. If the decretal amount is not paid on or before the 21st August 1914, it will carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum from that date and the mortgaged property will be sold in due course for realisation thereof. The defendants will not be personally liable for any portion of the decretal amount. Each party will pay his own costs of the appeal to the Disirict Judge as also of the appeal to this Court.

We are informed that the mortaged property has been sold in execution of the decree not set aside and has been purchased by the decree-holder. The effect of our order will be that the sale will stand annulled from this date, and the property will be re-sold, if occasion arises, in execution of the decree now made: Set Umedmal v. Srinath Ray (34); Chandan Singh v. Ram Deni Singh (35). We do not, however, now determine what restitution the decree-holder may be liable to make, if he took possession of the property by virtue of his purchase at the sale now cancelled; that question must be determined by the execution Court if an appropriate application is made in that behalf by the party interested: Raghu Singh v. Shew Prosad (36), Beni Madho Singh v. Pran Singh (37).

Appeal partly allowed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22—Land held on service tenure—Rent-free grant—Succession—Hindu Law of inheritance—Pleadings—Practice.

Land held on a service tenure is a rent free grant, and its descent is governed by the ordinary Hindu Law of inheritance and not by section 22 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

The mere fact that the plaintiffs did not admit themselves to be entitled to possession of the land in suit as a service tenure, should not disentitle them to a decree for recovery of possession of the land as a service tenure holding, provided that such right is established on the evidence.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Jaunpur.

Mr. Durga Charan Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a declaration of title, or in the alternative for recovery of possession, in respect of a certain plot of land, and also for damages with regard to a sugar-cane crop standing on the said land which is alleged to have been wrongfully removed by the defendants. The Court of first instance decreed the claim for damages and apparently intended to find for the plaintiffs on the question of title, but somewhat curiously remarked that it was unnecessary to give the plaintiffs any further relief inasmuch as the plaintiffs' Pleader had made a statement to the effect that his clients were actually in possession. The result naturally was that both parties appealed to the Court of the District Judge. That Court found against the plaintiffs on the question of title and also with regard to the claim for damages; it, therefore, dismissed their suit altogether. Inasmuch, however, as the learned District Judge had two appeals before him there have been two appeals filed by the plaintiffs before this Court. When this appeal came before me for hearing in the month of June last, I found it necessary to remit an issue to the lower Appellate Court. This issue came for decision before another learned Judge, not the one who decided the appeal in the first instance, and it is not altogether easy to reconcile the finding returned on the remanded issue, with certain findings recorded by the learned Judge whose decree is now under appeal. It seems to me, however, that I am bound in second appeal to give effect as far as possible to the findings of fact originally recorded by the lower Appellate Court as well as to the finding returned upon the remanded issue. I take it accordingly to be established that the plot of land in suit was at one time held rent free by Puranwasi Hajjam upon a service tenure. The right enjoyed by him has since descended by inheritance, assuming that its descent is governed by the ordinary Hindu Law, to the plaintiffs Musai and Chaturi. Musai has mortgaged one-half share with possession to the plaintiff Jokhan Chaubey. These plaintiffs obtained possession over the plot in suit and were in possession at any rate during the years 1313, 1314 and 1315, Fasli, that is to say, for a period which came to an end in the month of September 1908. Their possession was constructive, the land being in the actual occupation of their subtenant, Jita. I must take it that this subtenant was ejected by the defendants-respondents, who are zemindars of the village, somewhere about the end of the year 1908 A. D. and that the sugar-cane crop in respect of which damages were claimed was actually grown by these defendants-respondents, or some of them. The plaintiffs Jokhan and Chaturi took formal proceedings in ejectment against Jita during the year 1909, obtained a decree against him, to which the present respondents were not parties, and were put in formal possession in the month of March 1910, after having been made to pay to Jita Rs. 30, as compensation on account of the sugar-cane crop already mentioned. They have brought the present suit on the ground of interference on the part of the defendants-respondents with their right to actual possession. I must take it that their cause of action accrued after the close of the year 1315 Fasli, that is to say, after the month of September 1908.

The first question which has been argued before me to-day is whether the plaintiffs Musai and Chaturi were in fact entitled to succeed to the rights of Puranwasi Hajjam, the rent-free holder of the land in suit. This involves the question whether succession to Puranwasi's right is governed by the ordinary Hindu Law or by the special provisions of section 22 of the Tenancy Act (Act II of 1901). That section applies only to various classes of tenants, and by definition a tenant does not include a rent-free grantee, and a rent-free grantee does include a person who holds land on a service-tenure. I must, therefore, accept the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the remanded issue and hold that Puranwasi's right devolved in accordance with the ordinary Hindu Law, and, therefore, passed to the plaintiffs Chaturi and Musai. The present possession of the defendants-respondents, I must hold to have been violent and unlawful. It has been contended on their behalf, in the first place, that a service-tenure is in its essence non-transferable, so that the mortgage in favour of Jokhan is unlawful, and further, that the plaintiffs should in no case be given a decree for recovery of possession as service-tenure-holders, seeing that in their plaint the plaintiffs do not claim title as such but described the land in suit as forming a haqiat mutfarrika, whatever that expression may be understood to mean. I find that in the plaint the land in suit was described as ancestral muafi of Puranwasi Hajjam. I am not prepared to hold that the mere fact that the plaintiffs did not admit themselves to be entitled to possession of the land in suit as a service-tenure, that is to say, subject to certain conditions of service, should disentitle them to a decree for recovery of possession as service-tenure-holders, provided that such right is established on the evidence. The question of the transfer in favour of Jokhan does not, in my opinion, affect the determination of the present suit. It applies in any case to one-half of the land in suit only. The transfer by way of mortgage would leave the original tenure-holders still liable for, and capable of rendering, the service subject to which the tenure was granted. In any case, even supposing that by reason of the transfer in favour of Jokhan, or of the devolution of Puranwasi's rights by inheritance through the female line, the semindars of the village were no longer able or willing to receive from Musai and Chaturi, as tenure-holders, the services for the sake of which the rent-free holding was originally granted, that circumstance would not entitle them to enter into possession of the land in suit otherwise than by means of a suit for resumption. The rent-free-holders are, in my opinion, entitled to be re-instated in possession as such, because their right to such possession has not been terminated by the means provided by law. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for possession. I cannot give them a decree for damages in view of the finding recorded by the lower Appellate Court with regard to the sugar-cane crop in dispute. That is a finding of fact and no valid ground has been shown for disturbing it in second appeal. The plaintiffs may have been unfortunate in this respect, in so far as it would appear that they were actually made liable to pay compensation for this crop to Jita; but that order was passed in a suit to which these defendants-respondents were not parties and is not binding upon them. The result is that I so far accept this appeal that I decree the plaintiffs' alternative claim for recovery of possession in respect of the land in suit, and dismiss the rest of their claim. The parties will pay and receive costs throughout in proportion to failure and success.

Decree modified.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104 (1)—Reference to arbitration, application for—Court finding one of defendants unwilling to refer—Order rejecting application for reference, whether appealable.

Where an application for reference to arbitration is made in a pending case and the Court, finding one of the defendants unwilling to have the case sent to arbitrators, rejects the application, despite the plaintiff's readiness to discharge the unwilling defendant from the array of parties, no appeal lies form such an order of rejection.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 17th August 1913.

Babu Surendra Nath Roy, for the Appellants.

Babu Hari Kishen Dhaon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken to the hearing of this appeal, and in my opinion the objection must be allowed. The facts are that the plaintiffs, who are the appellants here, brought a suit against eight persons for partition of joint family property. One of the defendants in that case was Musammat Lekhraji, defendant No. 5, who is one of the widows of a man named Gokul Prasad. The case having been brought into Court, there apparently was some notion of having it referred to arbitration and an application for reference to arbitration was presented to the Subordinate Judge. When the Subordinate Judge came to examine the question as to whether the parties agreed to the reference, he found out that Musammat Lekhraji was not willing to have the case sent to arbitrators. The plaintiffs tried to meet this position and asked for the discharge of Musammat Lekhraji from the array of parties. The Subordinate Judge refused to do this. He, therefore, rejected the petition asking the Court for reference. It is this order of the Subordinate Judge which is brought here in appeal, and I am unable to find that an order like this comes within section 104, sub-section (1), of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Counsel for the appellants has tried to convince me that the order against which he is appealing is one falling under section 104, sub-section (1), clause (d), but that cannot be so. It seems to me perfectly clear that the order referred to in clause (d) is an order passed in proceedings taken under paragraph 17 of the second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, that is to say, a case in which the parties having agreed out of Court to submit a case to arbitration the Court is asked to file the agreement. Then again it is said that the order was one under section 104, sub-section (1), clause (e), but here again the appellants are met with the difficulty that a suit such as is described in clause (e) presupposes that there has been an agreement to refer. The trouble for the appellants in this case is that there has been no agreement to refer, because Musammat Lekhraji declined to entertain the proposal to have the case submitted to arbitration. The point seems to me to be a clear one. I hold that no appeal lies and direct that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 476 OF 1913.

December 1, 1914.

DASWANDHI BEG AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 40 (3)—Refusal to grant certificate on insufficient grounds—Revision.

Ordinarily no revision lies from an order of lower Appellate Court refusing to grant a certificate under section 40 (3) of Act III of 1914, but where it has been refused on the ground that no general question of custom etc. is involved, the Chief Court can exercise its revisional power and remand the application to obtain the certificate for redecision.

Petition, under section 70 of Act XVIII of 1884, for revision of the decree of the Divisional Judge, Sialkot Division, dated the 4th March 1913, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, first Class, Sialkot, dated the 22nd March 1914, dismissing the claim.

FACTS.—The order of the Divisional Judge referred to in the judgment was in the following terms:

"I could not legally grant a certificate in this case. No general finding on any question was given. All I found was that under the entry on the shajra nasab of this particular village in question. The case will hardly form a precedent.

"The certificate is refused."

Mr. Asquith, for the Petitioners.

Lala Hukam Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the order of the Divisional Judge, Sialkot, refusing to grant a certificate under section 40 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act. Mr. Hukam Chand, for the respondents, raises a preliminary objection that no revision lies. I agree with him that ordinarily no revision lies from an order of lower the Appellate Court refusing to grant a certificate, but in the present case the Divisional Judge appears to have refused a certificate on the ground that he could not legally grant it. His words are, "I could not legally grant a certificate in this case. No general finding on any question of custom was given." There occurs an incomplete sentence which apparently means that the decision was based upon an entry on the shajra nasab of the particular village in question. What the Divisional Judge seems to have meant was that he could not give a certificate in this case because no general question of custom was involved, but only a general question of custom as existing in one village. The power to grant a certificate, however, is not limited in any way in the Punjab Courts Act. In the present case the question is whether a gift to a daughter in the presence of the first cousins of the donor was valid by custom, and the case certainly appears to me to be one to which sub-section (3) of section 40 is applicable. The Divisional Judge had power to grant a certificate.

I, therefore, allow the revision and setting aside his order remand the case to him for a fresh order upon the application of the petitioners. No order as to costs.

Revision allowed.

Case remanded.

Punjab Courts Act (I of 1912), s. 40—Appeal, Second—Application for certificate to appeal made after 30 days—Question of custom mixed with law—Certificate refused—Second appeal, whether lies to Chief Court.

Where a certificate to appeal on the question of custom is not granted, no second appeal lies to the Chief Court and it is immaterial on what ground the same is refused.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur Division, dated the 1st August 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, second Class, Nurpur, District Kangra, dated the 28th January 1913, dismissing the claim.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question which is involved in this case is one of usage or custom and since the Divisional Judge has declined to grant a certificate, no second appeal lay to this Court under section 40 of the Punjab Courts Act I of 1912, which was in force when this appeal was filed. The appellant's Pleader says that Divisional Judge did not understand the full import of the question involved in the case which was one of special custom governing gifts made by fathers-in-law to their sons-in-law in the nature of sankalp on the occasion of their marriages among Rajputs of Tahsil Nurpur in the Kangra District, and that he has refused the certificate thinking that the gift in dispute stands on the same footing as an ordinary gift made by a Rajput father-in-law to his son-in-law in respect of his ancestral property. The judgment of the Divisional Judge shows, however, that he has not misunderstood the question which he was called upon to decide and the ground on which he has refused the certificate is that the application for grant of certificate was barred by limitation. The certificate having been refused no second appeal lies to this Court and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. A. COCKCRAFT.

The maintenance of roads is one of the functions of Government and though that function may be delegated to Municipalities and Local Boards still it is a Sovereign function, especially where the road is maintained for military purposes, and the Secretary of State for India in Council exercising such Sovereign function will not be made liable for injuries sustained by a person coming against a heap of gravel stored on the road by a contractor, as it cannot be said to have been done in the conduct by Government of undertakings which might have been carried on by private persons.

Per Wallis, C. J.—A distinction exists between acts done by Government in the exercise of its Sovereign powers and conduct by Government of undertakings which might have been carried on by private persons.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The maintenance of highways is one of the Sovereign functions of Government and where the injury caused is not due to negligence resulting from the exercise of other than Sovereign or Administrative functions, the Government are not liable.

Obiter dicta.—(1) The ordinary rule that States and Sovereigns are liable for damages occasioned by the negligence of their officers, does not apply to the Secretary of State who is subject to the same liability as the East India Company was.

(4) By section 4 of 3 and 4 William IV, Chapter 85, the right to carry on business for the benefit of the State was recognised.

Where the East India Company exercised Sovereign rights, they were generally exempt from liability to be sued in the Municipal Courts, but with reference to transactions which, though carried on for public purposes and for the public benefit, were of such a nature as could have been undertaken by private individuals or by a trading corporation, they were governed by laws regulating private rights.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—These are suits against the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiffs in a carriage accident, which is alleged to have been due to the careless stacking of gravel on a road which is alleged in the plaints to be a military road maintained by the Public Works Department. The defendant pleaded a general denial of liability, and also, among other things, that he was not responsible as the gravel was stacked by a contractor under the Public Works Department. No issue was framed as to the general denial of l ability even if the facts were as stated in the plaints, nor was such a defence pressed at the trial. On appeal, however, it has been contended that the plaints disclose no cause of action, and that on this ground the suits should have been dismissed, and in support of this contention the case of the P. and O. S. N. Company v. Secretary of State for India (1) is mainly relied on. I have so recently considered this case in Ross v. Secretary of State (2) that I will merely say that, though it only decides that the East India Company was liable for the negligent acts of its servants done in the course of their employment when such acts were done in the conduct by the Company of undertakings which might have been carried on by private individuals without any delegation of Sovereign powers, yet it is also authority for the position that in respect of acts done by the Company in the exercise of its Sovereign powers it could not have been made liable for the negligence of its servants in the course of their employment. The authority of this decision, in my opinion, is not affected by cases such as Farnell v. Bowman (3) and Attorney-General of Straits Settlement v. Wemyss (4), or such as Parnaby v. Lancaster Canal Company (5) or Mersey Docks Trustees v. Gibbs (6), because in all these cases the liability of the defendants depended on the terms of a particular Statute and was merely a question of construing that Statute. This test, however, is inapplicable to the Sovereign powers of the East India Company, which were not conferred upon it by Statute but were derived from the Native Rulers of India, though, no doubt, held subsequently after some controversy to have been acquired by the Company in trust for the Crown and to be subject to the authority of Parliament. The view taken in the P. and O. S. N. Company v. The Secretary of State (1) would rather seem to have been that in the exercise of the Sovereign powers so acquired, the Company was prima facie entitled to the immunities of a Sovereign. It is, however, unnecessary to consider the question further on the present occasion and I abstain from doing so.

The only question now open seems to be, whether the acts complained of can be said to have been done in the conduct by Government of undertakings which might have been carried on by private persons. There is a decision to the contrary of Fletcher, J., on facts closely resembling the present case in Mc Inerny v. Secretary of State for India (7), and apart from authority I have come to the same conclusion. I think the provision and maintenance of roads is one of the functions of Government, though in India it is now largely delegated by Statute to Municipalities and Local Boards, just as in England it was imposed first upon the parishes and then on statutory bodies created by Parliament. And the case seems to be all the stronger where the road in question is a military road, as is alleged in the plaints here. As the point was not taken at the trial, the decrees must be reversed and the suits dismissed without costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The facts of these cases are not in dispute in this appeal. The plaintiff's carriage was capsized by one of its wheels running over a heap of gravel carelessly stacked on the road by a contractor under the Public Works Department of the Government of Madras. This road is a military road, and it apparently leads to the barracks where soldiers are quartered. The plaintiff sustained injuries. He sues the Secretary of State for India in Council for damages on the ground that the accident to him "was entirely due to the gross negligence and carelessness displayed by their (the Government's) servants."

The defendant denied carelessness on his part and the liability to pay damages. Several subsidiary pleas relating to contributory negligence, etc., were raised. The learned Government Pleader does not rely on them in this Court.

The District Judge awarded Rs. 1,000 as damages in Original Suit No. 17 of 1910 and Rs. 250 in Original Suit No. 21 of 1910. The Government have appealed. It was contended for the appellant that the Secretary of State in Council cannot be sued for a tort committed by any of the servants of the Crown. It is necessary to examine the scope and limitations of this contention.

It is true that ordinarily States and

(7) 13 Ind. Cas. 370; 38 C. 797.

Sovereigns are not liable for damages occasioned by the negligence of their officers or of persons employed in their service (see 16 Halisbury's Laws of England, section 633, and 38 Encyclopædia 472). But this rule has no application to the Secretary of State for India. Under 21 and 22 Victoria, Chapter 106, the Secretary of State is under the same liability as the East India Company were subject to. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have laid down in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Moment (8) that the extent of this liability has been correctly stated in P. and O. S. N. Company v. Secretary of State for India (1). It becomes necessary, therefore, to see whether under that ruling the present action could have been maintained against the East India Company. Before dealing with that point, I shall clear the ground by pointing out that the analogy of the Crown in England has no application to the Secretary of State. In Farnell v. Bowman (3), it was pointed out by the Privy Council that subjects of the Empire residing in the colonies are not restricted in suing the Local Governments to such actions only as found a remedy in the petition of rights in England. In an earlier case [Hetteihcage v. Queen's Advocate (9)] Lord Blackburn, while holding that a subject of the Ceylon Government was entitled to sue the Governor in the Municipal Courts on a breach of contract, intimated that actions ex delicto would not lie. Sir Barnes Peacock in Farnell v. Bowman (3) points out that this dictum should be read as interpreting the Ceylon Ordinances and not as a general proposition that Colonial Governments are not liable for torts. In Attorney-General v. Wemyss (4), which was an appeal from the Straits Settlements, it was held by the Judicial Committee that the Crown is liable to pay damages for trespass to immoveable property. It is, therefore, evident that the principle that the Crown can be sued only for remedies contemplated by the petition of right is confined in its operation to the United Kingdom; and that general liability for torts is dependent upon the law of the particular dominion wherein the action is instituted.

I may also dispose of another objection to jurisdiction on the ground that "Government Departments, Public Officers and servants of the Crown cannot be made liable for the wrongful acts of their subordinates." This rule, as pointed out in P. and O. S. N. Company The Secretary of State for India (1), and in Lane v. Cotton (10) only relates to the personal liability of the officers sued. But where satisfaction can be had from the revenues of the State, this objection cannot prevail. [See Bainbridge v. Postmaster-General (11), Raleigh v. Goschen (12).]

The main point for consideration is whether the present action could have been successfully maintained against the East India Company. We are only concerned with the position of that Company when the India Councils Act was passed. After 3 and 4 William IV, Chapter 85, the Company held the British possession in India for the King of England. By section 4 of that Act, the right to carry on business for the benefit of the State was recognised. The monopoly in salt and opium is referred to by Sir Barnes Peacock as coming under this section. The Company had, therefore, two distinctive functions which are even to-day exercised by the Government of India. In so far as the Company exercised Sovereign rights, they were generally exempt from liability to be sued in the Municipal Courts. But with reference to transactions which, though carried on for public purposes and for the public benefit, were of such a nature as could have been undertaken by private individuals or by a trading Corporation, they were governed by laws regulating private rights and obligations. Even in regard to the exercise of Sovereign functions the immunity is subject to exceptions. As the Chief Justice points out in Dhackjee Dadajee v. The East India Company (13): "An action of trespass will lie against a Corporation, and especially against the East India Company, if, assuming to act in their political capacity, they commit a trespass by having ordered it, or by recognizing it when done for their benefit, as much as trespass would lie against the Governor of a Colony, who, assuming to act in his political capacity, should commit a trespass." Another exception is that if the State by its Legislature prescribes the limits or conditions under which executive acts are to be performed, a liability may arise for transgressing those limits or conditions: The Secretary of State for India v. Hari Bhanji (14). Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar suggested another limitation with reference to the observations of the learned Chief Justice in Bank of Bengal v. The United Company (15), that whenever a State has been benefited by the wrongful act of its servants, it is liable to be sued for the restitution of the profit unlawfully made.

The present case is not covered by any of these exceptions. The learned Government Pleader argues that in making roads like the one in question, the Government was acting in its Sovereign capacity and that consequently the exemption recognised in P. & O. S. N. Company v. Secretary of State for India (1) applies. The proposition is thus stated in that judgment:—"But where an act is done, or a contract is entered into, in the exercise of powers usually called Sovereign powers, by which we mean powers which cannot be lawfully exercised except by Sovereign, or private individual delegated by a Sovereign to exercise them, no action will lie." In Moodalay v. Morton (16) referred to in P. & O. S. N. Company v. The Secretary of State for India (1), the Master of Rolls has thus drawn a distinction between Sovereign powers and powers exercisable by individuals. [Moodalay v. Morton (16)]. The line of demarcation seems to be that in the one case no question of consideration comes in, whereas the essence of the other is that some profit is secured or some special injury is inflicted in the exercise of the individual rights. Sir Barnes Peacock recognises that it is difficult to determine in individual instances whether the act complained of was done in pursuance of Sovereign rights or not. The mere fact that a duty is undertaken in the interests of the public will not make it a Sovereign act. It has been decided that Corporations entrusted by Statute with the execution of public duties and in receipt of tolls or dues for such purposes are liable for acts of negligence on the part of their servants. Parnaby v. Lancaster Canal Company (5). This principle was elaborated in great detail by Justice Blackburn in Mersey Docks Trustees v. Gibbs (6). In delivering the unanimous opinion of the Judges consulted in that case, Lord Cranworth (Lord Chancellor) and Lord Westbury, in accepting the opinion, say that the fact that tolls are levied for the public benefit is not an answer to an action for negligence caused by a servant. [See also Coe v. Wise (17).] The position of the East India Company is not very dissimilar to that of the Company whose liability was discussed by Mr. Justice Blackburn. At first I was inclined to think that the present case was covered by that decision. But the Judicial Committee have held that the law was correctly laid down by Sir Barnes Peacock in P. & O. S. N. Company v. Secretary of State for India (1). In that case, the learned Chief Justice specifically exempts cases in which the Sovereign delegates to a private individual (a Company will be in the same position) his Sovereign powers. Consequently, the only question open for argument is whether in making and repairing the road in question, the Government acted in the exercise of private rights. The cases quoted by Mr. Narasimha Aiyangar, in which the Secretary of State was held liable for the negligence of a servant employed in a State Railway, cannot afford much assistance in this case. A State Railway is managed by the Government for commercial purposes, although it secures considerable benefit to the public. I have felt doubts whether the maintenance of the military road is done in the exercise of Sovereign functions. The absence of any profit, the securing of the public benefit alone, are some indicia of the act having been done in the public capacity. Mr. Narasimha Aiyangar has been unable to draw our attention to any authority which defines Sovereign functions. The policing of a Province, the constitution and control of the various departments of the State may be instances of the exercise of Sovereign rights. But where the sole object of the Government in carrying out a project is the public good and no ideas of profit are in contemplation, prima facie, the business cannot be said to have been done in the discharge of private duties, but only in the exercise of administrative powers vested in the State or Sovereign.

As I felt some doubts regarding the correctness of this position, I examined the American Law to find out under what category of duties the maintenance of roads comes in. It seems clear from the passages I shall refer to that the laying of roads is a Governmental or Sovereign function. Questions of this kind are considered in America with reference to the liability of Municipal Corporations for the negligence of their servants. The right to sue Municipal bodies in India may not rest on the same considerations as in America. Much will depend upon the legislative enactment which has brought these institutions into existence. And as pointed out in Secretary of State for India v. Hari Bhanji (14), the measure of exception from liability of Boards and Municipalities will depend upon how far their powers are defined by the Act constituting them. Apart from these special considerations, the authorities in America indicate definitely and clearly that the maintenance of roads is carried on in the exercise of public functions and that consequently negligence in relation to them will not be actionable.

In 28 Encyclopædia at page 834 it is pointed out that there are three modes of establishing a public highway: (a) "by the State in the exercise of its Sovereign function;" (b) "by the Municipality, as its agent," and (c) "by dedication, prescription or statutory proceedings." In the same volume it is stated at page 1340: "In the absence of Statutes imposing liability it has been held in some jurisdictions that the duties of a Municipal Corporation with regard to its streets are Governmental and that it is not liable to an individual injured by its failure to keep them in repair or safe for travel." The distinction between public or Governmental and corporate or private duties has been pointed out in Hart v. Bridgeport (18): "Public duties are, in general, those which are exercised by the State as a part of its sovereignty, for the benefit of the whole public, and the discharge of which is delegated or imposed by the State upon the Municipal Corporation. They are not exercised either by the State or the Corporation for its own emolument or benefit, but for the benefit and protection of the entire population. Private or Corporate powers are those which the city is authorised to execute for its own emoluments or from which it derives special advantage or for the increased comforts of its citizens, or for the well-ordering and convenient regulation of particular classes of the business of its inhabitants, but are not exercised in the discharge of those general and recognized duties which are undertaken by the Government for the universal benefit." The citations I have made are applicable to the present case. In the first place, this is not a road maintained by a Local Board or Municipality. Consequently it is strictly within the exercise of Governmental duties that this road is made and maintained. In the second place, if the position of the East India Company is analogous to that of Municipal Corporations in America, even then it is clear that the Company will not be liable for the negligence of its servants in failing to keep the road in good repair.

I must hold, therefore, that this case comes under the exception suggested by Sir Barnes Peacock in P. and O. S. N. Company v. Secretary of State for India (1). The subject of liability for the negligence of public servants is elaborately discussed by the learned Chief Justice in Ross v. Secretary of State (2). The question which we have to decide, namely, whether the act complained of in this case was done in the exercise of Sovereign powers, did not arise for decision in that case. The learned Government Pleader, relying on the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Shivabhajan v. Secretary of State for India (19) and of the learned Chief Justice in the case already referred, contended that as the Executive Government is vested in the Governor-in-Council by section 56 of 3 and 4 William IV, Chapter 85, the maintenance of the military road is not a liability incurred on behalf of the Governmet of India and consequently, the Secretary of State is not liable. For a proper solution of this question, it will be necessary to investigate between the relative powers of superintendence possessed by the Government of India and the Government of Madras in relation to the Public Works Department. We have not sufficient materials before us for that purpose. It would also necessitate an inquiry into the correctness of the concession made by the Advocate-General in Vijaya Ragava v. Secretary of State for India (20), that the Secretary of State is liable for all illegal acts of the Governor-in-Council, Fort St. George. I do not propose to go into these questions, as I have come to the conclusion on the records before us that the injury caused in this case wat not due to negligence resulting from the exercise of other than Sovereign or administrative powers by the Government of Madras. I would, therefore, reverse the decrees of the District Judge and dismiss the suits.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 6 as amended by Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy Act (I of 1908)—Special limitation—Suit by a co-sharer landlord for his share of rent, whether governed by Art. 6.

The special limitation provided by Article 6 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as amended by Act I of 1908, Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy Act, governs an application for execution of a decree obtained by a co-sharer landlord for his share of the rent in a suit to which the other co-sharers were not parties, the decree being for a sum of money not exceeding Rs. 500

Thakomoni Dassi v. Mohendra Nath Dey, 3 Ind. Cas. 389; 10 C. L. J. 463, followed.

K. B. Dutt v. Gostha Behari Bhuiya, 17 Ind. Cas. 207; 16 C. L. J. 379; 16 C. W. N. 1006, dissented from.

Article 6 is applicable when the decree has been made in a suit between landlord and tenant to whom (and not to which) the provisions of the Act are applicable, it being immaterial that all the provisions of the Act are not applicable.

Mrityunjoy v. Bhola Nath, 20 Ind. Cas. 833; 18 C. L. J. 81; followed.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Rangpore, dated the 15th March 1913, affirming that of the Munsif, Gaibandha, dated the 28th November 1912.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in these appeals is, whether an application for execution of a decree obtained by a co-sharer landlord for his share of the rent, in a suit to which the other co-sharers were not parties, the decree being for a sum of money not exceeding Rs. 500, is governed by the special limitation provided by Article 6 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act as amended by Act I of 1908, Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy Act.

Under that Article an application for execution of a decree made in a suit between landlord and tenant to whom the provisions of the Act are applicable, and not being a decree for a sum of money exceeding Rs. 500, must be made within three years of the date of the decree. The decree in each of these cases did not exceed Rs. 500 and was made more than three years before the date of application for execution, and the question, therefore, is whether the decrees were made in suits between landlord and tenant, to whom the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act are applicable.

Now, a co-sharer landlord is a landlord, though he may be in separate collection of his share of the rent under an arrangement with the tenant. The suits, therefore, were between landlord and tenant. Then, some of the provisions of the Act are applicable to a co-sharer landlord, though not all. So that unless it is necessary that all the provisions of the Act should apply, the cases come within the purview of Article 6 of Schedule III of the Act. It has, however, been held that it is sufficient if some of the provisions apply.

The question has been considered in several cases by this Court. In Thakomoni Dassi v. Mohendra Nath Dey (1), Mookerjee and

(1) 3 Ind. Cas. 389; 10 C. L. J. 463.

Vincent, JJ., held that an application for execution of such a decree obtained by a co-sharer landlord is governed by Article 6. In a later case, K. B. Dutt v. Gostha Behary Bhuiya (2), Brett and Sharf-ud-din, JJ., held that the Article does not apply to a decree obtained by co-sharer landlords. The learned Judges, however, observed:—"The suit was not one brought by the present petitioners as co-sharer landlords under the provisions of section 148A or section 153B of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and, in such circumstances, the decree which they obtained was a simple money-decree, and, so far as we can ascertain from the materials before us, there is nothing to indicate, that in that decree, the petitioners invoked the application of the provisions of any section of the Tenancy Act. In our opinion, the present case is distinguishable from the case of Thakomoni Dassi v. Mohendra Nath Dey (1), on which the lower Courts relied, so that, even if we were prepared to follow the decision in that case, as to which it is not necessary for us in this case to express any opinion, it would not, in our opinion, be applicable to the facts of the present case". The distinction relied upon apparently was that in the earlier case two provisions of the Act were applied for the benefit of the landlord, viz, that a decree for damages was made at the full rate mentioned in section 68, and article 2 (b) of Schedule III was applied to enable the landlord to obtain a decree for rent for four years, whereas if the provisions of the Act were inapplicable, he could have obtained a decree for rent only for three years, and interest only at the contract rate. In the present cases also, it appears that damages at the full rate mentioned in section 68 were awarded in some of the suits, and some of the suits were decreed for rents for four years. So the distinction relied upon by Brett, J., exists in these cases also.

K. B. Dutt's case (2) has not been followed in subsequent cases. In Khetra Mohan Chatterjee v. Mohim Chandra Das (3), Carnduff and Beachcroft, JJ., said that they were disposed to follow the views expressed in Thakomoni Dassi v. Mohendra Nath Dey (1) rather than the later ruling of Brett and Sharfuddin, JJ., in K. B. Dutt v. Gostha Behary Bhuiya (2). In a still later case, Mrityunjoy v. Bhola Nath (4), Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., declined to follow K. B. Dutt's case (2), and pointed out that that case overlooks the fundamental fact, that Article 6 is applicable where the decree has been made in a suit between landlord and tenant to whom (and not 'to which') the provisions of the Act are applicable. They observed: "The vital point to determine is, consequently, whether the provisions of the Act are applicable to the landlord and tenant between whom this suit has been instituted: it is immaterial that all the provisions of the Act are not applicable to the suit", and following Thakomoni's case (1) held that the decree was barred by limitation. Again, in Appeal from Order No. 562 of 1912 (decided on the 26th January 1914) K. B. Dutt's case (2) was not followed and the view taken in Thakomoni Dassi v. Mohendra Nath Dey (1) and Mrityunjoy v. Bhola Nath (4) referred to above was accepted as correct. In Kedar Nath Banerjee v. Ardha Chunder Roy (5), Banerjee, J., in discussing Article 6 of the Act, as it stood before the amendment, pointed out "that the Article speaks not of decrees for rent, nor of decrees in suits between landlord and tenant, but of decrees made under the Act". In the Article as amended, the words are "decree or order made in a suit between landlord and tenant to whom the provisions of this Act are applicable".

We are of opinion that the Article as amended applies to the decrees in the present cases. The appeals must, accordingly, be dismissed.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 236 OF 1914.
December 18, 1914.

Present.—Justice Sir George Knox, Kt., Mr. Justice Rafique and Mr. Justice Piggott.

In the matter of SHAMBHU DIYAL.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s 4—Instrument of partition—Full duty paid—Second instrument affirming first with minor alterations—Duty payable—Interpretation of Statute—Fiscal enactment.

Act No. II of 1899 is a fiscal enactment and its provisions should be construed in favour of the subject.

S and B executed an instrument setting forth a family arrangement regarding their joint property. The deed was stamped as a deed of partition. Subsequently the two brothers executed another instrument, providing inter alia that the original deed of agreement should remain in force after certain alterations entered into later on and that both of them were to remain equally binding.

Held, that the principal deed having been charged with the full duty prescribed in Schedule I for settlement of property, the later instrument was chargeable with a duty of one rupee only.

Stamp reference made by the Hon'ble Board of Revenue of the United Provinces.

Mr. Ryves, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the chief controlling Revenue Authority of these Provinces made under section 57 of Act II of 1899. The facts out of which it arises are stated by the Board of Revenue to be that on the 2nd of July 1912, Raja Shambhu Dial and his brother Babu Brij Kishore executed an instrument setting forth a family arrangement regarding their joint property. The instrument was taken to the Collector of Cawnpore in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the same Act and was held to be an instrument of partition chargeable with a duty of Rs. 925. This duty was paid. On the 23rd of August 1912, the two brothers took another instrument before the same Collector for adjudication as to proper stamp duty to be paid. This instrument provided inter alia that the original deed of agreement, namely, of 2nd July 1912, should remain in force after certain alterations entered into later on. Both deeds were to be equally binding. The alterations referred to were (1) some alterations on purely nominal matters which need not be considered; (2) instead of the sum of Rs. 1,600, fixed for travelling expenses in the deed of prior date, the sum of Rs. 1,500 was to be substituted, out of which Rs. 1,000 was to go to Raja Shambhu Dial and Rs. 500 to Babu Brij Kishore; (3) the sum of Rs. 12,000, assessed value of the house, kothi, and garden, was raised to Rs. 15,000. This was to be paid by Raja Shambhu Dial to Babu Brij Kishore. The period of payment which had been fixed as one year was extended to one and half year; (4) the ahata was to be made over to Babu Brij Kishore without any compensation whatever; (5) Raja Shambhu Dial was to pay in any case the sum of Rs. 3,000, in the marriage ceremony of Babu Brij Kishore's daughter; (6) a garden out of the joint stock was to remain in the sole possession of Raja Shambhu Dial and Rs. 2,300 were to be given to Babu Brij Kishore. The original deed of agreement was to remain in force except so far as the above alterations were concerned. The Board of Revenue considered that the case fell within the principle laid down in the ruling of this Court in Civil Miscellaneous Case No. 79 of 1912 and were of opinion that the later instrument was a fresh instrument of partition to be stamped ad valorem. We sent for the ruling cited by the Board of Revenue. We are agreed that it has no bearing whatever upon the case before us. The obvious intention of the contracting parties was that the settlement of certain moneys and properties covered by the deed of 2nd July 1912 should be re-adjusted. No new property was introduced into the second deed. Both deeds were contingent upon the coming to pass of other events which were at the time of execution events in the future. The intention was that they were to form and to be regarded as one deed. After carefully considering the language used in both deeds and remembering always that Act II of 1899 is a fiscal enactment, that its provisions should be construed in favour of the subject, we hold that the present case falls within the purview of section 4 of the Act. The principal instrument has been charged with the duty prescribed in Schedule I for settlement of property. The later instrument is chargeable with a duty of one rupee only. A copy of this our judgment under a seal of the Court and signature of the Registrar will be sent to the chief controlling Revenue Authority.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 168 OF 1913.
February 1, 1915.
Present:—Mr. Justice Twomey.
MAUNG KYAW—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. II, r. 2—Res judicata—Cause of action—Suit for redemption dismissed—Second suit on basis of promise to allow redemption, maintainability of—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 12—Appeal re-heard on application for review—Second appeal—Limitation.

When an application for review of an appeal is admitted and the appeal is re-heard and a fresh decree dismissing the appeal is passed on grounds different from those on which the appeal was originally dismissed, a fresh period of limitation for appeal begins to run from the date of the new decree.

The plaintiff-appellant first sued the defendant-respondent for redemption of a piece of land on the basis of a mortgage for Rs. 280, but failed; subsequently he brought the present suit, alleging the same set of facts but basing the suit on the 1st defendant's promise to allow redemption on payment of Rs. 400, for which sum the land had been sub-mortgaged to the 2nd and 3rd defendants. The lower Courts found the promise proved, but dismissed the suit as barred by res judicata and Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that the suit is not barred by res judicata or by Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, as the suit is not based on the mortgage but on a subsequent promise to allow redemption, which is an entirely new cause of action.

If a man promises to deliver land for an agreed price and fails to fulfil his promise, there is nothing to prevent the Court from decreeing specific performance of the contract.

Mr. Halkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. May Oung, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal would be barred by limitation if time were to be reckoned from the date of the first decree in the District Court. But the District Judge admitted an application for review, re-heard the appeal and passed a fresh decree dismissing the appeal on grounds different from those on which his predecessor had dismissed it. In these circumstances a fresh period of limitation began to run from the date of the new decree. [See Joykishen Mookerjee v. Atoor Rohoman (1) and Soudamoni Dasi v. Maharaj Dheraj Mahatab Chand Bahadur (2).]

The plaintiff-appellant had failed in a former suit to redeem the land in question. In that case it was alleged that the plaintiff's father mortgaged the land to the defendant's father orally for Rs. 280, that the 1st defendant refused to allow redemption for Rs. 280, but agreed to allow redemption for Rs. 400 for which sum the land had been sub-mortgaged to two other men, the 2nd and 3rd defendants. Subsequently, however, the sub-mortgagees, 2nd and 3rd defendants, opposed the redemption for Rs. 400 and the 1st defendant-respondent backed out of his promise to make over the land. It was held by the Township Court and on appeal by the District Court that the mortgage was not proved, and the suit was dismissed on that ground.

Plaintiff-appellant then brought the present suit, alleging the same set of facts and praying for enforcement of the 1st defendant's promise to allow redemption. The Township Court found that the promise was proved, but that this being merely a part of the negotiations for redemption the new suit was barred as res judicata. The District Court upheld this decision on appeal. But on review of the judgment the District Court accepted the plaintiff's contention that the new suit was not based on the alleged mortgage but on an entirely separate cause of action, namely, the subsequent promise to allow redemption. The District Judge held, however, that the promise was not one which could be specifically enforced by the Court and that the plaintiff-appellant's proper remedy was a suit for damages. No reasons are given for this view, which appears to be incorrect. If a man promises to deliver land for an agreed price and fails to fulfil his promise, there is nothing to prevent the Court from decreeing specific performance of the contract. The Judge's attention is drawn to the explanation to section 12, Specific Relief Act.

In this case the defendant did not actually contract to sell the land to the plaintiff. What the defendant promised was "to allow redemption for Rs. 400"; in other words, he promised not to oppose the plaintiff's claim as mortgagor provided that the plaintiff paid up enough to redeem the land from the 2nd and 3rd defendants. The 1st defendant in effect said: "I know nothing of the alleged mortgage by your father to mine and the land is not now in my hands, but in those of the 2nd and 3rd defendants. But as you say the land was mortgaged by your father to mine, I have no objection to redeeming from the 2nd and 3rd defendants and making over the land to you if you provide the requisite amount, Rs. 400, which they advanced on the land. I will not put you to the proof of your alleged mortgage".

The question is, whether this promise gave a fresh cause of action. I think there can be no doubt that it did. There was an express contract by the respondent to redeem the land for Rs. 400, to be provided by the plaintiff, from the 2nd and 3rd defendants and make the land over to the plaintiff. This was irrespective of the mortgage, proof of which the respondent inferentially waived. I think, therefore, that the 2nd suit on the contract was not barred by the rule of res judicata merely because the plaintiff had brought a previous suit on his alleged mortgage. Nor can it be held that the second suit was barred by Order II, rule 2. The cause of action on the alleged mortgage and on contract being distinct and seperate the rule has no application.

It is urged for the respondent that the contract was without consideration and is for this reason unenforceable. It was not without consideration. The proposed extinction of the 1st defendant-respondent's mortgage-debt to the 2nd and 3rd defendants-respondents was good consideration for the bargain he made with the plaintiff-appellant.

I set aside the decree of the lower Courts and direct that an account be taken of what is due to each of the 2nd and 3rd defendants by their mortgagor, the 1st defendant, and that on payment by the plaintiff-appellant to the 2nd and 3rd defendants of a sum not exceeding Rs. 400. less a two-third share of the plaintiff's costs in all Courts, the 2nd and 3rd defendants shall convey the lands in suit to the plaintiff-appellant, free from all incumbrances created by the defendants or any persons claiming under them, and shall put the plaintiff-appellant in possession of the property. The remaining one-third share of the plaintiff-appellant's costs shall be recovered by him from the 1st defendant-respondent.

Appeal allowed.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Benares, dated the 15th March 1913.

Dr. S. M. Suleman, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case has had an unfortunate history. Musammat Munni Kunwar, the plaintiff, sued for recovery of possession over a certain house. Her case was that the defendant Madan Gopal, who was her father-in-law, conveyed the house in question to her by a sale-deed dated the 24th of September 1901 and that she subsequently permitted him to reside in the same up to the year 1912. Being then desirous of occupying the house herself to the exclusion of the defendant, she served the latter with a notice to vacate the house, and the cause of action is stated to have accrued to her on the 24th of February 1912, the date of the defendant's refusal to vacate the house in accordance with the notice. The defendant replied that he had executed the sale-deed in suit in favour of his daughter-in-law without any consideration, as a colourable and fictitious transaction, and had remained in possession of the house ever since as proprietor. He alleged that his son Bishnath Singh, husband of the plaintiff, having subsequently died, the plaintiff had gone to live with her own father and was now bringing this suit in collusion with her father, although both of them were perfectly aware of the fictitious nature of the sale-deed of the 24th of September 1901. The case went to trial upon a plain issue of fact as regards the alleged fictitious nature of the sale-deed and the passing or otherwise of the consideration. At a very late stage of the case, it seems to have occurred to the learned Munsif that there was evidence on the face of the record to show that the plaintiff Musammat Munni Kunwar must have been a minor in the month of September 1901. He seems to have thought that this incident might furnish a short cut to the determination of the suit, without necessitating a trial of any of the questions of fact raised by the pleadings of the parties. He framed a fresh issue, and eventually dismissed the suit on the ground that, whatever may or may not have happened at the time of the execution of the sale-deed of 1901, the fact that the plaintiff was then a minor was conclusive against her. This decision was affirmed by the District Judge on appeal. When the matter came before me in June last I found it necessary, for reasons which need not now be discussed, to remand the case in order that the plaintiff might have an opportunity of placing on the record certain evidence which had, in my opinion, been wrongly excluded at the trial in the Court of the Munsif. I asked the lower Appellate Court, after recording this evidence, to re-consider its decision in the light of that evidence, and to state whether the pleas taken in the first two paragraphs of the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court ought or ought not to prevail in the light of the evidence on the record taken as a whole. I am now inclined to think that, as I was remanding the case, I would have exercised a wiser discretion if I had insisted on a clear finding of fact as to the passing of consideration and as to the alleged fictitious nature of the sale-deed. It appears that, when the plaintiff originally led evidence in the Munsif's Court, the fact that she was a minor in the year 1901 was not present to her mind or to that of her legal advisers. The case put forward by her was that the money which formed the consideration for the sale was a gift to her from her father, and that she had negotiated the sale and paid over to the defendant the money thus received by her as a gift. When the question of minority was raised, the plaintiff appears, as the learned District Judge has remarked, to have very distinctly shifted her ground. She then led evidence to prove that her father had negotiated on her behalf the transaction of sale with the defendant, had paid over the money to the defendant on her behalf and caused a sale-deed of the house to be executed in her name. If this were so in fact, the transaction would really amount to an acquisition by the plaintiff's father from the defendant of a certain house and a gift of that house to the plaintiff by her father. The provisions of section 127 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) show that a gift in favour of a minor is not void, though it may be voidable at the option of the minor. I should feel no hesitation in holding that, if the facts were as above stated, the present suit would be maintainable. As the case stands, the learned District Judge has definitely disbelieved and rejected the evidence tendered by the plaintiff subsequenly to my order of remand. He holds that whatever else may have happened in connection with this contract of sale, it is not a fact that the sale was negotiated by the plaintiff's father and the purchase made by him on the plaintiff's behalf. I think it unfortunate that the Courts below should not have proceeded further and considered the effect of the plaintiff's change of attitude and the conflicting nature of the evidence tendered by her, with regard to the plain issues of fact raised by the pleadings as they originally stood. As the case stands I have no finding before me that consideration did or did not pass, or as to whether the execution of this sale-deed of the 24th of September 1901 was not after all, as the defendant has all along pleaded, a purely fictitious transaction. I have to look at the question of law raised in this way: Assuming for the sake of argument that in the month of September 1901, the plaintiff, being at the time a minor, negotiated the sale of the house in suit with the defendant and paid over certain money to the defendant, receiving in return the sale-deed which is the basis of the present suit, is that contract of sale void on the ground of the plaintiff's minority, or can the plaintiff be said to have become by virtue of this transaction the owner of the house in suit? The leading cases on the subject are the recent decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohori Bibi v. Dharmodas Ghose (1) and in Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed (2). The Madras High Court in Novakoti Narayana Chetty v. Loyalinga Chetty(3), has interpreted these rulings as laying down in the broadest terms the principle that a sale in favour of a minor is void. The reasoning of the learned Judges in arriving at this decision commends itself to my mind and I do not think it necessary to reproduce it here. It has been suggested that the current of decisions in this Court has always been in another direction from the time of the earliest case on the point, that of Behari Lal v. Beni Lal (4), in which a mortgage in favour of a minor was affirmed. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohori Bibi's case (1) pointed out that there had been some conflict of decisions in the Indian Courts, and considered it necessary to review the whole question of a contract to which a minor was a party with reference to the special provisions of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872). Any rulings prior in date require to be reconsidered with reference to the principles laid down by the Privy Council. The nearest case in the plaintiff's favour is that of Ulfat Rai v. Gouri Shankar (5). It was there pointed out that the Transfer of Property Act in itself contains no provision which makes a minor incapable of being a transferee of immoveable property. That case, however, required to be considered with reference to its own facts. The transfer was one by the minor's certificated guardian in favour of the minor. The transaction as a whole certainly admitted of being regarded as a gift subject to a condition, and such transfer by way of gift would be voidable at the option of the minor under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, to which I have already referred. It is quite true, as has been pointed out by this Court in more than one case, [Vide Rashik Lal v. Ram Narain (6)], that there is a fundamental distinction between a contract and a conveyance; but it seems to me that this point might be stated with equal accuracy by saying that a conveyance is a contract plus something more. At any rate, as the learned Judges of the Madras High Court have pointed out in the ruling already referred to, a conveyance by way of a sale either is in itself a contract or at any rate involves or implies an antecedent contract. On the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases already referred to, it seems to me impossible to avoid the conclusion that a contract of sale negotiated by a minor, the minor having settled the terms, paid consideration and received in return a deed purporting to convey immoveable property by way of sale, is altogether void ab initio, and that no title thereby passed to the minor.

This suit as brought must, therefore, fail. It has been suggested that, in the alternative, the plaintiff should be given a decree for the refund of the purchase-money. I may remark at once that I could not do this without once more remanding the case to the Court below for a definite finding as to whether the alleged sale consideration did or did not pass from the plaintiff to the defendant. It seems to me, however, that from any point of view the claim is not one which can be entertained in the present suit. It was not expressly put forward in the plaint, and it is now sought to base it on the general prayer for any other relief, which is contained in the last paragraph of the plaint. If the plaintiff is regarded as claiming this refund of the sale consideration as money payable by the defendant for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use (Article 62 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act IX of 1908), then the claim is time-barred, because it does not appear to have been brought within three years from the plaintiff's attaining majority. For the same reason the claim cannot be sustained, as it perhaps might otherwise have been, as a claim for relief on the ground of fraud. The only other suggestion which has been, or can be, put forward on behalf of the plaintiff is that the claim for refund of purchase-money might be sustained as a claim for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails. In that case Article 97 of the Schedule already referred to would apply; but it would be for the plaintiff to show when it was that the consideration failed. There is authority in the case of Amna Bibi v. Udit Narain Misra (7) for giving the plaintiff in a case somewhat analogous to the present a decree for refund of the money paid, and for applying Article 97 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act to such a suit. In that case, however, as also in a similar case reported as Venkataramá Aiyar v. Venkata Subrahmanian (8), there had been a previous suit resulting in an adjudication between the parties in consequence of which the plaintiff had failed to obtain the property for the price of which he claimed in the second suit; limitation was held to run against the plaintiff from the date of the final decision in the first litigation holding the plaintiff's claim to the property to be unenforcible. If these principles are in fact applicable to the present case, it may be that the plaintiff will have a cause of action from the date of the dismissal of the present appeal; but that is not a matter as to which it is necessary for me to express a final opinion in order to dispose of this appeal. So far as this claim for refund of purchase-money goes, I hold that the plaintiff, supposing her to be in fact entitled to such refund, has either a cause of action which has become barred by time or a cause of action which has not yet arisen and will arise only on the failure of the present suit. For these reasons I dismiss this appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 64 OF 1914.

December 3, 1914.

V. BALAKRISHNA MUDALIAR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

V. RAJU MUDALIAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Partition—Status—Intention to divide—Presumption when one co-parcener divides.

If the male members of a joint Hindu family wish to become divided in status they are at liberty to agree to do so, and on their so agreeing, they become divided in status even though the properties are not actually divided between them by metes and bounds. A definite and unambiguous expression even by one member of his intention to separate himself and enjoy his share in severalty may amount to separation. A definite partition of properties by metes and bounds is not essential to constitute a definite division in status between co-parceners. The presumption, when one of several co-parceners becomes divided, is that the others also have become divided in status.

Appeal from the decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Wallis, dated the 14th August 1913, passed in the exercise of the ordinary original jurisdiction of this Court in Civil Suit No. 151 of 1912.

Mr. K. Ramanath Shevai, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Etheraja Mudaliar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff, the first defendant and one Muthurama Mudali were the three sons of one T. V. Srinivasa Mudali. They were undivided co-parceners till 1897. One of them, Muthurama Mudali, was then absent at Rangoon. The other two brothers had disputes with each other about partition and on the 8th of May 1897 they asked five persons to divide the ancestral properties between them as panchayatdars. If the male members of a joint Hindu family wish to become divided in status, they are at liberty to agree to do so and on their so agreeing, they become divided in status even though the properties are not actually divided between them by metes and bounds. That has been held in the case of Segu Chidambaramma v. Segu Balayya (1), decided by Abdur Rahim and Spencer, JJ. As their Lordships of the Privy Council have stated in the case reported in Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (2), a definite and unambiguous indication even by one member of his intention to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty may amount to separation. The cases in Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpati Koer (3) and Balkishen v. Ram Narain Sahu (4) also establish that definite partition of properties by metes and bounds is not essential to constitute a definite division in status between co-parceners. I, therefore, agree with the learned Judge that the plaintiff and the first defendant became divided in status in 1897, as they then came to a clear mutual understanding to the effect that their interests thereafter shall be separated and they executed the muchilika, Exhibit A, to the arbitrators merely to get separate possession of separate properties.

This suit, brought on the footing that no division in status had ever taken place, might be dismissed on the sole ground that the foundation of it, namely, the allegation "that the plaintiff and the first defendant are members of an undivided Hindu family" (see paragraph 3 of the plaint), is non-existent. Taking it, however, that this is a suit by a tenant-in-common for a partition of properties held in common, it has again to be remarked that of the three co-parceners, one (Muthurama) admittedly became divided in status in 1899. It has been held by the Privy Council in several cases, including the two cases already mentioned, that the presumption when one of several co-parceners has become divided is that the others also have become divided in status. The division in status is also made almost conclusive by the fact that the plaintiff and the first defendant in December 1900 executed separate deeds of maintenance, making the executant of each of the two deeds separately liable to pay to the mother Rs. 1-4-0 monthly. Bearing in mind all these facts, I think that the evidence of the first defendant that the properties had also been divided between himself and the plaintiff by the arbitrators and that no property was left to be enjoyed in common between them, is very probable and ought to be accepted; and the burden which lies heavily on the plaintiff to prove that the house and the lands were left undivided by metes and bounds, cannot be held to have been discharged by him. The mother of the plaintiff and of the first defendant (D. W. 2) supports the first defendant by her evidence on the question that the house was divided by lots and that definite shares fell to each of the two brothers. There is no sufficient reason why she should help one of her sons against the other. The question whether the division took place on the very day after the date of Exhibit A (8-5-97) or whether it took place only on some other date before the date of the maintenance-deeds I and II (29-12-1900), is not very important. In the result I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s.2 (d) —Consideration—Third party, right of, to sue—Plaintiff not privy to contract—Defendant, liability of, when arises—Equity.

A plaintiff cannot make a defendant liable upon a contract to which the plaintiff was not privy, but in such cases as the defendant would be held liable in "Court of Equity" the Courts in this country should hold him liable.

A zemindar who is entitled to zemindari dues from his muafidar is not entitled to sue a lessee from the muafidar for the dues when he was not privy to the contract between his muafidar and lessee, although the lessee agreed in his contract to pay the zemindari dues, as the zemindar has no such equity against the lessee as a Court of Equity would enforce in his favour.

Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Tudball, dated the 12th December 1913, in Second Appeal No. 725 of 1912.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed semindari dues. They made defendants to the suit a certain muafidar and also two lessees from the muafidar. It is admitted that the semindars were entitled to dues (though not the amount claimed) from the muafidar. Under the terms of the lease the other defendants, that is to say, the lessees from the muafidar, undertook to pay the semindari dues. The plaintiffs mainly claimed against the lessees, but stated that for the sake of precaution the muafidar was also made a defendant and that if they were not entitled to a decree against the lessees they might have a decree against him. The lessees (the respondents to the present appeal) pleaded, first, that they were not liable to the plaintiffs, inasmuch as they had never entered into any contract with them, and secondly, that if they were at all liable the dues were not as claimed by the plaintiffs. The Court of first instance granted a decree against the present respondents exempting the muafidar. The respondents appealed with the result that the decree of the Court of first instance was confirmed. The plaintiffs preferred no appeal against the dismissal of their claim against the muafidar. In second appeal to this Court the decrees of the Courts below were set aside and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed. Against this decree the plaintiffs have preferred the present Letters Patent appeal.

The only point to be decided is, whether or not under the circumstances of the present case the plaintiffs were entitled to sue the defendants, the lessees. It is admitted that there was no privity of contract. It is also admitted that the respondents' liabilty (if any) is under the terms of their contract with their lessor, the muafidar. In our opinion the learned Judge of this Court was correct in the view he took. The learned Advocate on behalf of the appellants contends that wherever there is a contract under which a third party may obtain a benefit, he is entitled to sue upon that contract just as fully as he could do if he had been a party to it. We think that such a proposition is altogether too wide. In the present case it is pretty clear that if the plaintiffs thought it was to their advantage, they might even have refused to recognise the respondents as the persons liable to pay their dues. We may also point out that in many cases it would be extremely inconvenient that parties should be sued by persons who were no parties to the contract. On the strict words of the present contract the lessees were liable to pay "the semindari dues," and yet we find that there is a difference of opinion between the plaintiffs and the respondents as to the amount of these dues. The plaintiffs never agreed to accept the respondents as the persons to whom they would look for the payment of their dues. They never in any way altered their position in consequence of the contract which the respondents entered into with their lessor. We think there can be no doubt that the general rule is that a party cannot make another person liable upon a contract to which the suing party was not privy. There are no doubt exceptions to this rule. We think that it may fairly be said that in all such cases as the defendant would be liable in a "Court of Equity," the Courts in this country should hold him liable. But we do not think that the present is a case in which a "Court of Equity" could grant the plaintiff relief. The case of Nawab Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begum (1) has been cited. In that case there was a marriage arrangement between the defendant and the father of the plaintiff, whereby the defendant agreed to pay Rs. 500 a month to the plaintiff and charged certain property with the payment of the money. It was held that the plaintiff, although no party to the contract, was entitled to enforce it. At page 413 of the Report their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "Here the agreement executed by the defendant specifically charges immoveable property for the allowance, which he binds himself to pay to the plaintiff; she is the only person beneficially entitled under it. In their Lordships' judgment although no party to the document, she is clearly entitled to proceed in equity to enforce her claim."

The case of Touche v. The Metropolitan Railway Warehousing Company (2) was also quoted. There the plaintiff had done work at the instance of a promoter of a Company. The Articles of the Association provided that in certain events the sum of £2,000 would be paid to one of the promoters for the plaintiff who had done the work. It was held that the plaintiff could get the money from the Company. A copy of the Articles of Association had been sent to the plaintiff, he had done the work and the Company had got the benefit of his labours.

In the case of Deb Narain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan Mandal (3) it was also held that the plaintiff, though not a party to the arrangement between the defendant and the third party, was entitled to be paid a sum of Rs. 300 and interest. At page 142 the facts of the case are briefly stated by the learned Chief Justice: "On the 22nd July 1899, defendants Nos. 1 to 4 borrowed from the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 300, and, by way of security for this, they gave a personal covenant by a registered bond, and also purported, though ineffectually, to create a charge, by deposit of a patta relating to immoveable property. Interest was paid on this bond up to the 13th of April 1903; and, on the 18th of August 1903, defendants Nos. 1 to 4 executed a registered instrument of transfer of all their property, moveable and immoveable, to defendant No. 5 for a sum of Rs. 2,000, becoming thereby, as the plaintiff describes it, 'rightless.' This Rs. 2,000 was not all paid in cash, but there was a provision and declaration in the kabala that out of this consideration money of Rs. 2,000, amongst other things, the sum of Rs. 330 due to the plaintiff should be paid by defendant No. 5. On the very same day there was an arrangement between the plaintiff and defendant No. 5 by which the liability of defendant No. 5 under the transfer was acknowledged and accepted, and either then or in connection therewith this patta was handed over to defendant No. 5."

It is clear that in all these cases the plaintiff had an "equity" which would always have been enforced by an English Court of Equity. The facts of the present case, as already pointed out, are quite different. We think the view taken by the learned Judge of this Court was correct and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 187—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 2—Will not proved in Probate Court, when can be used as evidence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 32 (5)—Relationship, existence of—Adoption—Mutt, kinds of—Succession.

Notwithstanding section 187 of the Succession Act, which is incorporated in the Hindu Wills Act, a Will not proved in the Probate Court may be cited in evidence for a purpose other than the establishment of a right as executor or legatee.

Subunnai Gupta v. Bharat Mandal, 26 Ind. Cas. 980; 20 C. L. J. 148, Surbomungola v. Mohendronath, 4 C. 506; Janaki v. Dhanu Lal, 14 M. 454; Coralapatti v. Cota, 3 Ind. Cas. 475, 33 M. 91; Basanta Kumar v. Gopal Chandra Das, 26 Ind. Cas. 21; 18 C. W. N. 1136, referred to.

The relationship between a mohunt and his chela is a relationship by adoption within the meaning of clause (5), section 32, of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872). A statement in a Will that the testator has one chela and has no other chela is a statement relating to the existence of a relationship and is admissible in evidence under that clause.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, dated the 15th February 1912.

Babus Provas Chandra Mitter and Satis Chandra Bose, for the Appellant.

Babus Sarat Chandra Ray Chowdhury and Charu Chandra Bhattacharjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question in controversy in this appeal relates to the right of succession to the office of Mohunt of a Hindu religious institution, known as the Khumbakal mutt, situated in the interior of the District of Cuttack at a distance of about 40 miles from the headquarters. In 1906, and for some years before, Raghabananda Das was the Mohunt. He died on the 13th November 1906 and left, it is said, a Will executed and registered on the day of his death. His chela Sriram Das succeeded to the office of Mohunt and continued as such only for a brief period, as he died on the 28th September 1907. He left, it is alleged, a Will executed on the day of his death. Immediately after his death, Jagannath Das laid claim to the office of Mohunt on the allegation that he was his gurubhai or co-disciple. The claim was resisted on behalf of an infant Achyutananda Das, who, it was said by his supporters, had been taken as chela by Sriram Das and was consequently entitled to succeed him as Mohunt. This led to proceedings under the Land Registration Act before the Revenue Authorities; one of these was decided against Jagannath Das on the 25th March 1909, while another had terminated in his favour on the 20th February 1909. The result was that on the 11th October 1909, Jagannath Das commenced this action for declaration that as the gurubhai of Sriram Das, he had lawfully succeeded to the office of Mohunt, and that Achyutananda Das, the pretended chela, had no claim thereto and was in fact an impostor set up by persons anxious to seize the properties of the endowment. The Subordinate Judge has found on the evidence, first, that the plaintiff Jagannath Das was the senior chela of Raghabananda Das, and secondly, that Achyutananda Das, the defendant, was not the chela of Sriram Das. In this view, the Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit. The defendant has appealed to this Court, and has contended, first, that the plaintiff was not the chela of Raghabananda Das, and, secondly, that he himself had been taken as chela by Sriram Das. Before these questions are discussed, it is necessary to determine the rule of succession applicable to this endowment.

It is the common case of the parties that the Khumbakul mutt is a maurusi mutt. As was explained in the case of Mohunt Rama Nuj Dass v. Mohunt Deb Raj Das (1) mutts are of three descriptions, viz., maurusi, panchayeti and hakimi. In the first, the office of chief Mohunt is hereditary and devolves upon the chief disciple of the existing Mohunt, who, moreover, usually nominates him as his successor; in the second, the office is elective, the presiding Mohunt being selected by an assembly of Mohunts, in the third, the appointment of presiding Mohunt is vested in the Ruling Power or in the party who has endowed the temple. The Subordinate Judge has found that in a maurusi mutt, the chela succeeds, and in default of a chela, the gurubhai succeeds; and, where there are more chelas than one, the eldest generally succeeds, but a junior chela may succeed, if he be found more capable and if he be selected by the last Mohunt as his successor. This is in accord with the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Greedharee Doss v. Nundokissore Doss (2), Genda Puri v. Chatar Puri (3), Ramalingam v. Vythilingam (4). Consequently, as the only law applicable to the Mohunts, their offices, functions and duties, is to be found in the custom and practice applicable to the particular institution, the plaintiff must prove that he is the chela of Raghabananda Das and that the defendant is not the chela of Sriram Das. He must succeed on the strength of his own title and not on the infirmity, if any, in the title of the defendant.

Before we deal with the oral evidence on the record, it is necessary to consider the two Wills alleged to have been executed by Raghabananda Das and Sriram Das respectively. The Subordinate Judge was called upon to examine the question of the genuineness of the two Wills, as Letters of Administration have not yet been taken on the basis of either document. It has been explained that no application was made for Letters of Administration, in view of the decision of this Court in the cases of Jib Lal Gir v. Jaga Mohan Gir (5), Sarup Dassin v. Hari Charan Dass (6), Prosonno Kumari Debi v. Ram Chandra (7) and Jagadindar Nath v. Madhusudan Das (8) viz., that as the Mohunt is not the owner of the property of the mutt, a person claiming to be his successor cannot, on his death, apply for Letters of Administration in respect of the mutt property. This view has been controverted with reference to the decision in Ranjit v. Jagannath Prosad (9), but it is unnecessary to determine this point, because notwithstanding section 187 of the Indian Succession Act, which is incorporated in the Hindu Wills Act, a Will not proved in the Probate Court may be cited in evidence for a limited purpose. That section merely provides that no right as executor or legatee can be established in any Court of Justice, unless a Court of competent jurisdiction shall have granted a Probate of the Will under which the right is claimed or shall have granted Letters of Administration with the Will or with a copy of an authenticated copy of the Will annexed; this does not debar the use of a Will in evidence for a purpose other than the establishment of a right as executor or legatee: Sukumari Gupta v. Bharat Mandal (10), Surbomungola v. Mohendronath (11), Janaki v. Dhanu Lall (12), Ouralapatti v. Oota (13) and Basanta Kumar v. Gopal Chandra Das (14). Consequently, in the case before us, a reference to the terms of the Wills, though neither has been proved in the Probate Court, is permissible, if the genuineness is satisfactorily established and if reference to the terms is not made with a view to establish the right of a person as executor or legatee. Now, as regards the Will of Raghabananda Das, the Subordinate Judge has pronounced in favour of its genuineness. The Will was executed on the day of his death and was registered. On the evidence, there is no question that the document was executed by Raghabananda Das; the only point for consideration is, whether he had testamentary capacity at the time. He died of cholera in a lodging at Cuttack; he was attacked with the disease on the night previous to the date on which he died. The Will was made on the morning of the day on which he died, and the plaintiff suggested in the Court below that he was then unconscious. The Subordinate Judge has refused to adopt this view, and we are disposed to accept his conclusion, although the appearance of the signature of the executant tends to indicate that he must have been at the time very feeble; but there is no reason to distrust the positive testimony that the public asked the Will to be read over and he gave his assent to the terms embodied therein. As regards the Will of Sriram Das, which is said to have been executed by him at the mutt on the 28th September 1907, the Subordinate Judge has pronounced against its genuineness. The appellant has failed to convince us that this view is erroneous. The evidence of its execution is by no means satisfactory, and it is inconceivable that the plaintiff should have been allowed, without a protest; to assume the office of Mohunt after the death of Sriram Das, if the latter had left a Will in favour of the defendant. On the other hand, the evidence of the medical attendant, Kasi Prusti, shows that the illness of the deceased was pronounced hopeless two days before his death, and that he was unconscious on the day of his death. On the whole, we are not prepared to disagree with the Subordinate Judge in his view that the alleged testator was, on the day of his death, not in a condition to make a valid testamentary disposition.

The first question for consideration is, whether the plaintiff was, as alleged by him, a chela of Raghabananda Das and, consequently, the gurubhai of Sriram Das. The oral evidence adduced by the plaintiff upon this point has been rightly characterised by the Subordinate Judge as overwhelming and of the most reliable character. The witnesses, who speak to the initiation ceremony of the plaintiff, are men of position and means, and no intelligible reason has been assigned why they should conspire to set up a false case. Reference may be made particularly to the evidence of Dharamdas, the Mohunt of Arang, Radhamohan Santra, the shebait of an endowment in the neighbourhood, Pran Krishna Das and Kishori Charan Das, two zemindars, and Gopal Das, the Mohunt of Bara Akhra, to which the Khambakul mutt is subordinate. There is, on this oral evidence, no room for doubt that Raghabananda Das had two chelas, the senior, Jagannath, and the junior, Sriram. Against this view, the weightiest evidence brought forward by the defendant is the recital in the Will of Raghabanand that he had no one else as his chela except Sriram Das. There has been considerable discussion at the Bar upon the question of the admissibility of this statement in evidence. On behalf of the defendant, it has been argued that the statement is admissible under clause 5 of section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. That section—we quote so much of it as is material for our present purpose—is in these terms: "Statements, written or verbal, of relevant facts made by a person who is dead, are themselves relevant facts in the following cases: (5) when the statement relates to the existence of any relationship by adoption between persons as to whose relationship by adoption the person making the statement had special means of knowledge and when the statement was made, before the question in dispute was raised." On behalf of the plaintiff, it has been argued that the section should be strictly construed and that the statement in question should be excluded, first, because it relates not to the existence but to the non-existence of a relationship, and, secondly, because the relationship between a Mohunt and his chela is not a relationship by adoption. On behalf of the defendant, it has been argued that the section should be liberally construed, and that it is only by liberal construction that the view taken in the case of Ram Chandra Dutt v. Jogeswar Narain Deo (15), affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (16) and Dhanmull v. Ram Chaunder (17), can be defended. In answer, it has been contended by the plaintiff that the view taken in these cases viz., that a statement as to date of birth or marriage of a person is admissible as a statement relating to the existence of relationship, though in accord with illustrations (l) and (m) of section 32 is opposed to the view taken in Bepin Bihary v. Sreedam (18), Satis Chunder v. Mohendra Lal (19) and Ram Krishna v. Monindra Mohan (20). It is not necessary for our present purpose to determine whether the fluctuation of judicial opinion indicated in the two sets of decisions mentioned is more apparent than real, and whether they may not be reconciled by a recognition of the principle that a statement as to the time of commencement of a relationship is so indissolubly associated with the existence itself of the relationship, that it may be rightly regarded, without undue stretch of language, as a statement which relates to the existence of that relationship: Oriental Government Security Life Assurance Company Ld. v. Narasimha Chari (21), Patinharkuru v. Raman (22). But whatever view may be adopted upon that question, it does not directly affect the points raised before us for consideration, viz., first, is the relationship between a Mohunt and his chela a relationship by adoption, and, secondly, is a statement that A has one chela B and has no other chela a statement relating to the existence of a relationship? We are of opinion that both these questions should be answered in the affirmative. In the first place, there is no reason why the term "adoption" should be interpreted in a restricted sense; the expression that A has adopted B as his chela is found in judicial decisions of the highest authority.

In the second place, the expression "relates to the existence" is obviously very comprehensive and need not be construed in the narrow sense suggested by the plaintiff. This view is in accord with the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mohunt Bhagaban v. Mohunt Ram Praparna (23). In that case, the contest for the office of Mohunt lay between one Raghu Nandan, who claimed to be the gurubhai of the deceased Mohunt Hoygrib (both of them chelas of Chatturbhuj), and Bhagaban, who claimed to be the chela of Hoygrib. The plaintiff contended that the defendant was not the chela of Hoygrib, while the defendant asserted that the plaintiff was not the chela of Chatturbhuj, and, consequently, not the gurubhai of Hoygrib. A petition by Chatturbhuj, adduced in evidence, contained the statement that he had no other chela or heir besides Hoygrib; and this was sought to be used to disprove the allegation of Raghu Nandan that he also was a chela of Chatturbhuj. The statement was treated as admissible in evidence, but was held to be not conclusive. We hold accordingly that the statement of Raghabanand in his Will, dated the 13th November 1906, that Sriramdas was his chela and that he had no other chela has been rightly admitted in evidence. The only question is whether, as Sir Richard Couch said in Mohunt Bhagaban v. Ram Praparna (23), having regard to the other evidence in the case, the statements in the Will should be accepted as true. In our opinion, the question must be answered in the negative. It is clear on the oral evidence that the plaintiff Jagganath, though the senior chela from the point of view of the date of his initiation, was younger in age than Sriram. As is explained by Mohunt Gopal Das, Sriram was not only older than Jagannath but was more intelligent. It is further plain that Jagannath had, on one occasion, attempted to commit suicide, and was sentenced to simple imprisonment for one month. This may have displeased his guru Raghabananda, who obviously intended to have him superseded by Sriram; and with a view to strengthen the position of the latter, whom he expressly nominated as his successor, he may have stated in his Will that he has no other chela. This could not possibly prejudice the right of Jagannath to succeed as Mohunt, should Sriram die without a chela. We hold accordingly that, notwithstanding the statement of Raghabananda in his Will, the oral evidence establishes satisfactorily that Jaggannath was the senior chela of Raghabanand.

The second question for consideration is, whether the defendant Achyutananda was adopted as a chela by Sriram. The story for the defendant is that he was taken as chela by Sriram on the day of his death. The Subordinate Judge has disbelieved the oral evidence on this point, and we are not prepared to hold that he has taken an erroneous view. In the first place, it is plain from the evidence on the side of the plaintiff that Sriram was, on the day of his death, in a more or less unconscious condition, and was not physically able to perform the elaborate ceremonies essential for the initiation of a chela. In the second place, the alleged Will of Sriram puts forward an entirely different story viz., that the defendant was taken as chela, six years earlier, when a boy only three years old, during the life-time of Raghabananda himself; whoever may have manufactured the the Will, whether on the day of or immediately after the death of Sriram, did not venture to put forward the story of the initiation of the defendant on the day of the death of Sriram. In the third place, it is indisputable on the evidence that at the mahotsab ceremony held on the thirteenth day after the death of Sriram, the plaintiff was installed as the Mohunt in the presence of a large assembly of Mohunts and respectable men. No claim appears to have been put forward on behalf of the defendant as the chela of Sriram. If the defendant had been so recently adopted as chela, it is inconceivable that his supporters should have allowed the installation of the plaintiff to go unchallenged. The case for the defendant is certainly not improved by the suggestion that the plaintiff was allowed to assume the office of Mohunt, because he had been appointed by the Will of Sriram as the guardian of the defendant. On the other hand, it is plain that this was an ingenuous device, adopted by the framers of the Will, to propitiate the plaintiff, if possible, and to secure his acquiescence in the claim subsequently put forward on behalf of the defendant. We feel no hesitation in holding that the defendant is not the chela of Sriram Das.

We confirm accordingly the two-fold finding of the Subordinate Judge, viz., that the plaintiff is the chela of Raghabanand and consequently the gurubhai of Sriram, and that the defendant is not the chela of Sriram. In this view, the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Sri RAMACHANDRA MARDRAJA DEO, MINOR, BY THE GUARDIAN, THE COURT OF WARDS, REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF GANJAM—PLAINTIFF AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Suit to recover balance of principal and interest due on registered lease—Part payment by lessee accompanied by letter—Letter, whether acknowledgment.

A registered lease provided that the rent was payable in four instalments on the 15th days of November and December 1901 and January and February 1902. The lessee made a payment of Rs. 20 on the 15th of February 1905, when he wrote to the plaintiff asking that the sum be credited to the account on the lease. The plaintiff sued on the 20th April 1910 to recover the balance of the principal and interest.

Held, that the letter of the 15th of February 1905 contained a clear admission that the rent was then due, from which an implied promise to pay whatever was actually due might be inferred, and was sufficient to save the bar of limitation.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Ganjam, in Original Suit No. 24 of 1910.

Mr. Patanjali Sastri, for Mr. P. Narayanamurthy, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues to recover the balance of principal and interest due on a registered lease for Fasli 1311. The four instalments were due on 15th days of November and December 1901 and January and February 1902. The suit was instituted on 20th April 1910. To save limitation the plaintiff relies on Exhibit A, dated the 15th February 1905, as an acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act, and also on a payment of Rs. 20 sent with Exhibit A, which was alleged to be a part payment within the meaning of section 20.

The District Judge has upheld both pleas. Exhibit A, which is signed by the defendant, runs as follows: "In respect of the mustagari lease of Kodali village in Khalodamuta in Otugada taluk, Viswanath Santo sent Rs. 20 through the barber of Sanaloka village. The same should be credited to the chitta (or account) and receipt granted."

The District Judge says the payment is expressly made towards the rent due for Kodali village for Fasli 1311. In our opinion it contains a clear statement that the Rs. 20 was paid on account of the rent, and was to be credited in the rental account. This appears to contain a clear admission that the rent was then due, from which an implied promise to pay whatever was actually due may be inferred, and is sufficient to save the bar of limitation, Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (1). The District Judge has also held that the Rs. 20 sent with Exhibit A was a part payment of the principal of a debt, within the meaning of section 20, and that in Exhibit A the fact of the payment appeared in the handwriting of the person writing the same, within the meaning of section 20, although Exhibt A was written and signed before the actual payment. Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 8—Sirsa Tahsil—Wajib-ul-arz—Occupancy-tenant — Butamari, whether confers per se occupancy rights—Principle.

Section 6 of the Wajib-ul-arz of Mouza Rampura, Sirsa Tahsil, prepared in 1862 and revised in 1882, cannot be construed to imply that butamari per se confers an occupancy right. But as the village was barani and the demand for tenants great, up to 1882, at all events, land personally broken up in or before 1882, and since cultivated by occupancy-tenants, must be held to rest in them as occupancy-tenants under section 8 of the Punjab Tenancy Act Petition for revision against the order of the Collector, Hissar, dated the 23rd May 1898, affirming that of the Assistant Collector, Sirsa, Hissar District, dated the 28th March 1898.

Pandit Sham Das, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Brown, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—(September 21st, 1898).—It seems to me that the plaintiffs can only succeed on the precedent of the Diwan Khera case, if the facts are identical, and that Mr. Agnew's careful judgment shows material divergence in the facts. There remains the question of the effect of the wajib-ul-arz entry. Broadly it would be an unreasonable precedent to establish to find that tenants who broke up waste, whether shamlat deh or patti, long after 1862 i. e., probably nearer 1877 than 1862, were ipso facto entitled to occupancy rights under section 8, Punjab Tenancy Act, unless the wajib-ul-arz entry made any other interpretation out of the question, and further, the question would be influenced by the rent paid. I request the Collector to send me (1) a close translation of the wajib-ul-arz entries (2), a statement of the rent rate paid, (3) information as to when the shamlat deh became shamlat of two or more owners only (Mandas and Biram Das), (4) whether any breakers of banjar have since 1882 (the year of the Financial Commissioner's decision in the Diwan Khera case) been, as such, made occupancy tenants.

Returns to be sent as early as possible.

This order covers all four revision applications Nos. 406, 407, 408, 409.

ORDER.—(April 7th, 1899).—From the Collector's return, dated 16th February 1899, giving cover to a report by Mr. Humphreys, Assistant Collector, dated 6th February 1899, both of which are to be read as part of this Court's judgment—the Assistant Collector's report from the words "Report re Collector's order dated 5th January 1899"—the answers to the points referred, omitting for the moment No. 1, are as follows:—(2) registered occupancy tenants pay at a rate under 6 annas the cultivated bigha, which is apparently the rate plaintiffs have paid out since last settlement, (3) the partition occurred in S. 1919 (A. D. 1862), or 20 years before Mr. Wilson's settlement of 1882, (4) no instances are established. As to (1), the translation of the wajib-ul-arz filed shows that in paragraph 6 are "mode of breaking up Banjar"; the conditions were that the owners first and after them the occupany-tenants "shall have the right to break up waste land and in the event of their refusing to do so, land will be given to another person." This clause was apparently originally inserted in the 1862 Settlement and repeated in that of 1882. Its broad and obvious intention was to encourage the breaking of waste by owners, occupancy-tenants and outsiders put in by the lambardar or owners in the order named. The condition suited owners as it brought them income, and it suited Government and was no doubt inserted at the instance of the Settlement Officer in 1862 in order to benefit Government to some extent by strengthening the village. Mr. Agnew, the Collector, makes a great point in this case that the wajib-ul-arz para. related only to shamlat deh, not shamlat patti. Had this been intended the intention would have been made clear, but from the omission and remarks just made, I am convinced that the waste referred to was waste generally, whether held by the owners composing a village or only a part of village. In this case the partition took place in Sambat 1919 or A. D. 1862, twenty years before the 1862 entry was repeated in the 1882 Settlement. Here a question arises as to what rights the breaking up of waste conferred. Evidently if the return about rent rates is correct, it did not per se put occupancy tenants breaking up the waste in as high a category as that in which they stood with reference to their older acquired lands, for which they were recorded as occupancy-tenants. It did not do so because otherwise they would have been entered in the annual papers as occupancy-tenants, and not as tenants-at-will, and would have paid a lower rent rate than 6 annas a bigha.

As to the alleged agreement on which the tenants rely, it was, if made, oral, and cannot be proved. At the same time some such agreement was usual, so long as there was plenty of waste and a scarcity of tenants. Indeed it is on the face of it improbable that a man would break up waste without a guarantee of possession at a limited rent rate for at least a term of years: without such a protection it is inconceivable that the occupancy-tenants (plaintiffs in this case) would have extended their cultivation. I understand that in the approaching Settlement there will be a large number of disputes of the present type, that is, the landowners will try to eject occupancy-tenants and others who have under a clause in the wajib-ul-arz, such as the No. 6 in this case, broken up cultivated waste, and the butamars will appeal to the wajib-ul-arz entry as giving them occupancy rights. The reason why the question of status has become a burning one is either increase of population or more probably, as here, the fact that canal irrigation is being or has been extended to the village.

Considering the fact that clause 6 only gave the right to break up waste, but is silent as to what status such butamari confers, it cannot be held that butamari per se confers an occupancy right. As to whether it does not, must turn on whether or not at the time butamars were scarce, in a position, so to say, to make their own terms, and the advantages of getting new land brought under the plough were great to the landowners. A decision on this point will partly depend on the rents taken. Applying the above principle to this case, it is clear that as the village was barani—a canal is only now, I understand, being brought to it—and the demand for tenants great, up to 1882 at all events, land personally broken up in or before 1882 and since cultivated by occupancy-tenants must be held to rest in them as occupancy-tenants under section 8, Punjab Tenancy Act. This view I see is very much that taken by Mr. (Sir James) Lyall as Financial Commissioner in the Diwan Khera case, Appeal No. 5 of 1881-82.

It follows then that these four revision petitions must be accepted.

Parties are summoned.

ORDER.

Parties are present and each represented by Counsel, Mr. Brown for Defendants and Pandit Sham Das for Plaintiffs. For the landlords it is urged that the 1882 entry was a mere repetition and that had butamari conferred occupancy rights that status would have been recorded as held by the butamars, and further that as registered occupancy-tenants pay at about -/3/- a bigha and these men pay at -/5/- or about that, the rent rate shows that they have no occupancy rights. For the tenants the entry is appealed to and the fact is pointed out that waste began to be broken up in 1872 and continued to be so broken until long after 1882. On the whole it is pretty certain that no close inquiry preceded the repetition of the old entry of 1862 in the "revised" wajab-ul-arz of 1882, and that the butamars were not in 1882 given occupancy-rights, because there was no judicial order conferring such rights and the entry itself was vaguely worded. The conclusion to which I come is that each plaintiff is entitled to occupancy-rights under section 8, Punjab Tenancy Act, in respect of all land broken up and since held by him or his predecessor-in-interest in or before 1882, and that in respect of land subsequently broken, the question depends on the finding of fact as to in what year landlords had occasion to stop the further breaking of waste in their own interest, that is, in what year from any cause the competition changed from one for tenants on any terms almost to one for land amongst tenants at such terms as the landlords cared to dictate. I accept all four applications and reversing the Collector's order, decree plaintiffs' occupancy-rights under section 8, Panjab Tenancy Act, in respect of all land broken up by them or those from whom the present tenants inherit up to 1882, the actual plots in each case having now to be ascertained and decided by the Collector or Assistant Collector; as to other broken up land, the question of fact has to be decided viz., the year in which landlords ceased to find it to their interest to get waste broken up by tenants with occupancy-rights. I refer now all four cases for inquiry and decision, as the question of fact as regards each point has to be decided. I may add here that Counsel for defendants-landlords admits that in their case the fact that land was shamilat patti and not shamilat deh is immaterial. In any case the landlords were very few.

Each party will pay his own costs throughout.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Suit on promissory note—Endorsement of payment—Body in plaintiff's handwriting—Endorsement signed by debtor—Sufficient acknowledgment of liability.

Where an endorsement on the back of a promissory note written by the plaintiff and signed by the debtor ran as follows: "Rs. 164-5-0 was paid in respect of the promissory note:"

Held, that the endorsement was a sufficient acknowledgment of liability under the promissory note within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act.

Visvanatha Santhasingarao v. Ramchandra Mardraja Deo, 27 Ind. Cas. 744; 17 M. L. T. 78, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Ganjam at Berhampore, in Appeal Suit No. 317 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the principal District Munsif of Berhampore, in Original Suit No. 459 of 1911.

FACTS.—The facts and the questions of law bearing on the case appear fully from the following Judgment of the District Judge:—

"The plaintiff is the appellant. He sued to recover Rs. 883-2-0, balance of principal and interest due on a promissory note, dated 11th March 1903, executed by the 1st and second defendants in his favour. Defendants Nos. 3 to 6 are sued as the sons of the first defendant. It was alleged in the plaint that the suit is not barred, as payments were made and endorsed on the pro-note.

2. The defendants admitted execution of the note but denied the genuineness of the third endorsement but for which the suit would be barred. It was admitted that the first and second endorsements are genuine and the only dispute was about the third endorsement. The District Munsif held that the payment and endorsement in question were not proved to have been made and signed by first defendant. He also held that even if they were proved the suit was barred, as admittedly the body of the endorsement was written by the plaintiff and only the signature was alleged to have been made by 1st defendant, and section 20 of the Limitation Act required the fact of payment should appear in the handwriting of the debtor.

3. Two points arise for determination:—

1. Whether the endorsement in dispute was signed by the first defendant?
2. If so, does it save limitation?

As regards the genuineness of the third endorsement, there is the evidence of the plaintiff on the one side and no evidence on the other. It is admitted that the 1st and 2nd endorsements are genuine and they were also written by the plaintiff and signed by the party who made the payment. I see no reason to hold that the third endorsement is not genuine, especially as the defendants have adduced no evidence on the point and have not even ventured to give evidence. The chief reason that is given by the District

Munsif is that the endorsement is not attested and that it is not usual for endorsements to be written by the creditor unattested. The District Munsif has not noted the fact that the two admitted endorsements are also written by the plaintiff and are not attested. The District Munsif states that the plaintiff is a respectable man, but is of opinion that there might have been a lapse of virtue on his part as the amount at stake is large. I am of opinion that there is no reason to disbelieve the uncontradicted evidence of the plaintiff, especially as the defendants have made no attempt to show by comparison of signatures or otherwise that the endorsement is not genuine.

5. The next question is as to the legal effect of the endorsement. It is admitted that the body of it was written by plaintiff. It runs as follows: "Rs. 167-15-0 was paid in respect of (notu sambandu) the promissory note," and is signed by the first defendant. Section 20 of the Limitation Act requires that in the case of part payment of the principal of a debt the fact of the part payment should appear in the handwriting of the person making the same. In Santishwar Mahanta v. Lakhikanta Mahanta (1), Dharam Das v. Ganga Devi (2) and Joshi Bhaishankar v. Bai Parvati (3), it has been held that the whole of the entry relating to part payment should be written by the person making it and that the mere signature of the person is not sufficient.

6. It has been held in Mallabhushi Seshacharlu v. Singara Seshayya (4) that a signature by a mark would, in cases where a person could not write, be a sufficient compliance with the terms of section 20 of the Limitation Act. In Ellappa Nayak v. Annamalai (5) it was held that the mark of the payer subscribed to an endorsement not in the handwriting of the payer is sufficient to satisfy the provisions of section 20 of the Limitation Act. Both these cases were those of an illiterate payer and it is clear from the judgment in Madhabhushi Seshacharlu v. Singara Seshayya (4), which is followed in the case of Ellappa Nayak v. Annamalai (5) that it proceeded on this fact. Their Lordships' judgment runs as follows: "We consider that signature by a mark would be, under the circumstances, a sufficient compliance with the Act." These decisions were followed in Jamna v. Jaga Bhana (6), where it was held that a mark put by an illiterate payer under an endorsement of payment would be a sufficient compliance with section 20 of the Limitation Act.

7. In referring to the two Madras cases above cited, their Lordships in Mukhi Haji Rahmatulla v. Coverji Bhuja (7) observe in their order of reference to the Full Bench as follows:—"It is enough to say that those cases do not apply to the present case. In them the 'person making the payment' could not write; and as far as possible the fact of the payment appeared in his handwriting." The judgment of the Full Bench also proceeds on the ground that the Madras cases are outside the subject of the case they were dealing with. In Santishwar Mahanta v. Lakhikanta Mahanta (1) their Lordships held that where a debtor can write, it is impossible to hold that an endorsement written by another person signed only by the debtor is sufficient under section 20.

8. The wording of section 20 of the Limitation Act is clear and unambiguous and whatever reasons there might be to put a liberal construction on the section in cases where the person making the payment is illiterate, there is no reason to extend the principle laid down in the two Madras cases to case of persons who are literate and write the endorsement of payment as well as sign it. I am, therefore, of opinion that the endorsement does not extend the period of limitation.

9. It is argued by the appellant's Vakil that even if the endorsement is invalid under section 20 of the Limitation Act, it will still save limitation as an acknowledgment. The endorsement runs as follows:—"In respect of this note payment made is Rs. 164-15-0." There is no acknowledgment that anything further will be due on the note after the endorsement and payment recited therein, and I have not been referred to any case where the mere fact that a certain sum has been paid and endorsed on a bond has, in the absence of any words in the endorsement acknowledging that any more is due, been held to be an acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act. In Shearman v. Fleming (8) it has been held that the words 'a remittance of 40 b to old account,' do not amount to sufficient acknowledgment or liability. Lutchumanan Chetty v. Mutta Iburaki Marakkayer (9), where it was held that the entry "Rs. 50 paid" is not sufficient, is also in point.

10. I am of opinion that the endorsement is not an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act."

JUDGMENT.—Following the decision in Appeal No. 124 of 1911 [Viswanatha Santhasingarao v. Ramchandra Mardraja Deo(10)], we hold that there was a sufficient acknowledgment of liability under the promissory note by the endorsement, dated 7th February 1909 (signed by the 1st defendant), to entitle the plaintiff to take advantage of section 19 of the Limitation Act.

We, therefore, set aside the decree of the learned District Judge and remand the case for fresh disposal of the Appeal Suit No. 317 for 1912 filed in his Court. Costs of this second appeal will abide.

ANUP SINGH AND OTHERS—OBJECTORS—APPELLANTS

versus

SOHAN SINGH—APPLICANT—RESPONDENT.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 6, 7 —Will and codicil in favour of minor son—Death of minor—Right of executor to Probate—Guardian of minor, whether can take Probate.

Where the principal beneficiary under a Will and codicil was the testator's minor son and the codicil made the applicant guardian till majority of the person of the minor and gave all the property to his charge, directing him to pay off all testator's debts and to give maintenance to the testator's wife and where during the pendency of the probate proceedings the minor beneficiary died

Held, (1) that both the Will and the codicil were genuine documents and the fact that they were not registered did not render them suspicious,

(2) that if the codicil did make the applicant executor, then he must have Probate irrespective of the possible effect of the minor's death;

Musammat Bali v. Musammat Hussain Bibi, 55 P. R. 1894 and Indar Narain v. Onkar Lal, 10 Ind. Cas. 30, 20 P. R. 1912, 141 P. L. R. 1911; 283 P. W. R. 1911, followed.

(3) that the direction in the Will making the applicant guardian of the minor beneficiary did not make him an executor and was not sufficient for grant of Probate.

Seshamma v. Chennappa, 20 M. 467 and Gopal Das Agarwala v. Budree Das, 33 C. 657, 10 C. W. N. 662, followed.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 3rd March 1913, rejecting the application of the objectors.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., and Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals—Nos. 637 and 2407 of 1913—are intimately connected. Sardar Sohan Singh, respondent in both appeals, having applied for Probate of the Will and codicil, dated respectively 11th May 1910 and 21st August 1910, of the late Sardar Natha Singh, various persons lodged caveats. The principal beneficiary under the Will and codicil was testator's minor son, who died during the pendency of the case in the Court below, i.e., in April 1912. It was objected thereupon that the application for Probate must abate in consequence of the boy's death, but in an order, which is the subject of the earlier of the two aforesaid appeals, the learned District Judge held that the application did not abate. The application case was then proceeded with, and on 30th August 1913, the same Court granted Probate and ordered Anup Singh, objector, to pay Rs. 500 costs. This order has led to the filing of Appeal No. 2407 of 1913. I have heard the two appeals argued together and will dispose of both in one judgment.

Mr. Sheo Narain, on behalf of Anup Singh and others, objectors, argues the case under four heads, namely :—

ANUP SINGH v. SOHAN SINGH.

(i) Is the Will with codicil genuine and enforcible, i.e., was it really executed by the late Sardar Natha Singh and was he of sound disposing mind at the time ?

(ii) Can Sardar Sohan Singh be properly described as an executor and so be held entitled to ask for probate ?

(iii) Does not the death of the minor aforesaid deprive Sardar Sohan Singh of all locus standi ?

(iv) In any case is not Rs. 500 an excessive sum as costs against Anup Singh ?

As regards (i) I have read the evidence. Certain respectable persons, not shown to be interested in Sohan Singh, applicant, or to have any reason for speaking falsely in his favour, have testified that the Will was executed in their presence by the late Sardar Natha Singh when in possession of his senses. Similarly witnesses of the same type testify to the execution of the codicil. On the other hand, evidence has been given that the man was very ill and was not in his senses. Further Mr. Sheo Narain argues that, if these documents had been genuine, they would have been registered. In my opinion there is no good reason for doubting the genuineness of either document, one point very strongly in favour of applicant being that Mr. Sheo Narain admits that, whereas by the Will some property was left to him, by the codicil this was taken away and he was merely made guardian of the minor. This does not look like fraud or undue influence on the part of the applicant. I hold that both documents are genuine. The testator was undoubtedly very ill, and I see no force in the argument that the non-registration of them renders them suspicious. It was probably out of the question for him to travel to the Sub-Registrar's office. At the same time prima facie a man dying of gout is not out of his senses some weeks before his death.

As regards (ii) I have read the two documents (Exhibits P1 and P2). In the former, applicant is merely a legatee; in the latter he comes, directly and indirectly, into clause (c) which gives all the property to the charge of applicant, except one square bequeathed to Sundar Singh, and makes applicant guardian till majority of the person of the minor; (d), which directs applicant to pay off all testator's debts out of the property in applicant's charge; (e), which directs that maintenance be given to Musammat Harnam Kaur, (one of the wives—she is now dead), who is to stay with the minor; (f) under which up to Rs. 1,000 is to be spent on the marriages of Musammat Bibi Banto and Musammat Basant Kaur.

The question is whether this makes him an executor or whether he was merely to be guardian of the person and property of the minor.

I have been referred to several authorities, (see foot-note*) which I have read. Probate can be granted only to an executor appointed by the Will—section 6 of the Act. An executor means "a person to whom the execution of the last Will of a deceased person is, by the testator's appointment, confided"—see section 3. "Execution" is not defined. Appointment may be "express or by necessary implication," section 7. Here there is no express appointment, and I very much doubt whether Sohan Singh was made executor by necessary implication. The Illustrations to section 7 are clear cases and do not help here. There is in the Will proper not the smallest indication of executorship in Sohan Singh. The codicil was executed after the son was born. Question (iii) above I must decide on the lines laid down in Musammat Bali v. Musammat Hussain Bibi (1) and Indar Narain v. Onkar Lal (2). If the codicil, as it stands, makes Sohan Singh executor, then he must have probate irrespective of the possible effect of the minor's death, which is a question outside the scope of this proceeding.

Of the rulings quoted in the foot-note ante the second, fourth, ninth and tenth need no discussion, being obviously of little or no use here. The tenth is a case of a universal legatee, held executor on this account plus a direction to pay debts, and the rest are such clear cases, each based on its peculiar facts, as to afford no general guidance. Of the remaining seven cases three viz., Hamabai v. Nasarvanji (3), Monohur Mookerjee, In the matter of (4) and Kripamoyee Dasi v. Mohim Chandra Dutt (5), are in favour of respondent-applicant. In the first, a wife is appointed guardian of testator's minor children in order that of all his property she should carry on the management (until his youngest son should attain 22 years of age) and in the testator's name the management of his firm. In the second, the head-note is defective. It is not a sufficient description of the Will there that A was to receive and pay the testator's debts and to get in and distribute his personal estate. A was to receive the profits of the entire properties mentioned in the Will for nine years after testator's death, and to pay therefrom all debts and legacies; and testator's other sons were not entitled to claim any of those profits or to call for accounts; and at the end of nine years A was to make over the properties aforesaid to certain specified persons. In the third, the testator appointed his wife shebait to an idol and to administer the rest of his estate. In all these cases it was held that an executor had been appointed by implication; but I am unable to see that the facts tally with those before me.

Of the cases per contra Vittal Doss, Ex parte (6) is a case where the Will merely made two sons universal legatees and it was ruled that they were not executors by implication. This ruling seems at variance with Radhika Mohan Sett, In the goods of (7), tenth in foot-note, but I do not think I need decide between the two. Even if the Bengal ruling is the more correct,—it is distinguished in the Madras ruling—the facts here are quite different. Seshamma Chennappa (8) is a case that seems to me exactly in point, a case of persons appointed to take care of an estate during the minority of a son to be adopted and to provide for the maintenance of persons named. The Will there did not expressly include a direction to pay debts, but it included all that is in clauses (c) and (e) of the codicil before me, and the direction to pay debts was clearly implied in the words "to take care" of the estate during minority of the beneficiary. Gopal Das v. Budree Dass (9) lays it down that words in a Will making persons "trustees, i. e., guardians and next friends" are not sufficient for grant of probate. Kuppayammal v. Ammani Ammal (10) does not help much: in it a direction in a Will that petitioner should out of certain property pay certain debts, did not entitle her to probate. I follow Seshamma v. Chennappa (8) and Gopal Dass v. Budree Dass (9), and find against the petitioner, who, in my opinion, is no executor.

The appeals are accepted and the grant of Probate, together with order that the objector do pay Rs. 500 costs, is cancelled with costs throughout. Pleader's fee Rs. 100.

Appeals accepted.

BHULU SARDAR v. MAYAN JAMADAR.

In absence of the second Munsif on leave, the District Judge assigned the Small Cause Court cases of the second Munsif's jurisdiction to the 3rd Munsif In one of those cases the 3rd Munsif made an order under section 23 of the Small Cause Courts Act, that the case involved complicated questions of title and should be tried by the Court in its ordinary jurisdiction and that as he had not the local jurisdiction to try the case, it should go to the Court which had the local jurisdiction. The second Munsif, who had by that time returned, disregarding the said order of the third Munsif tried the suit as a Small Cause Court case and decreed it Held, that the action of the second Munsif in trying the case as a Small Cause Court suit within his jurisdiction, notwithstanding the order under section 23 by the third Court, was incompetent and illegal.

In the matter of Small Cause Court Suit No. 531 of 1914 of the Munsif, second Court, Diamond Harbour, exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghosh, for the Petitioner.

Babu Girija Prosanna Roy Chowdhury, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The cause of action of the suit giving rise to this Rule arose within the jurisdiction of the second Munsif at Diamond Harbour. The gentleman occupying that position took leave and there was an order by the District Judge assigning the Small Cause Court cases of his jurisdiction to the third Munsif at Diamond Harbour. This case, therefore, went to the third Munsif of Diamond Harbour. On the 29th April 1914, he made an order under section 23 of the Small Cause Courts Act that the case involved complicated questions of title and should be tried by the Court in its ordinary jurisdiction; and that as he had not the local jurisdiction to try the case it should go to the Court which had the local jurisdiction. This case, therefore, went to the second Munsif who had by that time returned. The learned second Munsiff, disregarding the order of the 29th April 1914, made by the third Munsif under section 23 of the Small Cause Courts Act, tried the suit as a Small Cause Court case and decreed it. The present Rule was obtained by the defendants, on the ground that in the face of the order under section 23 made by a Court of competent jurisdiction the trial was incompetent.

It is contended by the learned Vakil who appears to show cause that the order, dated the 29th April 1914, was without jurisdiction and, therefore, the trial was competent. The ground of this argument is that the second Munsif who took leave returned from leave in February 1914, and that with his return the order of the District Judge transferring the local jurisdiction to the third Munsif in respect of Small Cause Court cases was at an end. There is nothing before us from which we can find that the order of the learned District Judge assigning the jurisdiction to the third Court was thus limited. But even if it had been so limited, we think that under section 13 of the Bengal, North-Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act the order passed by the third Munsif upon a case pending before him would not be incompetent notwithstanding that the jurisdiction in respect of it had not been assigned to him at that time by the District Judge. Whether, therefore, the order assigning the jurisdiction to the third Court was limited to the period of the leave of the Second Munsif or not, we think the order passed by the third Court on the 29th April 1914 was a competent order and the second Munsif who came into the case subsequently could not as a Court of concurrent jurisdiction act in defiance of it. We think, therefore, the action of the learned second Munsif in trying this case as a Small Cause Court suit within his jurisdiction, notwithstanding the order under section 23 by the third Court, was incompetent and we set aside the decree and direct that the case be sent back to that Court to be tried in accordance with law. The Rule is made absolute with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Rule made absolute.

THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE—

COMPLAINANT—RESPONDENT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 49 (4), 103 - Offence under s. 103, essential element of —Inference—Conviction, when sustained.

In order to constitute an offence under section 103 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the intent to give undue preference or diminish the divisible assets is essential and unless it is shown that that is the natural result of an accused person's action such an intent cannot be inferred.

Where an accused (a member of a firm declared insolvent), under rights given to him under section 49 (4) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, transferred to his wife property in consideration of the private debts owed by him to her and where the existence of the fraudulent intent requisite for a conviction for an offence under section 103 (b) is not established, no conviction for an offence under that section can stand.

Appeal from the judgment and order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Bakewell, dated the 14th October 1913, made in the Original Insolvency Jurisdiction of the High Court in Insolvency Petition No. 205 of 1910, in the matter of P. M. Enayathulla Sahib and others, Insolvents.

Mr. M. D. Deva Doss, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. C. Adam, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted of an offence under section 103 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act in relation to a sale-deed, Exhibit A, executed in favour of his wife, Jaina Bi, on 18th October 1910, in respect of certain immoveable ancestral properties of his, on the 21st November 1910. The firm of P. M. Enayathulla Sahib and Co., of which appellant was a partner was adjudged insolvent and the charge against the appellant is that he executed Exhibit A fraudulently with intent to give an undue preference to his wife over other creditors of himself or his firm, or to diminish the sum to be divided among such creditors.

We may state at once that we have not been referred to any evidence indicating that the appellant had other private creditors: and that the only insolvency proceedings are against the firm above named.

Exhibit A recites that the consideration for the sale was a sum of Rs. 7,000, which the appellant had applied to his own purposes out of amounts recovered by him on his wife's behalf in execution of a partition decree in Original Suit No. 113 of 1908 on the file of the Madras High Court. It is not disputed that the appellant so recovered about Rs. 25,500; and under a power-of-attorney from his wife, deposited the money in the insolvent firm opening an account in her name. This was in 1908. At various times, this account was debited with sums aggregating Rs. 11,334-8-10. According to the appellant, only Rs. 4,307-12-9 of this amount was really spent on his wife's behalf, the balance of Rs. 7,026-12-1 being utilised for his own purposes without her consent or authority. This sum of Rs. 7,026-12-1 is identified with the round figure of Rs. 7,000 mentioned in Exhibit A.

There can, we think, be no doubt that all those withdrawals were made by the appellant as his wife's agent, and that the firm is not liable for the amounts withdrawn. This latter view is also taken by the learned Judge who convicted appellant.

Now, if the items making up this total of Rs. 7,026-12-1 were really applied by the appellant to his own purposes, it seems to us the charge must fail: and it would make no difference whether they were so applied with his wife's consent or without it. For in either case he, in his private capacity, would be accountable to her for this money; and under section 49 (4) of the Act, his private property would be primarily applicable to the satisfaction of such claims, and only the surplus would be dealt with as partnership property. In view of this provision of law, it could not be said that, in executing Exhibit A, appellant had given undue preference to his wife or diminished the amount to be divided among the partnership creditors.

The learned Judge, who convicted the appellant, has dealt with the matter from the point of view of criminal embezzlement which, indeed, seems to have been the line of defence mainly, if not solely, relied on before him; and has rejected this plea on the ground that want of authority for the application of the money to the appellant's private purposes has not been proved. We do not understand him to have determined whether as a fact the money was applied for the benefit of appellant or of his wife.

In the view which we are disposed to take, the question of authorisation is immaterial.

The Crown Prosecutor argues that, nevertheless, the burden of proving that the money was applied to the appellant's own purposes rests on him (appellant) and that if he fails to discharge it, it must be taken that there was no such application, that the money was applied for the benefit of his wife and that he was not accountable to her for it. This argument would have force if the facts prima facie constituting an offence under section 103 (b) were proved and the appellant was seeking to show that his action was to restore the consequences of his previous breach of trust, and that his real "governing motive" was not fraudulent. But it cannot prevail in the present case. This is a criminal prosecution and the prosecution must make out the facts primarily necessary to constitute the offence. Apart from the interpretation of the word "fraudulently" in section 103 (b), the intent to give undue preference or diminish the divisible assests is essential; and unless it is shown that this was the natural result of the accused person's action, it is difficult to see how such an intent can be inferred.

There is no evidence to contradict the appellant's statement of the application of the Rs. 7,026, and his Vakil is able to refer us to at least one item of Rs. 500 on 7th April 1909 which appears to have been passed straight to his own private account from that of his wife.

We must set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the release of appellant.

Conviction set aside;
Accused set at liberty.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Original Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 121, 514—Forfeiture of security bond in a separate proceeding, when not allowed.

If a Criminal Court, knowing that the person charged before it is under security to be of good behaviour, in sentencing that person in the case before it, makes no reference to any confiscation of that security and takes no steps towards its confiscation, it is not competent for that Court or any other Court in a subsequent and separate proceeding to take such steps.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Amritsar, dated the 17th February 1914, varying that of the Magistrate, first Class, Amritsar, dated the 4th August 1913, and ordering forfeiture of security.

Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Bevan Petman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Bega Singh was, on the 22nd November 1911, found in possession of a chari. He had already been bound down to be of good behaviour for one year in the sum of Rs. 500 with two sureties, Santa Singh and Chanda Singh, about eight months previously; and, before the term of his bond had expired, he was convicted for possession of the chari aforesaid and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment under the Arms Act, the sentence being, however, reduced to one year by the Chief Court.* In its judgment in the Chari case the Magistrate gave a very heavy sentence, because, to use the Magistrate's own words, "The accused is a notorious badmash No. 10. He has been twice bound under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and it seems that he is the leader of badmashes," and so forth. Further, if the statement of Bega Singh himself of the 9th April 1912 in that case is read, it will appear that the Magistrate was not unaware that the man before him was under security. Emperor v. Mowaz (1) is authority for the proposition that if a Criminal Court, knowing that the person charged before it is under security to be of good behaviour, in sentencing that person in the case before it, makes no reference to any confiscation of security and takes no steps towards its confiscation, it is not competent for that Court or any Court in a subsequent and separate proceeding to take such steps. It appears that this ruling exactly covers the present case, for the Magistrate, though he knew that Bega Singh was on security, took no steps, and nothing was done until, some time later, the Police moved the Magistrate to confiscate the bond.

Mr. Bevan Petman, the learned Government Advocate, while not altogether approving of the Full Bench ruling aforesaid, has intimated that he is unable to resist it in the present case. It is unnecessary, therefore, to discuss the remaining grounds for revision, for a finding on the above matter in favour of the petitioners settles the case. I should remark, however, that Mr. Bevan Petman seeks to draw some distinction between the case of Bega Singh himself and that of the sureties. But the Full Bench ruling aforesaid, and the rulings upon which the Judges then relied, do not seem to me to afford any warrant for any such distinction. For these reasons I allow this revision and cancel the order of forfeiture.

Revision allowed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 104 OF 1914.

August 3, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield.

MAHAMMAD KHASIM—PRISONER—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Murder—Circumstantial evidence—No direct evidence—Conviction, whether legal.

In a murder case stress can be fairly laid on the absence of direct proof and the inferential nature of the prosecution case. But where the evidence points to the accused alone and admits of no reasonable doubt, the accused can rightly be convicted.

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Cuddapah Division, in Case No. 5 of the Calendar for 1914.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 8th June 1914, upon perusing the petition of appeal and the record of the evidence and proceedings before the Court of Session, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, Counsel (amicus curiæ) for the Prisoner, and of Mr. J. C. Adam, for the Public Prosecutor, on behalf of Government, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 14th July 1914, the Court (Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—Appellant has been convicted of the murder of his wife, Sahib Bi, a young woman of 20, living with him in the village of Vontimitta, about 15 miles south-east of Cuddapah.

There can be no doubt that the deceased was brutally throttled by some one on the night of June 23rd 1913 and that her body was found about daybreak in an inner room of her husband's house.

According to the evidence there were no jewels on the corpse, but the jewels usually worn by deceased were produced by appellant's brother (prosecution witness No. 5) from a pot in the house. How they got there or whether she was wearing them before retiring to rest, is uncertain. Prosecution witness No. 5 deposes that he found them in the pot; but his original statement was to the effect that he himself took them from the body and placed them there. However this may be, it seems clear that robbery was not the object of the murder: and I may state here that no motive has been suggested for the commission of the murder by any person except appellant.

The evidence against the appellant is entirely circumstantial, and by its nature requires very careful scrutiny and consideration. As regards the relation of the appellant and deceased, there is evidence (which I see no reason to discredit) to the effect that the couple, who had been married about a year and a half, were, at any rate occasionally, on bad terms. The appellant is said to have been violent to his wife, and there is some evidence to show that he tried to induce her to get money for him from her people who lived at Cuddapah.

It is beyond dispute that on the evening of June 23rd, her uncle prosecution witness

No. 1, arrived from Cuddapah with the intention of taking her to her parents there, and I see no reason whatever to doubt the evidence of this witness and prosecution witness No. 2, the girl's mother, that she (prosecution witness No. 2) sent him because she had heard of fresh ill-treatment of the girl. On his arrival she was found not in her husband's house, but in that of his great-uncle (prosecution witness No. 7). He says she had simply come to his house for dinner in connection with some festival. But there are passages in his evidence, and particularly with reference to his refusal to send her back with her husband at the latter's request, which strongly suggest that she had taken refuge with him to escape appellant's ill-treatment.

Anyhow there is a consensus of evidence that on prosecution witness No. 1's arrival the girl returned to her husband's house with him (prosecution witness No. 1) and her husband, it being understood that all three were to leave for the Cuddapah side by train either that night or early next morning. From prosecution witness No. 1's evidence, it would appear that all three were to go to Cuddapah. But prosecution witness No. 6 says appellant proposed to leave his wife there, and go on to Kundapur, some 50 miles further up the line, to buy tobacco for trade. Appellant's brother in the Sessions Court went to the extent of deposing that appellant actually left Vontimitta by the 9-24 P. M. train and did not sleep in the house at all. This, however, is contradicted by his earlier statement, Exhibit H, in which he stated in the most specific fashion that appellant slept in the house that night. The train by which prosecution witness No. 1 came, only arrives at Vontimitta at 8-22 P. M. I have no doubt that this statement of prosecution witness No. 5 in the Sessions Court is a falsehood introduced to help his brother.

Prosecution witness No. 1 says he proposed to start by the mail (at 1-55 A.M.), but was persuaded by appellant to wait till the morning train (6-18 A. M.). He says appellant and deceased, then apparently on friendly terms, retired to the inner room, while he slept on the verandah. He heard nothing in the night. But next morning on trying to arouse them he got no answer, and when he entered the room he found Sahib Bi lying dead and her husband (appellant) gone.

He at once sent a wire to her parents (Exhibit D), while the village Munsif and Police were soon on the spot. An inquest was held the same morning (vide Exhibit M).

Appellant was not seen in the village and was not arrested till a week later (July 1st) when he was arrested in a train.

He has declined to make any statement either in the Magistrate's or the Sessions Court: and his appeal petition also contains no suggestion explaining his absence or any of the facts appearing against him. He cited no witnesses. It has been suggested by the learned Counsel who argued the case for him at our request, and to whose assistance we are much indebted, that he really did depart by himself to Kondapuram, if not in the evening, at any rate by the mail, and that his wife was murdered by some one after he left her. I have carefully considered this suggestion. It seems to me most improbable. If appellant had really gone to Kondapuram on business and stayed there knowing nothing of his wife's death, it should be perfectly easy to adduce evidence to that effect of people who had seen and had dealings with him there. Nothing of the kind is forthcoming, and in its absence I think it is not too much to say that appellant absconded before the discovery of the murder.

There is some evidence to show that appellant posted in the train on June 24th a post card, Exhibit E, worded in a very strange and incoherent fashion. The Sessions Judge says that in it he "exults more or less in the death of his wife." I cannot extract anything so definite as this from the document, which simply suggests that the writer was beside himself. But it is not at all the sort of communication likely to be sent by a tobacco merchant going about his business and knowing of no special cause for disturbance. I do not, however, attach much weight to this document. The only other evidence bearing on appellant's movements is that of prosecution witness No. 14, who says he saw him, not at Kondapuram, but at Yerraguntla where he messed and left some property at the witness's hotel. But he does not fix the date.

Now if we accept the evidence of prosecution witness No. 1 as to the circumstances under which appellant and deceased retired to rest, and couple it with the fact that next morning deceased was found dead and appellant absconding: if these facts are considered in the light of the relations of the parties and appellant's omission to furnish any explanation for his disappearance, I think a Court is justified in concluding that appellant, and no other, was the murderer.

What was the immediate cause of the crime it is impossible to say. It is not essential to believe that appellant went to bed intending anything of the kind. It is more probable that a fresh difference occurred between the pair, possibly because she refused to get him the money he wanted, or possibly he may have changed his mind as to allowing her to go to her people, or tried to extract some promise from her. But the fact that we are reduced to speculation in this respect need not stand in the way of appellant's conviction. There is quite enough on record to show that the relations of the parties were such that a murderous attack by appellant on deceased in a fit of passion entails no great improbability. Much of course depends on the credibility of prosecution witness No. 1; and appellant's Counsel has naturally laboured to show that his evidence cannot be trusted. No personal animus is alleged against him, but it is suggested that he has to throw suspicion on appellant to avoid being suspected himself. I have carefully considered his evidence in the light of this theory, and can find nothing to support it. His evidence seems to me to bear every impress of good faith, and at no single point has he gone out of his way to strengthen the case against appellant. On the contrary, he has made admissions which he would never have made if this theory were true, e.g., he has admitted that he had no personal knowledge of previous quarrels, that appellant did not object to his wife going to Cuddapah and even that the two were "friendly and cheerful" when they went to bed. A man trying to throw suspicion from himself on to the appellant would certainly not have made this last admission.

The other grounds on which evidence is attacked are also unconvincing. It is said that if he had slept where he says he did, he must have been awakened by the girl's cries. I do not think this is so. Nothing need have passed, which would necessarily awake a heavy sleeper, and indeed it is clear (unless we are to reject this witness's evidence as entirely false) that he did sleep through the murder, whoever it was that committed it. There is no reason why this witness should say he slept on the verandah unless he really did so. I can see nothing improbable in his calling appellant's brother (prosecution witness No. 5) before entering the room. Appellant was evidently a violent-tempered man; and prosecution witness No. 1 may well have been nervous of irritating him. He was not cross-examined on this point in the Sessions Court; but in his first statement (Exhibit B) he said that when he asked prosecution witness No. 5 to call appellant for him, prosecution witness No. 5 declined to do so for fear of being beaten.

Stress is laid on the fact that he now states that he sent a wire to the deceased's mother to the effect that appellant had killed Sahib Bi and absconded, whereas Exhibit D merely says: "Sahib Bi died; come immediately." If it be borne in mind that the witness is a Muhammadan blacksmith, deposing nearly 7 months afterwards to the sending of a telegram in a foreign language at a time of great agitation, I do not think this point has much significance.

Then it is argued that the witness's statement that the appellant and deceased retired to rest together goes beyond his knowledge. Reliance is placed on Exhibit K, an early statement of prosecution witness No. 6 recorded by the Magistrate on June 25th. In it prosecution witness No. 6 says that prosecution witness No 1 told him that when he went to sleep, deceased was also lying on the verandah, and that he does not know when her husband (appellant) came and took her (inside). He adds, however, that both husband and wife did lie down inside—which is what he stated in the Sessions Court. As a means of attacking prosecution witness No.1's evidence in the Sessions Court, it is useless to simply refer to Exhibit K. This document was filed by the prosecution merely to corroborate the evidence of prosecution witness No. 6 in the Sessions Court and no use was made of it by the defence. No questions were asked about it in cross-examination even of prosecution witness No. 6, nor was any question put to prosecution witness No. 1 as to what he told prosecution witness No. 6. In fact, the discrepancy, such as it is, has only been brought to notice in appeal. It is quite possible that prosecution witness No. 6 in the excitement misunderstood what prosecution witness No. 1 said to him and quite possible that prosecution witness No. 1 could explain if he were given a chance.

Lastly, attention is drawn to a statement of prosecution witness No. 5 that prosecution witness No. 1 was buying a ticket for Cuddapah either before or after despatching his wife at the Railway station. This prosecution witness No. 1 denies. The suggestion is that prosecution witness No. 1 was about to decamp, and that this indicates a guilty conscience in some way. To what extent his evidence would be discredited if it were shown that he had intended to return to Cuddapah that morning, may be a matter of opinion: but there can be no reason for preferring the evidence of prosecution witness No. 5 to that of prosecution witness No. 1. The former has undoubtedly contradicted his earlier statement (Exhibit H) in several important particulars, notably as to his brother's (appellant's) presence in the house that night and when cross-examined has professed inability to remember what he then stated. He is naturally keenly interested in saving his brother. After careful consideration, I must agree with the Sessions Judge in accepting the evidence of prosecution witness No. 1. I think there is no reasonable doubt of appellant's guilt and would dismiss the appeal, confirming the conviction and sentence.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I regret I am unable to agree in the conclusion at which my learned colleague has arrived. The case entirely depends on circumstantial evidence. The two questions that have to be considered are, whether the evidence of prosecution witness No. 1 is reliable and whether if it is believed, it necessarily leads to the conviction of the accused. On both the points, my finding is in the negative. Prosecution witness No. 1 admittedly went to Vontimitta at about 9 P. M. on the 23rd June 1913 to take the deceased to Cuddapah at the request of his sister, the mother of the deceased. He says that he slept that night in front of the room in which the accused and the deceased slept. In the first place, I cannot believe that if there was a quarrel between the husband and wife which led to the former strangling the latter, this witness would not have heard it. The witness was sleeping only a few feet from the room. It is conceded that when the deceased and the accused retired to bed, they were "friendly and cheerful." The quarrel, if any, and the murder were subsequent, and it seems incredible that a dispute which led to the committing of murder would not have been heard by the witness.

There is evidence, which the prosecution has let in, to prove that the accused wrote Exhibit E on the 24th between Kamalapuram and Guntakal (vide prosecution witness No. 9). Prosecution witness No. 14 proves that on the 24th the accused was at Yerraguntla, a station to the north of Cuddapah. It is thus clear from the evidence of the prosecution witnesses that the accused left Cuddapah on the night of the 23rd. It is suggested that this was after committing the murder. In support of it, Mr. Adam has drawn our attention to the time table of the Southern Mahratta Railway, which shows that the mail train stopped at Vontimitta in June 1913 at about 2 A. M. in the night; but there is no evidence that the accused left by that train. On the other hand, there is the positive evidence of both prosecution witness No. 5 and prosecution witness No. 6 that the accused left Ontimitta at 9 P. M. on the 23rd. This evidence is corroborated by the earlier statement made by prosecution witness No. 6 (Exhibit K). I am not prepared to reject this testimony as false. Exhibit K was a deposition given before the Magistrate on the 25th, and the prosecution has used it to corroborate the evidence of prosecution witness No. 5 and prosecution witness No. 6. If the statements in Exhibit K are believed, the conduct of prosecution witness No. 1 looks very suspicious. According to Exhibit K, prosecution witness No. 1 was taken back to the scene of the occurrence from the Railway Station, where he had gone on his way to Cuddapah and had purchased a ticket for travelling by the morning train. This is deposed to by prosecution witness No. 5 before the Sessions Court. It is true that the cross-examination of prosecution witness No. 1 was not directed towards testing this statement; but Exhibit K was put in by the prosecution and in examination-in-chief, statements were elicited from prosecution witness No. 6 which fully support Exhibit K. Even if I am not prepared to accept all the statements in it as true, it makes me hesitate to place full reliance on the evidence of prosecution witness No. 1. One other circumstance may be noticed. Prosecution witness No. 1 says that when he called out Sahib Bi at 5 A. M., he got no reply; he then went to the shop where prosecution witness No. 5 was sleeping and asked him to wake up his sister-in-law. No reason is assigned why this assistance was thought necessary. Prosecution witness No. 5 is not likely to feel less delicacy in waking up his sister-in-law than prosecution witness No. 1, the maternal uncle. I am for these reasons not prepared to accept the evidence of prosecution witness No. 1 as being substantially true. The case for the prosecution depends entirely upon this man's evidence and having regard to its unsatisfactory character, I consider it unsafe to rest the accused's conviction upon it.

Nor am I convinced that the acceptance of this evidence is conclusive of the accused's guilt. It only comes to this. At 9 P. M. the accused and deceased retired to bed together, at about 2 A. M. the accused left the place, according to the prosecution theory, and at 5 A. M., the deceased was found dead. I am unable to say that these facts lead to the only inference that the accused killed the deceased.

To strengthen the case for the prosecution, Exhibit E, to which reference has already been made, was put in. I am not satisfied with the proof of this letter being in the handwriting of the accused. Moreover, it is not likely that a person of the accused's status in life would have written this letter. Its language is against that view. Nor am I able to follow the Sessions Judge in his construction of this exhibit. To my mind its language suggests quite the reverse of what the Session Judge understands by it. I do not, therefore, attach any importance to this document.

Then there is the evidence as to quarrels between the deceased and the accused. The dagger incident does not impress me as true. The deceased and the accused were in the habit of going together to the house of prosecution witness No. 2. It is in evidence that prosecution witness No. 1 was asked by prosecution witness No. 2 to bring both of them to Cuddapah. On the evidence before me, I am not able to say that the two had any serious quarrels at any time which would lead one to believe that the accused was murderously inclined towards his wife.

The motive suggested for the murder is of the flimsiest kind. Even granting that the accused wanted his brother-in-law to help him with money and asked the deceased to prevail upon her brother to lend, I cannot accept the theory that the quarrel on the night of the 23rd must have related to the refusal of the deceased to make this request to her brother and that the accused killed the deceased on that account.

One other point has to be noticed. The murder was on the 23rd June. The accused was arrested at Kondapuram on the 1st July. It was argued that his absence from Vontimitta for over a week indicates his guilt. Quite apart from the dramatic setting given to the arrest by prosecution witness No. 12, I find no evidence that the accused had kept out of the way and was evading arrest. It is said that he must have heard of the murder; if so, he must have heard that he was suspected. That might account for his not approaching the village.

It may be that the conduct of the accused is not altogether free from suspicion. There are circumstances appearing in the evidence which the accused has not explained, but looking at the evidence as a whole I am not convinced that the evidence of prosecution witness No. 1 is true in the main, and that its acceptance necessarily leads to the conviction of the accused. I, therefore, resolve to give the benefit of the doubt to him and direct his acquittal.

I entirely agree with Mr. Justice Ayling in his appreciation of the assistance which Mr. Madhavan Nair has rendered to us in this case, AYLING, J.—As my learned brother differs, the case will be laid before another Judge under section 429 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

This appeal coming on for hearing under section 429 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the 29th July 1914, upon perusing the petition of appeal and the record of evidence and proceedings before the Court of Session and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, Counsel (amicus curiæ) for the Prisoner, and of Mr. J. C. Adam, for the Public Prosecutor, on behalf of Government, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—This case has been placed before me in consequence of a difference of opinion between two learned Judges. The appellant has been convicted of murdering his wife, the prosecution contending that its case has been established to the exclusion of reasonable doubt, because (1) adequate motive has been proved, (2) appellant is shown to have been the last person in company with deceased before she was found murdered, (3) his conduct after her death was consistent only with his reponsibility.

Before examining the evidence on each of these points, I make two general observations: firstly, the prosecution witnesses, who have deposed directly to the facts of the occurrence, are no doubt persons of no position. But there is on the other hand no reason for supposing that any influence has been exercised over them to induce them to combine against appellant. In fact, except 1st prosecution witness they belong to the village in which he lived and with which (so far as appears) his wife's family had no independent connection; and their bias (if any) might be expected to be in his favour. Some of the witnesses have indeed deposed less favourably to the prosecution than they did in their previous statements. Secondly, appellant has at no stage given any sort of explanation of the evidence against him or regarding facts specially within his knowledge and has adduced no evidence. There is, therefore, nothing whatever to rebut the inferences from the evidence for the prosecution.

As regards the first of the heads above referred to, motive, I am not concerned to reach a finding that, after appellant and deceased went home, apparently on good terms, on the night of 23rd June 1913 any quarrel between them originated in any particular way. There is not, it must be conceded, evidence regarding the last hours, which they spent together. But such evidence is not, in my opinion, to be looked for and it will be sufficient, if the general conclusion is that appellant had ill-treated the woman before and that there were differences between them, which might have ended in an actual quarrel and (regard being had to their station) in the use of violence. As to this there is firstly, the evidence that appellant had not long before threatened deceased with a dagger in her mother's house at Cuddapah. The witnesses to this incident are of course her relatives, 2nd and 3rd prosecution witnesses. But no other evidence could be expected, and 2nd prosecution witness referred to the matter at the earliest opportunity, when Exhibit C was taken from her on 25th June. There is, next, the general evidence of 1st and 2nd prosecution witnesses that deceased had complained of ill-treatment. It derives some support from the statement of 6th prosecution witness, appellant's relative, that he was pressing his wife for some purpose, regarding which the witness did not ask her for details, and from the witness's conduct in insisting on keeping her in his house, his explanation for doing so being unsatisfactory. If his evidence stands alone, that may be due to the failure of other relatives of appellant to adhere to their statements to the Sub-Magistrate before the trial. It may be that, as other evidence indicates, the appellant was pressing deceased to get him money from her family. Whether or no that is the explanation, there is sufficient to show that the relations between the two had been disturbed and to remove any antecedent improbability based on the absence of motive from the prosecution case. And that is all that can be expected, when the circumstances preclude the possibily of proof of the immediate occasion for a quarrel.

Regarding the next part of the case, that relating to the period between the departure of 1st prosecution witness, appellant and deceased from 6th prosecution witness's house and the discovery of the body of the last-mentioned next morning, Mr. Madhavan Nair, who argued the case very carefully for appellant, contended that the evidence of the only witness, 1st prosecution witness, was unworthy of credit, either as to his own presence outside the house or the presence of appellant and his retiring to sleep inside with deceased.

This argument included first a suggestion, accepted by one of the learned Judges who have heard the appeal, that 1st prosecution witness's evidence was improbable, because he must have been aroused by the struggle, which must have taken place. But, with all respect for the learned Judge, there is no reason for supposing that there was a struggle or that deceased could have given any alarm. For, as the medical evidence, the deposition of 10th prosecution witness and the certificate, Exhibit O, shows, there were no injuries on her body, such as would have been caused in a struggle, the compressed appearance of her arms involving no more than that her assailant may have knelt on them, whilst he compressed her wind-pipe; and if (as may well have happened) she was attacked suddenly or in her sleep, the compression of her wind-pipe would have prevented her crying out.

First prosecution witness's evidence, being in no respect improbable, must then be appraised with reference to his motive and the discrepancies between it and his previous statements and the evidence of other witnesses. But no motive for his deposing falsely can be supposed, except the necessity for inculpating appellant in order to divert suspicion from himself; and that calls for no consideration in the absence of evidence that he had any reason for committing the murder or has ever been suspected of it. It is also argued that he may have slept at the house of accused's aunt, where he had supper. But this possibility rests on mere conjecture and was not referred to in the lower Court. Other minor criticisms are dealt with sufficiently in the judgment of Mr. Justice Ayling; and the attempt to discredit the witness's evidence has been based mainly on the account given by 6th prosecution witness in Exhibit K, his statement at the local enquiry, of what he understood the former to have told him after the body was discovered. I cannot attach importance to the differences between it and the witness's present evidence. Firstly, it would not be safe to do so when there was no cross-examination regarding them and when 6th prosecution witness himself was merely asked to identify Exhibit K. and not to give evidence as to this conversation. If the matter had attracted attention at the trial, he might have made additions to his account or 1st prosecution witness might have given explanations, which would have reconciled it with the latter's evidence. Or it may be that 6th prosecution witness simply misunderstood what 1st prosecution witness said. The discrepancies with Exhibit K are not, in my opinion, such as in themselves to justify rejection of 1st prosecution witness's testimony. And if his earlier version is correct, it amounts only to this, that instead of his seeing appellant and deceased enter the house, they were together outside it, when he went to sleep. On this version, the possibility of 1st prosecution witness's responsibility excluded for the reasons already given, appellant is still liable to suspicion as the last person with whom deceased was seen alive; and whether they were seen in the house or in its verandah matters little. I accordingly accept 1st prosecution witness's evidence as true on material points. It is, next, important that appellant's status and the fact that deceased's jewels were not taken from her body make it most improbable that she was murdered by a thief. The conclusion must be that appellant is bound to account for his movements and to show that he left the house in circumstances consistent with his innocence.

As already stated, however, he has made no attempt to do so, either in his statements or by calling witnesses; and this part of the case must, therefore, be dealt with on the prosecution evidence. Exhibit E may be excluded from consideration, because, though there is no reason for rejecting the evidence that appellant wrote it, no argument from it would be safe either as to his attitude towards deceased or as to his having posted it at any particular time and place. It indicates at most that he was travelling on the line on 24th June. As to the train he took from Vontimitta, the scene of the occurrence, there is nothing of value, since the evidence of 5th prosecution witness, his brother, that he left at 9-24 P.M. on 23rd June is contradicted by his earlier statement, Exhibit H, that he slept at his house. It is, moreover, unlikely that he left then, because 1st prosecution witness had only arrived from Cuddapah about an hour before and after his interview with appellant and his meal would hardly have been ready to receive deceased from appellant before the latter's train left. It is, therefore, to be supposed that appellant left, as 1st prosecution witness's evidence indicates, early on the 24th morning. The only evidence as to his purpose is that of 5th and 6th prosecution witnesses, that he was going to Kundapur to buy tobacco. But there is nothing to show that he bought tobacco there or elsewhere. The evidence of 14th and 15th prosecution witnesses is that he was at Yerraguntla, another station nearer than Kundapur to his village, on 24th or 25th June and left without paying for his meals. He was arrested at Kundapur on 1st July, there being no evidence of any communication between him and any one in his village during the interval. It seems to me, with due respect, that the argument from all this has been mistaken by one of the learned Judges. It is not merely that appellant was absenting himself and concealing his movements. That I can understand might eventually have been due to a natural apprehension that he would be arrested. The point is that the ostensible purpose of his journey would not have entailed nearly so lengthy an absence, and that if his reason for protracting it was, as must be supposed, the apprehension referred to, there is nothing to show how he knew during it of his wife's death or that he was suspected. He does not allege that he heard of these facts from any one, and there is no evidence that he did so and no probability that rumour would inform him of the death of a woman of no position and the name of the person suspected in connection with it at a place sixty miles from the scene of the occurrence. The inference must be that he knew of the death from the beginning, because he was responsible for it.

Mr. Madhavan Nair has laid stress very fairly on the absence of direct proof and the inferential nature of the prosecution case. Those considerations would deserve more weight, if the question were between this and an alternative explanation of deceased's death or there were ground for suspicion of any person other than appellant. But the evidence points to him alone and is, in my opinion, sufficient to exclude reasonable doubt. I, therefore, concur in the decision of Mr. Justice Ayling and confirm the conviction. There is no question regarding the sentence. The result is that the appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Northern India Canal and Drainage Act (VIII of 1873), s. 70, sub-secs. (1) and (2)—Preventing digging of water-course—Revision—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Finding of fact based on inadmissible evidence.

The preventing of the digging of a water-course for taking water from a canal does not come within the purview of section 70 of Act VIII of 1873

A finding of fact based on no evidence or on inadmissible evidence is liable to be set aside on revision under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Lyallpur, dated the 7th September 1914, affirming that of the Magistrate, second Class, Lyallpur, dated the 31st August 1914, convicting the petitioners.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The three petitioners were convicted by a Canal Officer with second Class Magistrate powers of an offence under section 70 of Act VIII of 1873 and were sentenced to 21 days' simple imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 30 each. They appealed to the District Magistrate, who maintained the order of the first Court. The District Magistrate in his judgment pointed out that the lower Court had taken into consideration certain reports and letters which were unproved and which were really inadmissible in evidence, but he remarked that the offence had been proved sufficiently by oral evidence.

Turning to the judgment of the Magistrate, I find that the petitioners were convicted of wilfully dismantling the watercourse and cutting off the entire water supply of the complainant.

This no doubt would be an offence under section 70, sub-section (2), of Act VIII of 1873, but there is no legal evidence on the record to substantiate this charge. Leaving out the reports and letters referred to by the District Magistrate and turning to the oral evidence, I find that it is to the effect that the petitioners would not allow complainant, Karim Bakhsh, to dig a certain watercourse. The watercourse had previously been dismantled and the complainant had obtained leave to dig it anew. The preventing of the digging of a watercourse does not appear to me to come within the purview of section 70 of the Act. Mr. Kureshi for the complainant argues that petitioners' act comes within both sub-sections (1) and (2) of section 70, but I am unable to agree with him. Sub-section (1) refers to damage of any canal or drainage work. There is no proof that the petitioners damaged or interfered in any way with an existing canal or watercourse. With regard to sub-section (2), it cannot be said that the petitioners interfered with the supply of water in, or the flow of water from, through, over or under any canal. What they did do was to obstruct the complainant in digging a watercourse. Their act may come within the definition of some other offence or may give rise to an action for damages in a Civil Court, but does not amount to any offence under section 70 of the Act in question. The revision is, therefore, allowed and the conviction and sentences being set aside, petitioners are acquitted and are discharged from their bail, and the fines, if paid, will be refunded.

Revision allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Forgery, charge of—Sanction to prosecute, whether necessary.

It is necessary for a party wishing to prosecute upon a charge of forgery committed in respect of a document produced in Court to obtain sanction of the Court under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Application for revision against an order of the District Judge of Moradabad, dated the 26th June 1914.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose, for the Applicant.

Mr. Simeon, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision challenging the order of the learned District Judge of Moradabad setting aside the sanction for prosecution granted by the Munsif. It appears that Ram Sarup, the opposite party, sued the applicant on the basis of a bond. The bond was denied and the claim of Ram Sarup was dismissed. On appeal the decree of the first Court was affirmed, and the Appellate Court said that Ram Sarup had obviously utilised an old stamp in fabricating the bond on behalf of the applicant. The latter then filed an application in the Court of Munsif for the grant of sanction to prosecute Ram Sarup under section 467, Indian Penal Code. The application was granted. On appeal the learned District Judge set aside the sanction, on the ground that the offence under section 467, Indian Penal Code, was not included in section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The learned Judge, it seems, overlooked the opening sentence of clause (c) of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. The sentence is "of any offence described in section 463." Now an offence punishable under section 467, Indian Penal Code, is defined in section 463, Indian Penal Code. It is, therefore, necessary for a party wishing to prosecute upon a charge of forgery to obtain sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. The order of the learned Judge is set aside and that of the Munsif is restored. Costs are allowed to the applicant.

Order of first Court restored.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Dacoity—First report—Subsequent evidence of identification of dacoits—Corroboration.

Where in the first report only two dacoits are alleged to have been recognised at the time of committing the dacoity, subsequent evidence that they were all identified cannot be relied upon unless there is a strong corroboration to support it.

Appeal from the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 23rd May 1914, convicting the appellants.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Government Advocate.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants, who are nine in number and are residents of three villages situated close to one another in Tahsil Chakwal of the Jhelum District, have been convicted by the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, of the offence of dacoity under section 395, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. It would be convenient to refer to the appellants according to their numbers on the record of the Sessions Judge. Accused No. 1 on that record is a resident of village Dullah; accused Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 are residents of Munda, which is eleven miles from Dullah; accused Nos. 6 and 7 belong to village Wara, which is not far from Munda; and accused Nos. 8 and 9 are residents of Chak Bhon, which is close to Wara.

According to the prosecution, the appellants committed a dacoity in the house of one Musammat Sardaran at Dhok Kut, a hamlet attached to village Dullah, on the night between the 20th and 21st February 1914, and carried off clothes and ornaments of some value. The first information report was given by Musammat Sardaran, P. W. No. 2, and her brother Nadir, P. W. No. 5, on the 21st of February at 8 A. M. and the head constable, P. W. No. 24, reached the spot two hours later. In the first report Musammat Sardaran stated that six dacoits had made a raid on her house where she and her daughter, Musammat Amiran, and her sister-in-law, Musammat Mukhan, were sleeping; and that of the dacoits she had identified Nur Khan, son of Ghulam, resident of Dullah, and his maternal uncle, Khan Bahadur of Munda. The woman also gave a list of the ornaments and clothes which had been carried off by the dacoits.

The learned Sessions Judge has given in his judgment a connected narrative of the steps taken by the Police to trace the dacoits and of the manner in which their identification by the inmates of the house was carried out. According to the prosecution, Musammat Sardaran, P. W. No. 2, Musammat Amiran, P. W. No. 3, and Musammat Mukhan, P. W. No. 4, were sleeping in the house when the dacoity took place, and Musammat Sardaran's brother, Nadir, P. W. No. 5, who was at the time out at his maternal uncle's dhok, happened to return to his sister's house when the dacoits were still there. He was seized and beaten by the dacoits and then shut up in the house of Walidad, P. W No. 10, who was away at Bannu, and which was also broken into by the dacoits. The important fact to note at this stage is that whereas in the first report it was stated that only accused No. 1, Nur Khan, and his uncle, Khan Bahadur, had been identified from among the dacoits, in the Court of Session Musammat Sardaran, Musammat Amiran, Musammat Mukhan and Nadir (P. W. Nos. 2 to 5) deposed to having identified between them at the time of the dacoity all the accused persons. In the course of the Police investigation an identification parade was held at village Dullah on the 27th of February in the presence of the Police Inspector and prosecution witnesses, Nur Khan, lambardar, P. W. No. 19, and Akbar Khan, ilaqadar, P. W. No. 20, and it is stated that on that occasion Musammat Sardaran and her relations named above had identified the accused persons in the same way as they identified them subsequently in the Sessions Court. The learned Sessions Judge has, however, given certain reasons for not relying upon this identification, and after careful scrutiny of the evidence of Musammat Sardaran, Musammat Amiran, Musammat Mukhan and Nadir, I have no hesitation in agreeing with the Sessions Judge on this point. In the first report, as has been stated above, only the names of Nur Khan and Khan Bahadur were mentioned as having been identified, but throughout the Police inquiry and in the Sessions Court Musammat Sardaran and Nadir, who had made the first report, admitted that they had named Khan Bahadur merely out of suspicion and that he had not been identified on the spot. As regards Nur Khan, however, the evidence of identification is consistent and convincing, and I agree with the Sessions Judge that he was one of the dacoits who broke into the house of Musammat Sardaran. Nur Khan is a lambardar of village Dullah, and there existed at the time of the dacoity strong grounds of enmity between him on one side and Walidad, P. W. No. 10, brother of Ali, P. W. No. 9, who is son-in-law of Musammat Sardaran, and Musammat Sardaran's brother, Mehdi, P. W. No. 13, on the other. The learned Sessions Judge has referred to these causes of enmity in his judgment, and I agree with him that Nur Khan had sufficient motive for committing the dacoity in company with other persons.

As regards the rest of the appellants, there is no direct evidence of identification such as would be sufficient for their convictions, but part of the stolen property, which has been quite satisfactorily identified, has been traced to accused No. 2, Kartar Singh, accused No. 3, Muhammad Khan, and accused No. 7, Ghulam Muhammad, and their convictions must, in my opinion, be maintained. The evidence against accused No. 2 is this. On the evening of the 22nd February when the Police visited village Munda, they were told by one Nawab Khan, P. W. No. 18, that accused No. 2, who was a great friend of his, had that morning offered him a lungi saying that it was part of the property which he, in company with other persons, had stolen from Dhok Kut. I may here note that the Sessions Judge is wrong in saying that Nawab Khan identified the lungi as Exhibit P.-5; Nawab Khan did nothing of the kind, and the identity of the lungi is not established from his evidence. On receiving information from Nawab Khan the Police searched the house of accused No. 2 on the 23rd February, and the result was that two stolen articles, a pagri of tusser silk, Exhibit P.-3, and a waistcoat, Exhibit P-4, were found there. These have been identified by Musammat Sardaran, P. W. No. 2, and her son-in-law Ali, P.-W. No. 9. On the 24th February Bahadur, P. W. No. 22, produced before the Police three articles of clothing, Exhibits P.-5, P.-6 and P.-7, saying that these had been left with him by accused No. 2, Kartar Singh, as he said he was going out to cut grass for his cattle. Exhibit P.-5 has been identified by Ali, P. W. No. 9, and Ghulam Muhammad, P.W. No. 12, and Exhibits P.-6 and P.-7 have been identified by Musammat Sardaran. The prosecution evidence regarding the identification of the said articles is, in my opinion, satisfactory, and, therefore, the connection of accused No. 2 with the dacoity is clearly established.

On the 4th March accused No. 3, Muhammad Khan, who like accused No. 2 is also a resident of Munda, produced part of the stolen property, Exhibits P.-13 to P.-20, from a field near his own house which belongs to himself; and these articles have been identified by Musammat Sardaran and the other two female witnesses, and some of them by Ali, P. W. No. 9, Walidad, P. W. No 10, and Ghulam Muhammad P. W No. 12. The property was produced by accused No. 4 in the presence of Nur Khan, Akbar Khan and Sultan, P. W. Nos. 19, 20 and 21.

On the 3rd March accused No. 7 produced stolen articles, Exhibits P.-9, P.-10, P.-11 and P.-12, from a field cultivated by himself in the presence of the witnesses just mentioned; and the said articles have been identified by the three women, P. W. Nos. 2, 3 and 4, Exhibit P.-12 being identified also by Ghulam Muhammad, P. W. No. 12.

No stolen property has been traced to the rest of the appellants, and it seems to me that they have been convicted by the Sessions Judge on insufficient grounds. One Sultan, P. W. No. 7, gives evidence to the effect that on the evening before the dacoity in question took place, he and one Khan Beg had seen all the nine appellants together at a takia in village Mehra, which is at a distance of about seven miles from Dhok Kut which was the scene of the occurrence. In addition to this there is the evidence of Jafar, P. W. No. 16, to the effect that he had met accused Nos. 7, 8 and 9 at noon on the boundary between Munda and Chak Bhon the day before the dacoity, and that on inquiry they said they were on their way to the village Munda. On the strength of the evidence of Sultan and Jafar, the Sessions Judge has convicted accused Nos. 3, 5, 6, 8 and 9. It may be noted that, according to the Sessions Judge, as against accused No. 7 there is the additional evidence of his chisel, Exhibit P.-1, being found on the spot. It seems to me that the evidence just referred to is quite consistent with the innocence of the accused persons, for no part of the stolen property has been traced to them at all; and it follows that their convictions were not justified.

The result is that I dismiss the appeal so far as the appellants Nur Khan, Kartar Singh, Muhammad Khan and Ghulam Muhammad are concerned; but I accept it as regards the rest of the appellants, Sahib, Sher Khan, Abbas, Imam Din and Arsala, and setting aside their convictions and sentences, I acquit them.

Accused Nos. 5 to 9 acquitted.

BUTA SINGH—COMPLAINANT—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 439—Non-compliance with provisions of s. 145—Fatal defect—Revision.

Where a Magistrate proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, does not strictly comply with its provisions and fails to find that the dispute between the parties concerning the property in question is likely to occasion a breach of the peace, his order is without jurisdiction and bad in law and is, consequently, liable to be set aside on revision under section 439 of the said Code.

Petition under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Magistrate, first Class, Bhadana, District Lahore, dated the 23rd August 1914, ordering that the petitioners may bring a civil suit in respect of the house in dispute within two months.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Petitioners.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The procedure adopted by the Magistrate in this case does not comply at all with the provisions of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Sub-section (1) of section 145 lays down that whenever a Magistrate is satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land, he shall make an order in writing, stating the grounds of his being so satisfied and requiring the parties concerned in such dispute to attend his Court and to put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute. Sub-section (4) provides that the Magistrate shall peruse the statements so put in, receive the evidence produced by the parties and, if possible, decide whether any and which of the parties was at the date of the order before mentioned in such possession of the said subject. In the present case the Magistrate has wholly ignored these provisions; he made no order in writing stating the grounds of his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed concerning the haveli in question and requiring the parties to put in written statements of their respective claims regarding the fact of actual possession of the haveli; and it is clear that in these circumstances he could not decide whether any and which of the parties was at the date of the order, which he should have made but which he did not make, in such possession of the haveli. The Magistrate has entirely misconceived the object and scope of section 145, and the order under revision was passed by him without jurisdiction. There is no finding by him that the dispute between the parties concerning the haveli in question is likely to occasion a breach of the peace. I accordingly set aside the order of the Magistrate as bad in law. The complainant is at liberty to take fresh proceedings, if so advised, under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Revision allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133, 137—Existence of hayricks on premises of petitioner—Conditional order under s. 133—Denial by petitioner that they are nuisance—Inspection of premises by Magistrate—No evidence taken—Order made absolute—Order, whether legal.

In consequence of a representation from the respondent that the hayricks on the petitioner's premises were a nuisance and likely to cause conflagration, the Magistrate issued a conditional order under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code. The petitioner admitted the existence of the hayricks, but denied that they were a nuisance. The Magistrate from his own inspection decided that they were a danger to adjoining houses and made the order absolute without taking any evidence.

Held, that the Magistrate should not have made the order absolute on his own opinion formed by inspection, but should have called on the respondent to adduce evidence that the hayricks constituted a nuisance and the order must, therefore, be set aside.

Mr. K. B. Ranganadha Aiyer for Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondent.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

ORDER.—Section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that the Magistrate shall take evidence, if a person ordered to remove a nuisance appears and shows cause against the order.

In this case no evidence was let in either for or against the order.

The petitioner admitted the existence of hayricks on his premises, but he denied that they were a nuisance.

The Magistrate seems to have decided from his own inspection that they were a danger to adjoining houses. The conditional order under section 133 was issued in consequence of a representation in which it was alleged (1) that the drainage water caused bad odours (2), that the hayrick was likely to cause conflagration. In these circumstances, I think the Magistrate should not have made the order absolute on his own opinion formed by inspection, but should have called on the first party, Sudarsanachariar, to adduce evidence that the hayricks constituted a nuisance.

Vide In the matter of the petition of Mahadaji Sadashiv (1) and Hingu v. Emperor (2). The order does not satisfy the requirements of the section. I set it aside and refer the matter back to the Magistrate to proceed according to law.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 523, 524—No offence proved in respect of property—Possessor unable to prove how he acquired it—Order for disposal of property.

K was suspected of having been concerned in a theft. On search of his house a considerable quantity of jewelry and money was found and was taken possession of by the Police. Inquiry, however, showed that there was no definite evidence of guilt against K, nor was any of the property found in the house claimed by any one else although steps were taken under section 523, Criminal Procedure Code, to give others the opportunity to claim it. K was unable to show that it was legally acquired by him and consequently the Magistrate ordered that the property should be at the disposal of the Government:

Held, that having regard to the words of sections 523, 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code it could not be said that the Magistrate's proceedings were illegal, but in the circumstances of the case the intention and spirit of those sections had been disregarded, and the order made by the Magistrate should be set aside.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—In this case a certain Kareppa was suspected as possibly having been concerned in a theft from the house of a certain Mokashi, who gave information to the Police as a consequence of which a considerable quantity of jewelry and money was found in Kareppa's house and was taken possession of by the Police. Inquiry showed that there was no definite evidence on which a charge that Kareppa had been concerned in the theft could be based, nor was any of the property found in Kareppa's house claimed by Mokashi to be his. It became necessary, then, to make an order for the disposal of the property. Acting under section 523 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the person entitled to the property was unknown. He issued a proclamation and when the six months required by the section had elapsed, no person had come forward to claim any of the properties. The Magistrate then determined that the property ought not to be returned to Kareppa unless he was able to show that it was legally acquired by him. In the Magistrate's opinion he was not able to show this and consequently he ordered that the property should be at the disposal of the Government. This order was upheld in appeal and the proceedings have come before us by way of revision.

I am not prepared to say that the Magistrate's proceedings can be said to be illegal having regard to the words used in sections 523 and 524. Nevertheless, I think in the circumstances of this case that the intention and spirit of these sections has been disregarded and that the order made by the Magistrate was in the circumstances an improper order. I will say briefly why I hold this opinion, and I must be understood as speaking purely with reference to the circumstances of this case and in no way generalising. The property was found with Kareppa. It was not claimed by any one else, although steps were taken to give others the opportunity of claiming it. There was no evidence which really connected Kareppa with either the theft from Mokashi's house or any other theft, and the only reasons which eventually transpired for supposing that Kareppa had come by this property improperly were these: he did not appear to be anything but a poor man or to be pursuing a business which seemed likely to yield considerable profits and yet quite suddenly his wife and mistress were found to be wearing gold ornaments of considerable value and when his house came to be searched, he was found to be in the possession of somewhere above a thousand rupees (Rs. 1,000) in money. If there had been anything specific against Kareppa, I think the further proceedings might have been justified, but there was nothing specific against him. There was only this general surmise, which was based after all on the opinion of people who might, as people often are in their opinion of others, be mistaken. The principal ground on which the Magistrate based his order was that Kareppa himself gave an account of how he acquired his wealth, which seemed to the Magistrate to be manifestly untrue. But I think the circumstances of the case did not in themselves require or justify an inquisitorial inquiry into the private affairs of this man Kareppa. I think the spirit of our Criminal Law and its provisions both indicate quite clearly that inquisitorial inquiries into the private affairs and concerns of any person are not to be made, except possibly in rare instances, unless there is something specific against that peron. On the circumstances disclosed in this case, I think that the proper course would have been to refrain from making that inquisitorial inquiry into Kareppa's private affairs which the Magistrate did make. That being so, I do not think that the circumcumstance that Kareppa gave an account of how he had acquired his property which did not satisfy the Magistrate, is a good reason for maintaining the order which he has made.

Therefore, I would set aside the order and direct that the property which has been ordered to be at the disposal of Government should be returned to Kareppa.

SHAH, J.—I concur.

Order set aside.

versus

GIAN SINGH—PLAINTIFF AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17 (c), 49—Document extinguishing rights, whether compulsorily registrable.

A document which purports to extinguish the executant's right in immoveable property of the value of more than Rs. 100, in respect of the mortgage rights held by his grandfather in the land in suit, is compulsorily registrable, and if not registered, cannot be received in evidence of any transaction affecting that property.

Appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Gujranwala Division, at Lahore, dated the 1st March 1911, affirming that of the Munsif, first Class, Gujranwala, dated the 31st October 1910, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Ganpat Rai and Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Surjan Singh, a tarkhan of Mauza Gondlanwala, distant about five miles from the Gujranwala city, held mortgage rights in 129 kanals 10 marlas of land (the area of the land is incorrectly entered in the judgments of the lower Courts as 109 kanals 10 marlas), situate at Gondlanwala. He died in December 1909, leaving some moveables in addition to the mortgage rights in the land just mentioned. The plaintiff Gian Singh, who is a daughter's son of Surjan Singh, has sued the defendants, who are Surjan Singh's collaterals, for possession of the land which was under mortgage with Surjan Singh, and both the Courts below have given a decree in his favour. The pleas of the defendants were, inter alia, that Surjan Singh was governed by agricultural custom and not by Hindu Law; that the plaintiff, as a daughter's son of the deceased, was, therefore, excluded from the succession to his land; and that, even if the plaintiff had a right to succeed to the land, he had waived that right after the death of Surjan Singh, as evidenced by an agreement dated the 20th of January 1910.

Both the Courts below have held that the defendants on whom the onus lay have failed to prove that Surjan Singh deceased was governed by agricultural custom and not by Hindu Law; that under Hindu Law the plaintiff, as daughter's son of the deceased, was entitled to succeed to his property to the exclusion of his collaterals, the defendants; that the agreement, dated the 20th January 1910, was compulsorily registrable under section 17 of the Indian Registration Act, and not being registered was inadmissible in evidence; and that, therefore, the alleged waiver of his rights of succession by the plaintiff was not established. Upon these grounds the plaintiff's claim has been decreed.

The defendants have appealed to this Court, and we have heard their learned Counsel at some length in support of the contentions raised by him, viz., (1) that the deceased, who was an agricultural tarkhan residing in a village, was governed by the ordinary agricultural custom by which his collaterals were entitled to succeed to his landed property to the exclusion of his daughter's son; and (2) that the agreement, dated the 20th of January 1910, did not require registration and was admissible in evidence, inasmuch as it was simply a record of a settlement already arrived at between the parties, under which the plaintiff had given up all his rights in the immoveable property left by Surjan Singh deceased.

It would be more convenient to deal with the second contention first. We have carefully read the agreement in question; and after giving every weight to the argument of the Counsel for the defendants, we agree with the Courts below that this document purports to extinguish the plaintiff's right in immoveable property of the value of more than Rs. 100, i. e., in respect of the mortgage rights held by his grandfather, Surjan Singh, in the land in suit, that it was, therefore, compulsorily registrable under section 17 of the Registration Act, and not being registered, it cannot, under section 49 of the Act, be received in evidence of any transaction affecting the said immoveable property. The document is not written in very happy language, but we are clearly of opinion, upon a careful consideration of its terms, that it did not contain a mere recital of past facts and was not, therefore, excepted from the operation of section 17 of the Indian Registration Act.

As regards the first contention raised by the defendants' Counsel, it is unnecessary to decide whether Surjan Singh deceased was governed by agricultural custom or by Hindu Law. The property in dispute comprises, as has been noted above, mortgage rights in 129 kanals 10 marlas of land; and it is admitted before us that it was Surjan Singh deceased himself who had advanced the mortgage-money to the owners of the land and taken it in mortgage, the mortgage being one with possession. Such being the case, the mortgage rights in the land in suit were the self-acquired property of Surjan Singh, and whether he was governed by Customary Law or by Hindu Law his daughter, and through her the plaintiff, would be entitled to succeed to the said mortgage rights which he possessed in the land in question.

For these reasons we maintain the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal. As the plaintiff has taken advantage of the non-registration of the agreement, dated the 20th of January 1910, which he had undoubtedly executed in favour of the defendants, and his conduct has been disingenuous, we think that the parties should bear their own costs in this Court and we direct accordingly. The cross-objections are dismissed.

Appeal and Cross-objections dismissed.

MUTHAMMAL JANAKI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage-deed, suit on—Covenant to pay—Personal decree, right of—Application for personal decree—Limitation.

Where in a document there is a covenant to pay a debt on a particular date, although followed by a direction that in default of payment the sum may be recovered from the hypothecated property, the mortgagee is nevertheless entitled to a personal decree.

Abbakka Heggadthi v. Kinhiamma Shetty, 29 M. 491, followed.

An application for a personal decree can be made even after six years from the date of bond, provided the suit is filed within six years from the date of the bond.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suits Nos. 271 and 273 of 1913, preferred against those of the Additional District Munsif of Tinnevelly, in Civil Miscellaneous Petitions Nos. 73 and 142 of 1913 in Original Suit No. 70 of 1911.

FACTS.—This is an appeal against an order refusing to pass a personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure in a mortgage suit. The appellant is the decree-holder. A decree was passed directing the realization of the mortgage amount from a sale of the hypothecated properties. He brought the hypotheca to sale and realized therefrom a sum of Rs. 910. A sum of Rs. 109 still remained due under the decree, and he sought to recover it by attachment and sale of the other properties of mortgagor, and applied, therefore, for a personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6. The judgment-debtor at first paid the amount into Court. She afterwards contested the application stating that she, being a woman, was misled into paying the balance of the decree amount into Court and that the decree-holder is not entitled to a personal decree as the mortgage document merely provides for the realisation of the amount out of the hypotheca. The District Munsif applied the amount paid by her into Court towards the decree, and directed satisfaction of the decree to be entered up. She then appealed to the District Judge, who passed the following order:

"It will be observed that there is a covenant to pay on a particular date accompanied by a mortgage of certain property as security. It is, however, immediately followed by a direction that in default of payment the sum shall be recovered from the mortgaged property.

"It seems to me, therefore, that the covenant to pay was not absolute but qualified, and that the debt could not be recovered otherwise than from the mortgaged property."

He accordingly allowed the appeal and dismissed the application for a personal decree. The present appeal is against that order.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. R. Rangaswami Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We follow Abbakka Heggadthi v. Kinhiamma Shetty (1), the terms of the document in that case resembling those of the document before us, and dissent from the District Judge's conclusion that the plaintiff was not entitled to a personal decree.

It is then argued by the defendant that the application for a personal decree is made out of time, being more than six years from the date of the suit mortgage. It is not shown that this objection was taken in the lower Appellate Court, and in any case it is sufficient that the plaintiff's suit was in time, the date of its institution, not that of the application for personal decree, being material.

The appeals against Appellate orders are allowed and the lower Appellate Court's decisions are set aside.

The civil miscellaneous second appeals are remanded to the District Munsif for re-admission and disposal according to law after passing a personal decree in plaintiff's favour. Defendant will pay plaintiff's costs throughout.

Appeal allowed, Petition remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 10—Proceedings after preliminary decree for sale or redemption, whether proceedings in suit—Purchaser of property, whether entitled to be made party—Rule 10, whether applicable to execution proceedings.

Under the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, proceedings after a preliminary decree for sale or redemption are proceedings in the suit and, therefore, a suit for redemption does not come to an end after the passing of a preliminary decree and must be considered pending, within the meaning of Order XXII, rule 10, and the private purchaser of the property after such a decree acquires an interest which entitles him to be made a party to the suit.

Quære Whether Order XXII, rule 10, applies to execution proceedings?

Bhugwan Das Khettry v. Nilkanta Ganguli, 9 C. W. N. 171, referred to.

Execution first appeal from the decision of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 30th August 1913.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (with him Dr. Suleman), for the Appellants.

Mr. Durga Charan Banerji (with him Mr. Mohan Lal Sandal), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Maimuna Khatun, on December 22nd, 1908, obtained a preliminary decree for redemption. On appeal to this Court the decision was upheld by a decree, dated May 19th, 1910, which allowed the plaintiff six months from that date to redeem the property. On October 12th, 1912, Musammat Maimuna Khatun sold the mortgaged property to the present appellants, leaving in their hands a sum of money sufficient to enable them to redeem the property in accordance with the decree. On April 5th, 1914, the appellants applied to the Court below to be made plaintiffs in the suit in the place of Maimuna Khatun and on the same day they applied to the Court to extend the time for redemption and to allow them to pay the mortgage-money into Court. Both applications were dismissed. This is an appeal against the order dismissing the appellants' application to be made plaintiffs in the suit.

The Subordinate Judge seems to have dismissed the application on two grounds, namely, (1) that no execution proceedings were pending at the time when the application was made, therefore, Order XXII, rule 10, did not apply to the case; and (2) that the decree had not been transferred to the appellants, therefore, Order XXI, rule 16, did not apply. In appeal it is contended that the suit is still pending, and reliance is placed on a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Bhugwan Das Khettry v. Nilkanta Ganguli (1) to the effect that a suit of this kind may be "pending" even after the decree absolute. A question is raised as to whether these proceedings are governed by the new

(1) 9 C. W. N. 171.

Code of Civil Procedure. It seems to us that the proceedings must be held to be governed by the new Code. It is true that the preliminary decree was passed by the Subordinate Judge in December 1908 just before the new Code came into force, but the case, as already stated, was brought up to this Court and a decree was passed by this Court in May 1910, after the passing of the new Code. Before the passing of the new Code there was considerable conflict of judicial opinion on the question whether proceedings after a preliminary decree for sale or redemption should be regarded as proceedings in a suit or as proceedings in execution of a decree. Under the present Code there can be no doubt that such proceedings must be held to be proceedings in a suit. We have no difficulty in holding that the suit with which we are now concerned was still pending within the meaning of Order XXII, rule 10, when the appellants' application to be made plaintiffs was filed. In the definition of "decree" contained in the present Code of Civil Procedure, it is explained that a decree is preliminary when further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of. This makes it quite clear that a suit of this kind does not come to an end after the passing of a preliminary decree. In this view it is unnecessary to consider whether Order XXII, rule 10, applies to execution proceedings. It was held by this Court that section 372 of the old Code of Civil Procedure did not apply to execution proceedings. It is unnecessary to decide whether Order XXII, rule 10, which has taken the place of that section, does or does not apply to execution proceedings. It is sufficient for the present case to say that the suit was still pending when the appellants' application to be made plaintiffs was made. The only other question is whether there has been a devolution of interest which entitles the present appellants to be made plaintiffs in the suit. The sale-deed executed by Musammat Maimuna Khatun transfers the whole of the mortgaged property to the appellants and recites that part of the price has been left in their hands in order that they may proceed to redeem the property. The sale-deed in fact comes very near being a transfer of the preliminary decree. It is quite clear from the terms of the deed that the parties considered that the purchasers of the property would be entitled to redeem the property in the suit in which the preliminary decree had been passed, without holding that there had been a definite transfer of the decree. We have no doubt whatever that there has been a devolution of interest which entitles the appellants to be made plaintiffs in the suit. In our opinion the appellants' application should have been allowed. We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and direct that the name of the appellants be entered as plaintiffs in the place of Musammat Maimuna Khatun. The respondents must pay the appellants' costs.

Appeal allowed.

TIKA SHAHU v. CHIRKAT SHAHU.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendants possession of an anicut and a chal. The plaintiffs' predecessors-in-title constructed an anicut in the bed of the river and took water through a channel to lands that they occupied under defendants' predecessors. They also continued the channel, apparently by permission of the riparian proprietors, higher up and sold them the surplus water. In 1904 the anicut was washed away by the flood and in 1908 the defendants, who were the owners of the land for the irrigation of which the water was originally taken and had re-entered into possession, erected by permission of Government a new anicut, partly on the same site as the old anicut, and have since been using the upper reaches of the chal where there are not riparian owners to supply water for payment to the other owners. As regards those upper reaches, the evidence is that the plaintiffs and their predecessors have enjoyed for at least forty years a possessory right over the upper reach of the chal above the plaintiffs' lands. The defendants have not shown any right on their part to interfere with the plaintiffs' proprietary right and the Subordinate Judge was right in restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs' enjoyment of the chal. The plaintiffs have not in fact been damnified by the interference of the defendants, but on the contrary have gained by the reconstruction of the anicut by the defendants. In these circumstances we think a sum of Rs. 100 will be sufficient damages. As regards the anicut, we agree so far with the lower Court as to be of opinion that the plaintiffs have failed to prove any present right to possession of the anicut. They were allowed to erect the anicut which has been swept away for the purpose of irrigating the lands which they then held and which they hold no longer. They are, therefore, no longer entitled to this easement. As regards the defendants' claim for compensation for clearing the channel, they have not shown any principle entitling them to compensation and their claim must be disallowed.

In the result we must modify the decree in favour of the plaintiffs by awarding Rs. 100 for damages. In other respects both appeals are dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 240 allowed in part; Decree modified.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 28, interpretation and scope of—Suit by heir of deceased to recover moveables of deceased detained by defendant, whether cognizable by Small Cause Court—Defendant's denial of plaintiff's title, effect of.

The suits contemplated by the words in Article 28 of Schedule II of Act IX of 1887, are suits for the recovery of the property of an intestate, between rival claimants to the estate or against persons administering the estate.

Therefore a Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit by the heir of a deceased to recover from the defendant certain moveable property of the deceased detained by him. The fact that the defendant denies the title of the plaintiff does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court.

Kopalee Bewah v. Keshram Kooch, 11 W. R. 93; Mohesher Mondul v. Koilash Nath Mundul, 7 C. L. R. 71; Okheda v. Gulabo, 27 A. 622; A. W. N. (1905) 134; 2 A. L. J. 388, referred to.

Rule against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge of Saran, dated the 13th May 1914.

Babu Rajendra Prosad, for the Petitioner.

Babu Probodh Chandra Mukerjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The opposite party instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court for recovery of certain ornaments and cash which belonged to one Phuleshwari. They were alleged to have been made over to the defendant No. 1 after her death, and were withheld by him from the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs alleged that Phuleshwari was the wife of the plaintiff No. 1 and mother of the plaintiff No. 2. Defendant No. 1 denied that there was such relationship between the plaintiffs and the deceased or that he had ever received the ornaments and cash. The Judge of the Small Cause Court held that the plaintiffs were the heirs as alleged by them and that, on Phuleshwari's death, the ornaments and cash were made over by the chaukidar and daffadar to the defendant No. 1; and he accordingly gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. Defendants thereupon moved this Court, and obtained this Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge should not be set aside on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to decide the case.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioners that the suit is exempted from the cognizance of the Provincial Small Cause Court by Article 28 of Schedule II of Act IX of 1887, which exempts a suit "for a legacy or for the whole or a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator, or for the whole or a share of the property of an intestate". The question, therefore, is whether this is a suit for the "whole or a share of the property of an intestate" within the meaning of the said Article. We are of opinion that the suits contemplated by the said words in Article 28 are suits for the recovery of the property of an intestate between rival claimants to the estate, or against persons administering the estate: and this was the view taken in the case of Kapalee Bewah v. Keshram Kooch (1). In that case the learned Judges had to consider the second exception to section 6 of Act XI of 1865, which exempted suits for "a share or part of a share in an intestacy" from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court; and Mr. Justice Norman, in delivering the judgment of the Court, said as follows: "We think that those words are intended to apply to suits by persons claiming as heirs against other persons similarly entitled in order to determine their respective rights and interests, and to suits against persons administering the estate of a person who has died intestate, where the share or proportion to which the claimant is entitled is in question", and do not apply to suits by the heirs against a wrong-doer. A similar view was taken in the case of Moheshur Mondul v. Koilash Nath Mundul (2) where, in considering the said section, Mitter and Maclean, JJ, held that "suits between parties claiming respectively, property left by a deceased person as heirs-at-law of such person, are contemplated by this exception". The Allahabad High Court, in considering Article 28 of Schedule II of the present Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, agreed with the view taken in the above two cases (See the case of Chhedi v. Gulabo (3).

Reliance has been placed on behalf of the petitioners upon two cases reported in 17 W. R. [Grish Chunder Singh v. Auna Dossee (4) and Nabin Chunder Goosamee v. Dribo Moyee Debee (5)], in which Couch, C.J., held that a suit to recover money as personal property in respect of a share under an intestacy is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. But the facts of the first of the two cases (at page 46 of the said Volume) do not appear from the report, and we do not know whether the suit was against a rival claimant. The second case reported at page 520 was clearly a suit against a person who also claimed to be an heir; and the suit would fall within the class of suits contemplated by the exception to section 6 of Act XI of 1865 as laid down by Mr. Justice Norman. It is true that the Small Cause Court Judge also asked the High Court to set aside a previous decree passed by him in a suit, which had been brought apparently against a wrong-doer. The learned Judges did not interfere, although on the ground that the decree had been passed long ago and that the parties had made no application to the High Court.

We agree with the view taken in the first three cases noticed above. It is contended that in these three cases the defendant did not deny the title of the plaintiff. But in the case of Kapalee Bewah v. Keshram Kooch (1), we think that the plaintiff's title must have been denied, as the reference to the Munsif's finding that the plaintiff was not the wife of the deceased would go to show. In the Allahabad case, the heirship of the plaintiff had been determined in a previous suit between the parties, but then that fact is not relied upon and, in fact, has not even been referred to in the judgment of the Court. The judgment in all those three cases proceeded upon the ground that the suit contemplated by the section was one between rival claimants to the estate under an intestacy. The fact, therefore, that the defendants in the present case have denied the title of the plaintiffs is immaterial.

(1) 1 W. R. 93.
(2) 7 C. L. R. 71.
(3) 27 A. 622; A. W. N. (1905) 134; 2 A. L. J. 388.
(4) 17 W. R. 46.
(5) 17 W. R. 520

It was argued that the title of the plaintiffs having been disputed in the present case, the suit was taken out of the cognizance of the Small Cause Court. But the suit is based upon the ground that certain moveable property left by the deceased was detained by the defendants. There is nothing in the Small Cause Courts Act to show that the jurisdiction of the Court is ousted merely because the plaintiff's right is denied. We are of opinion that the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit,

The Rule must accordingly be discharged with costs. We asses the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Rule discharged.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Mitakshara system—Adoption by junior widow with consent of majority of sapindas—Consent of senior widow not obtained—Validity of adoption.

Under the Mitakshara system of Hindu law an adoption made by a junior widow of a deceased Hindu without the consent of the senior widow is invalid even though the adoption was made with the consent of the majority of sapindas, as the senior widow has a preferential right to make an adoption.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, in Original Suit No. 82 of 1909.

FACTS.—One Kakerla Lakshmipathi died without male issue, leaving two widows him surviving. The junior widow, after obtaining the consent of the majority of the sapindas, adopted a son to her deceased husband, without the consent of the senior widow and without even consulting her about the matter. The senior widow then sued for a declaration that the adoption was not true and valid. The Temporary Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam held that though the plaintiff was not consulted and was not even present at the adoption, it was valid as it was made with the consent of the majority of the sapindas. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellant:—The adoption is clearly illegal as the senior widow did not consent to the same. Padajirav v. Ramrav (1) and Ranjit Lal Karmakar v. Bejoy Krishna Karmakar (2). West and Buhler also say the same thing.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Row, for the Respondents:—At the worst the omission to obtain the senior widow's consent is only improper and the doctrine of factum valet will apply to validate the same. [Narayanasami Naick v. Mangammal (3).] The text of West and Buhler does not apply to Madras, as the law here is different and as a widow in Bombay can adopt even without the consent of the sapindas.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, the senior widow of Kakerla Lakshmipathi deceased, sued for a declaration that the alleged adoption of the 2nd defendant made by the 1st defendant, the junior widow, is neither true nor valid, as it was made without her consent. The defence is that it is true and valid. The Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiff was not consulted by the 1st defendant about the adoption and that she was not present at it, but that as it was made with the consent of the majority of the sapindas it is valid.

In appeal it is argued that an adoption made without the consent of the senior widow (the plaintiff) and without even consulting her is not valid in law. There is no Madras decision directly in point. In Narayanasami Naick v. Mangammal (3) the learned Judges held that the omission by the senior widow to consult her co-widow, though no doubt improper, would not be a sufficient reason for holding the adoption made by her to be invalid, because a junior widow is bound, as a matter of duty, to give her consent. In Bombay it has been held that where there are several widows the elder has a right to adopt even without the consent of the junior widow [see Rakhmabai v. Radhabai(4)], but that the junior widow cannot adopt without the consent of the elder [See Padajirav v. Ramrav (1)], except in certain circumstances to which it is now unnecessary to refer. This view has been accepted by the Calcutta High Court [See Ranjit Lal Karmakar v. Bejoy Krishna Karmakar (2)]. West and Buhler are the only text-writers cited before us who deal with this question. They say that in the case of a difference of opinion between the widows "the elder has the superior right; and the younger cannot, it would seem, adopt without her senior's authority, except in case of irregularity on the senior's part causing interference by the caste." Then the opinions of the Sastris to the same effect are quoted. But it has been urged before us that the law is different in Madras, because in Bombay an adoption may be made by a widow without the consent of the sapindas of her husband.

Now when several widows inherit jointly, the senior widow, in the case of an ordinary co-parcenership, has a preferential right to the management of the joint property on behalf of all the widows, unless by consent or decree the joint estate is converted into an estate in severalty. If the property is impartible, she is entitled to hold it subject to the rights of the others for maintenance. An adoption by the junior widow will thus have the effect of depriving her of the impartible property or the possession of the co-parcenary property. In Madras the law relating to the senior widow's right of management was laid down in the Tanjore case reported as Jijoyiamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Saiba (5). The learned Judges refer to the following statement of the law in Strange's Hindu Law, page 127, at page 435:— "When a man has left more widows than one, and no son by any, she who first married, being the one who is considered to have been married from a sense of duty, succeeds,..... the others, inheriting in their turn as they survive, being entitled in the meantime, to be maintained by the first."

Has she got the same preferential right in the performance of religious duties? In Colebrook's Digest of Hindu Law, Book IV, Chapter I, Sloka 51, it is said that "the first is the wife married from a sense of duty, and it is she whom acts of duty concern," which, the commentator states, means "who officiates in acts of religion and so forth." A sloka of Yagnavalkya is quoted as showing that if there are several wives of the same class, acts of religion are lawfully performed "by no other than the eldest" (Slokas 48 and 49): and the commentator Vignaneswara is cited as saying that in such a case the husband shall not employ another in business relating to religious duties and that the first married one must be preferred in all matters relating to acts of religion even though, according to Vishnu, there may be younger wives who are dearer to him. Certain exceptions are referred to in Sloka 50. It will be observed that it is the very ground on which her preferential right to manage the property left by the deceased husband is recognised by Strange in the passage cited above and extracted in the judgment in Jijoyiamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Bayi Saiba (5). A fortiori her preferential right to perform acts of religion should be recognised: and it is not denied that adoption is an act of religion. The decisions of the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts are based on sound principle and we are of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiff has got a preferential right to make the adoption and that so long as that preferential right exists in the plaintiff, the 1st defendant has no right to adopt. The consent of the sapindas will not, in the circumstances, give her a right to adopt and the adoption is, therefore, invalid.

We accordingly reverse the decree of the lower Court and declare that the adoption of the 2nd defendant by the 1st defendant is not valid, and that the 2nd defendant is not, therefore, the adopted son of the deceased Kakerla Lakshimpathi. The plaintiff is entitled to her costs from the defendants in both Courts.

Appeal allowed;
Decree set aside.

A Revenue Surveyor's reports though admissible under section 32 (2) of the Evidence Act have very little probative value when they are not signed by the transferors and are not supported by the evidence of persons who purport to sign them as witnesses.

To claim the protection afforded by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, the purchaser must prove that he inquired as to who was in actual possession of the land for 12 years before purchase, and should not assume that his vendor is the true owner merely on the strength of the pyatbaings, which are not signed by the transferors The pyatbaings after the Transfer of Property Act came into force are no documents of title at all.

Ramen Chetty v. Po Son, 4 Ind. Cas. 309; 5 L. B. R. 125, referred to and followed.

Mr. Gyi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Palit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants proved their mortgage to the satisfaction of both the lower Courts. There was oral evidence in support of it apart from the admission of the 1st defendant, Maung Pe. Maung Pe alleged that the mortgaged land was subsequently transferred to him outright as the plaintiff could not pay the mortgage debt. But this subsequent transfer was not proved. It rests on the statement of the 1st defendant, Maung Pe, and the pyatbaings of 1907, Exhibits 1 and 2. These pyatbaings were rejected by the Township Court. The Revenue Surveyor who wrote the two reports died before the suit was filed and the reports would probably be admissible under section 32 (2) of the Evidence Act. But they are not signed by the alleged transferors and are not supported by the evidence of persons who purported to sign them as witnesses. In the circumstances their probative value is very slight and would not justify the Court in finding that Po Nyein and his wife reported an outright transfer of the land to their mortgagee, Maung Pe.

The only question that remains is whether the District Court was right in deciding that Maung Mya and Ma Kyet U (who bought the land from San Nyun and Ma Hla Bon, who had in turn got it from the mortgagee, Maung Pe) are bona fide purchasers without notice and as such entitled to the protection afforded by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, as held by the District Court. The learned District Judge says that Maung Mya could hardly have been expected to carry his enquiries back further than to Maung Pe. Maung Pe obtained the land only some five years before the sale to Maung Mya. Was Maung Mya justified in assuming that Maung Pe was the true owner merely on the strength of the pyatbaings, Exhibits 1 and 2, which were not signed by the transferors? I think it is clear that he was not justified in doing so and that he must be held to have had notice of the plaintiffs-appellants' mortgage, seeing that but for his wilful abstention from enquiry he would have known it. As pointed out in Ramen Chetty v. Po Son (1), an inquiry into title which does not extend to inquiry as to actual possession for at least 12 years cannot be said to be such an inquiry as a reasonable and prudent man would or should make. It was Maung Mya's duty before purchasing the land to inquire from Po Nyein and Ma Ngwe Kin, who to his knowledge were in possession some five years before. I see no reason at all for holding that Po Nyein and Ma Ngwe Kin are estopped from asserting their rights as mortgagors, even if Maung Pe was on the footing of an ostensible owner in 1907. It would be still incumbent on Maung Mya to inquire into Maung Pe's title. The pyatbaings of 1907 are not documents of title at all.

Maung Pe being merely a mortgagee had no power to sell the land.

The decree of the District Court is set aside and that of the Township Court is restored. The respondents will pay the costs of the appellants in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

JHANDA MAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Musammat SARDAR BEGAM AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Pre-emption—Custom—Instances in adjoining mohallas—Degree of proof required—Lahore City, Taksali Gate Bazar.

In order to prove the custom of pre-emption instances of the enforcement of the right of pre-emption in the adjoining streets or mohallas are relevant.

The circumstance that a particular bazar is essentially a street of shops and prostitutes' lodgings cannot override the fact that pre-emption has been enforced as a matter of right in certain cases.

The mere fact that the property in suit has changed hands three or four times without any claim of pre emption being made does not go to disprove the existence of the custom.

Where in a pre-emption suit it was contended on behalf of the vendee-defendant that four instances were not enough to prove custom and that compromises out of Court should not be relied on:

Held, (1) that extra-judicial compromises were valid instances of the existence of custom;

(2) that each case must be decided on its own facts and that in this case the custom of pre-emption was proved to exist

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Lahore Division, dated the 15th June 1914, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 30th March 1912, decreeing claim.

Messrs. Beechey and Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Appellant.

The Hon'able Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been very hotly contested. Here in second appeal the questions for decision are:—

(a) Does the custom of pre-emption exist in the sub-division of Lahore City in which the property sought to be pre-empted is situate?

(b) Is the property a house or a shop?

(c) The proper price.

As regards (a) we have to consider in what sub-division the property lies. Plaintiff says Guzar Talwara, vendee says Taksali Gate Bazar. The latter is a comparatively small and defined area, while no one is able to give the boundaries of the former. It seems that in ancient times the whole city consisted of two "Guzars" called Talwara and Barra respectively; but, in my opinion, these cannot now be called sub-divisions for the purposes of pre-emption, the city having altered enormously. The property is, therefore, in the Taksali Gate sub-division. As to whether the custom of pre-emption exists in this sub-division or not, I have heard an enormous amount of argument, supported on both sides by a great mass of authority in the shape of published rulings. I do not think any good purpose will be served by a detailed notice here of all these rulings, all of which I have seen and weighed. It will suffice if I note the lines of argument put forward and deal in turn with each point taken.

Mr. Beechey for plaintiff-appellant points to four instances of the enforcement of right of pre-emption in the immediate vicinity, two being decided contested cases: Musammat Piro v. Miran Bakhsh, decided 10th November 1897 by the Additional District Judge, Lahore, and Ishar Das v. Imam Din, decided by the Munsif on 18th March 1895, and the other two extra-judicial compromises in 1906 and 1908. These cases are fully proved and Mr. Beechey points to a number of rulings, Muhammad Nawaz Khan v. Bobo Sahib (1) (Ferozepore), Maula Bakhsh v. Devi Ditta (2) (Amritsar), Fateh Muhammad v. Karimun (3) (Jullundur), Manohar Lal v. Pars Ram (4) (Jagadhri), as showing that instances in adjoining streets or muhallas are relevant.

Mr. Shafi meets all this by the argument that the above rulings all relate to towns in which the custom is universal, while in many parts of Lahore the custom has been found not to exist [Raman Mal v. Bhagat Ram (5) and Hakim Rai v. Muhammad Din (6), etc., etc.]. I am not pressed by this argument, as there is no real reason to suppose that Lahore is very different from the other towns named above in the matter of the prevalence of the custom.

Then Mr. Shafi argues that the Taksali Gate Bazar is essentially a street of shops and prostitutes' lodgings, and thus the necessity for custom of pre-emption is not apparent, see P. W. No. 7, who has a shop separated by 14 shops from the property in suit. Such a circumstance cannot override the fact that pre-emption has been enforced as a matter of fact in recent times in four cases.

Then it is argued that this property has changed hands three or four times without any claim being made, and that similarly other sales have taken place without contest. This seems to me immaterial: it is not always the case that a neighbour has the desire or the means to acquire adjoining property which is in the market.

Next, it is contended that compromises out of Court prove nothing. Remarks of this sort are to be found in Raman Mal v. Bhagat Ram (5) and elsewhere, but they are contradicted in other rulings. The fact is that "circumstances alter cases"; it seems to me that where a would-be-purchaser of property, on being challenged by a soi-disant pre-emptor, surrenders, there is a fairly strong inference that it is because he knows the claimant will be able to oust him by suit if he resists.

Then it is contended that Ishar Das's case was decided by a Munsif on a wrong imposition of onus. I cannot see that this matters. It is also pointed out that the property in Musammat Piro's case was in Tibbi Bazar, but reference to the map shows that that Bazar is so near the Taksali Gate Bazar that the two may well be deemed to be in the same sub-division.

Again, Mr. Shafi points to Imam Din v. Ghulam Muhammad (7) and contends that instances in adjoining sub-divisions should not be taken into account; but the sentence in point beginning "we think, however," does not support him here, as the dictum is strictly limited to cases in which there are no instances in the sub-division in which the property is situated.

Further Gokal Chand v. Mohan Lal (8), a Lahore case, is relied upon by Mr. Shafi. There in a certain sub-division two cases were proved of pre-emption and yet the Court held the custom not established. Here we have four instances. Each case must be decided on its own facts. Musammat Durga Devi v. Ramsan (9) is also put forward as showing how much proof of the custom is required. There, too, only two instances were established, one very old and the other a case in which there was a reason to believe the compromise out of Court was amicably arranged, the vendee being amply compensated. I decline to apply that case here.

My finding, then, is that the custom of pre-emption of house property does exist in the Taksali Gate Bazar sub-division of Lahore City, and I overrule the lower Appellate Court here. As regards the nature of the property, vendee, by re-building in the teeth of repeated prohibitions and warnings from the first Court, has made inspection impossible, and, therefore, the past history of the spot must be considered. I have seen the evidence of Wasdeo himself, P. W. No. 5, who occupied it for seven years up to 1903 using no part as a shop; of P. W. No. 1, P. W. No. 3, P. W. No. 4, P. W. No. 7, P. W. No. 8, P. W. No. 9, P. W. No. 10, P. W. No. 11, P. W. No. 14 (drawer of a plan on the record), P. W. No. 16 (writer of deeds concerning property in these parts); and per contra of D. W. No. 2 and D. W. No. 3. The first Court found the property was predominantly residential on the oral and documentary evidence, and I must say I think with much reason. The lower Appellate Court after a few rather summary observations on the subject finds the premises were not residential or subject to pre-emption. What has to be decided is not whether they were residential, but whether they come under the exceptions set forth in section 5 of the Act, i. e., if not a shop, or a katra, or a serai or dharmsala, mosque or "other similar building," these premises are certainly subject to pre-emption—cf. section 7 of the Act. I hold the property was not at time of sale a shop and so was subject to pre-emption.

I, therefore, accept the appeal with costs.

HARIHAR PROSAD NARAIN SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Co-mortgagors—Purchaser of portion of mortgaged property, position of—One co-mortgagor redeeming whole mortgage, right of—Contribution—Charge.

When one of several mortgagors redeems the whole mortgage, he acquries a charge on the share of each of his co-mortgagors for his proportion of the expenses properly incurred in the redemption of the property.

The purchaser of a portion of a mortgaged property is in the same position as one of the co-mortgagors and if he redeems the property, he is entitled to a charge for such sum as the owner of the rest may be called upon to contribute.

A decree obtained on a mortgage does not extinguish the security, though the security may be merged in the decree, and the judgment recovered in any form of action is still but a security for the original cause of action until it be made productive in satisfaction to the judgment-creditor.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the second defendant in a suit for contribution under the first paragraph of section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. The facts essential for the determination of the questions raised before us are not in controversy and may be briefly recited. On the 25th March 1897, Khaja Obedullah executed a mortgage of a third share in each of two properties, Attapur and Paharpur, to Mahomed Sidiq to secure a loan of Rs. 25,000, which carried interest at 18 per cent. per annum. The mortgagee sued to enforce his security, obtained a decee on the 20th November 1905 and in execution thereof had the mortgaged properties advertised for sale. Meanwhile, the interest of the mortgagor in Attapur, which for the sake of brevity we shall call A, had been sold in execution of a decree on a puisne mortgage dated 9th June 1897 and had passed on the 21st September 1904 into the hands of one Jobraj Lal, now represented by the plaintiff. The interest of the mortgagor in Paharpur, which we may call B, had also passed out of his hands, and had, by successive transfers dated 18th May 1898, 29th September 1902 and 7th November 1902, vested in the second defendant. Consequently, when the mortgagee-decree-holder took steps for the sale of the mortgaged properties, the purchaser of A satisfied the decree on the 23rd October 1906 by payment of Rs. 7,456. He then instituted this suit on the 30th September 1909 for recovery of a proportionate amount from the first defendant, namely, Rs. 5,964, together with interest thereon at 18 per cent per annum; he also prayed that this sum might be declared a charge upon B. The suit was originally brought against the first defendant, on the assumption that she had purchased B; but, when it subsequently transpired that B belonged not to the first defendant, but to her son, the second defendant, the latter was joined as a party on the 17th December 1909, that is, more than three years after the satisfaction of the mortgage-decree. Three questions, consequently, arose for consideration in the Court below, namely, first, was the suit barred by limitation, secondly, was the plaintiff entitled to a charge upon B, and, thirdly, what was the amount recoverable by the plaintiff? The Subordinate Judge has held that the suit is not barred by limitation, as the plaintiff is entitled to a charge on B, enforceable within 12 years from the date when the money sued for became due (Article 132 of the second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act). The Subordinate Judge has also found that the plaintiff was entitled to receive Rs. 5,026, with interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum from date of deposit to date of suit, to be realised by sale of B. The second defendant has appealed to this Court, and has contended, first, that the suit is barred by limitation, as the plaintiff has no charge for the realisation of the sum due to him, and, secondly, that the sum decreed has been ascertained on erroneous principles.

In support of the first ground, reliance has been placed upon the decision in Nawab Jahan Ara Begum v. Mirza Shuja-ud-din(1). In that case, a mortgagee had obtained a decree on his mortgage, which was satisfied by one of several representatives of the deceased mortgagor. It was held that sections 82 and 95 of the Transfer of Property Act were inapplicable, that the representative who paid up the decretal amount did not thereby acquire a charge on the morgaged property, and that, consequently, to a suit for contribution brought by him, the three years' rule of limitation contained in Article 61 or Article 99 of the second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act was applicable. It need not be disputed that the principle, which underlies the decision in Nawab Jahan Ara Begum v. Mirza Shuja-ud-din (1), assists the contention of the appellant; but it is worthy of note that a contrary rule was adopted in Raushan Ali v. Kali Mohan (2), where Ghose, J., held, with the concurrence of Casperez, J., who was a party to the decision in Nawab Jahan Ara Begum v. Mirza Shuja-ud-din (1), that where one of two co-mortgagors pays off the entire mortgage-debt, he occupies the position of the mortgagee when he seeks contribution from his co-mortgagor. This view is in accord with the decisions in Unnunnissa v. Muhammad Yar Khan (3); Pancham Singh v. Ali Ahmad (4); Ashfaq Ahmad v. Wasir Ali (5); Nura Bibi v. Jagat. Narain (6); Bhagwan Das v. Har Dei (7); Ibn Hasan v. Brij Bhukhan (8); Bhagwan Das v. Karam Husain (9); Har Prasad v. Raghunandan Prasad (10); Danappa v. Yamnappa (11); Asansab v. Vamana (12); Moidin v. Oothumangamni (13); Ghulam Maula Khan v. Banno Khanam (14). We may further observe that the view taken in Nawab Jahan Ara Begum v. Mirza Shuja-ud-din (1) is contrary to the rule adopted in Magniram v. Mehdi Hossein Khan(15), to which the attention of the Court was apparently not invited. An examination of the cases shows that Nawab Jahan Ara Begum v. Mirza Shuja-ud-din (1) stands alone, and it is really inconsistent with the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ahmad Wali Khan v. Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begum(16). In this case, the Judicial Committee construed section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is in these terms: "Where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property and obtains possession thereof, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors in the property for his proportion of the expenses properly incurred in so redeeming and obtaining possession." It was ruled that the section should not be limited in its operation to mortgages under which possession passes, and that it was more reasonable to construe the section distributively, to make the condition of obtaining possession apply only to the cases in which its fulfilment is, from the nature of the mortgage, possible, and in other cases to make the charge follow upon redemption. It is plain that if this principle be applied to the case before us, the objection of the appellant must be held entirely groundless. It cannot also be disputed that this conclusion, as is clear from the case of Digambar Das v. Harendra Narain (17), is in harmony with what is widely recognised as the rule of justice, equity and good conscience.

The principle which underlies the rule is thus formulated by Pomeroy in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, Volume III, Articles 1221, 1222: "Where a party interested in the premises, who is not personally and primarily liable as the principal debtor for the whole mortgage debt, pays the mortgage to the holder thereof, he is entitled to regard the transaction as an equitable assignment of the mortgage to himself, and to keep it alive as security of his own rights against others, who are owners of or interested in the land. Any such person who redeems, no matter how small a portion of the premises he may own, or how partial may be his interest, must redeem the entire mortgage by paying the whole mortgage debt. The doctrine of contribution among all those who are interested in having the mortgage redeemed, in order to refund the redemptor the excess of his payment over and above his own proportionate share, and the doctrine of equitable assignment, in order to secure such contribution, are the efficient means by which Equity completely and most beautifully works out perfect justice and equality of burden." To the same effect is the exposition by Sheldon in his work on Subrogation (Article 169): "One of several joint debtors will, as against his co-debtors, ordinarily be subrogated to the securities and means of payment of the common creditor whom he has satisfied, so as to enable him to recover from his co-debtors, by means thereof, their proportional share of the indebtedness which he has discharged; and this, as in other cases of subrogation, arises rather from natural justice than from contract. Each joint debtor is regarded as the principal debtor for that part of the debt which he ought to pay, and as a surety for his co-debtors as to that part of the debt which ought to be discharged by them." A similar reason for the rule is assigned by Harris in his work on Subrogation (section 424): "The payment (by one of two joint debtors) would not surely so absolutely extinguish the debt as to deprive the paying debtor of his right to contribution, to obtain which he must be subrogated, or he must take the position of a simple creditor and sue his co-debtor in assumpsit. The former course would serve to prevent a multiplicity of suits. The rule to be applied between them should be the same as between principal and surety. This rule applies as well to joint mortgagors, they being joint debtors or even if they be joint co-sureties." Jones on his treatise on Mortgages (Volume I, Article 877) defends the rule on a similar ground: "When a mortgage is paid by one entitled to redeem, who is under no obligation to pay it, although he does not take a formal assignment of it, he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee in the mortgaged property, and holds the title so acquired as against subsequent encumbrances, although he had also acquired the equity of redemption. In such case, no proof of intention on his part to keep the mortgage alive is necessary to give him the benefit of it; his payment of the mortgage and his relation to the estate are in aid of his title to strengthen and uphold it." The injustice which might result if this rule were not adopted, is forcibly described by Shepley, C. J., in Watkins v. Eaton (18): "If one, who may be obliged to redeem the share of a co-tenant to relieve his own share from incumbrance, could have no right to retain the share of such co-tenant as security and to obtain a reimbursement of the amount equitably chargeable to it, he might utterly fail to obtain compensation; and yet his co-tenant, without making any payment might be entitled to the full possession and benefit of his share of the land, discharged from the incumbrance. The law cannot be justly chargeable with such results, as produced by conformity to its provisions. The principle is well established and is of frequent application in the redemption of mortgages, that one having a legal interest in an estate under incumbrance, may redeem the whole estate, when necessary, to enable him to redeem his own shar or to relieve his own title from incumbrance, even against the pleasure of a co-tenant or other owner, and may be regarded as the assignee of the incumbrance upon the other shares or interests, and may retain possession of them to secure a reimbursement of the amount equitably chargeable to them." It is consequently plain that the decision in Nawb Jahan Ara Begum v. Mirza Shuja-ud-din (1) not only stands by itself, but is also not well-founded on principle. On the other hand, the view adopted in Raushan Ali v. Kali Mohan (2) is consistent with the rules of justice, equity and good conscience: but we may observe parantheticaly that we must not be taken to approve of another proposition enunciated in the same case, namely, that an assignee of a lease hold interest created by one of the co-mortgagors, though entitled to claim contribution, cannot claim a charge against the shares of the co-mortgagors of the lessor. We hold accordingly that when one of several mortgagors redeems the whole mortgage, he acquires a charge on the share of each of his co-mortgagors for his proportion of the expenses properly incurred in the redemption of the property.

This principle is obviously applicable to the case before us, although the mortgage debt was satisfied by a purchaser of a portion of the mortgage property after a decree had been obtained on the mortgage. The purchaser who redeemed the mortgage was, for the purposes of the rule, in the same position as if he were one of two joint mortgagors : Mohan v. Kashinath (19). The fact that a decree had been obtained on the mortgage was also immaterial, because a decree obtained on a mortgage does not extinguish the security, though the security may be merged in the decree, and the judgment recovered in any form of action is still but a security for the original cause of action, until it be made productive in satisfaction to the judgment-creditor : Bibi Jan v. Sadi Bewah (20); Purnamal v. Venkata (21); Surjiram v. Barhamdeo (22); Drake v. Mitchell (23); Lowry v. Williams (24);

Economic Life Assurance Society v. Usborne(25) Indeed, it has been held that the right to claim contribution is the same, whether the mortgage is redeemed in the usual way or whether the debt is realised by a forced sale of the property of one of several owners of the equity of redemption : Rajah of Vizianagaram v. Rajah of Setrucherla(26), Ibn Hasan v. Brij Bhukhan (8). We hold accordingly that the plaintiff is entitled to a charge for such sum as the defendant may be called upon to contribute, and in this view no question of limitation arises. The first ground urged by the appellant consequently fails.

In support of the second ground, it has been argued that the values of A and B at the date of the mortgage of the 25th March 1897 have not been correctly determined. This contention is well-founded only in respect of A. As regards B, the plaintiff stated in the plaint that the value was Rs. 20,000 ; this was not specifically or by necessary implication denied in the written statement ; consequently under rule 5 of Order VIII of the Civil Procedure Code, the allegation of the plaintiff must be taken to have been admitted by the defendant. As regards A, the plaintiff stated, in his plaint, that its value was Rs. 10,000, but that it was subject to a prior charge for Rs. 5,000 under a usufructuary mortgage, dated the 14th December 1885. The defendant, in his written statement, disputed this valuation of A, The Subordinate Judge has found that the prior charge was real, but that the value of A, when unencumbered, was two-thirds of Rs. 22,000, as shown by a conveyance dated the 28th September 1899. This conclusion is erroneous, because A is not proved to be identical with the property mentioned in the conveyance. We have, however, other materials on the record from which the value of A may be determined. On the 21st September, 1904, A was sold in execution of a decree on a puisne mortgage for Rs. 10,540. This sum represents the value of A when not encumbered, reduced by the value of the prior encumbrance, Rs. 5,000, and amount chargeable on A in 1904 on the foot of the mortgage of the 25th March 1897. From these data, the value of A, when not subject to encumbrances, turns out to be Rs. 17,450. The value of A, when the mortgage of the 25th March 1897 was granted, was thus Rs. 12,450. Consequently, on the principle explained in Bhagwan Singh v. Muhammad Mashar Ali Khan (27), the defendant who held property B worth Rs. 20,000, is bound to contribute Rs. 4,596 out of the aggregate sum of Rs. 7,456 paid by the plaintiff to satisfy the whole mortgaged debt, although he held property A worth only Rs. 12,450. The finding of the Subordinate Judge on the question of the sum payable by the defendant must accordingly be varied by the substitution of Rs. 4,596 in place of Rs. 5,026, in his judgment. On this basis, the decree must be varied by the substitution of Rs. 6,530-4 in place of Rs. 7,037-14. The second ground must accordingly prevail to this extent.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the Subordinate Judge varied by the substitution of Rs. 6,530-4 in place of Rs. 7,037-14. Subject to this variation, the decree will stand confirmed. The defendant-appelant must pay the plaintiff-respondent his costs in this Court.

Appeal partly allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 1—Appeal filed beyond time, admissibility of—Court's negligence to observe procedure—Sufficient cause.

A party is not bound to make inquiries as to when a judgment will be delivered, but is entitled to rely on the Court obeying the express provisions of law and giving notice to his Pleader of the date fixed for delivery of judgment, and if an appeal is barred entirely through the negligence of the Judge in following the procedure, the appellant cannot be held responsible for it and the appeal should be admitted.

Mr. Shaw, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ba Dun, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—(December 14th, 1914).—Appellant was plaintiff in a suit in which the hearing was completed on 2nd April 1913 and judgment was reserved. No date was fixed for delivery of judgment, the case was never entered again in the cause list, and on the 9th April judgment dismissing the suit was delivered, without any notice to the parties and so far as the record shows in the absence of both of them and of their Pleaders. The Judge thus entirely flouted the provisions of the law laid down in Order XX, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure as well as the orders of this Court regarding the fixing of dates and the maintenance of cause lists. On having come to know that judgment had been delivered, the appellant applied for a copy on the 20th May and on 21st presented an appeal which was dismissed as time-barred. She filed affidavits, which stand uncontradicted, that she sent messengers several times to inquire when judgment was to be delivered, but they returned without any information and it was not till 16th May that she heard of its delivery. The District Court held that sufficient cause was not shown for admitting the appeal after time and that she had not used due diligence. I am unable to agree with him. The fact that Civil Courts were closed for over a fortnight at some period between 9th April and 16th May fully accounts for appellant's messenger failing to obtain any information. The 16th May was a Friday. Appellant lives some 20 miles from Moulmein, where the Township Court sits and her legal adviser lives. It cannot be said that if she travelled in and consulted him on Monday 19th and applied for the copy next day, that she failed to use due diligence. Moreover, it is not incumbent upon her to make inquiries about the judgment at all. She was entitled to rely upon the Court obeying the express provisions of law and giving notice to her Pleader of the date fixed for its delivery. That the appeal became barred was entirely due to the negligence of the Judge, and she cannot be held responsible for it. The appeal is allowed and the order of the District Court is set aside. The appeal will be admitted by that Court and disposed of according to law. Respondent will pay costs of this appeal, Advocate's fees two gold mohurs

FURTHER ORDER.—A certificate under section 13 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, will be granted.

Appeal allowed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 43—Landlord and tenant—Land belonging to Government transferred by lease—Government declaring its right and granting it to lessor—Determination of tenancy—Estoppel between lessor and lessee—Erroneous representation to create estoppel must be believed in good faith and after due inquiry—Privies, rights and liabilities of—Classes of privies.

Where land belonging to Government is included in a lease and the Government, subsequently having declared the land at its disposal, grants it to the lessor, the tenancy is determined by the declaration and the lessee cannot take the benefit of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In the absence of any allegation or proof to the effect that in taking the lease the lessee believed in good faith and after due inquiry the erroneous representation regarding the title to the land made by the lessor, the lessee is not entitled to rely upon the principle embodied in section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act applies also to the privies of the original transferor and the original transferee.

Unless a Statute expressly or by necessary implication precludes the application of provisions awarding rights to or imposing civil liabilities on the privies of the person to whom the rights are given or on whom the liabilities are imposed, the privies are entitled or are bound, as the case may be, to the extent to which the original parties are so entitled or are so bound. The extent of privy's liability, however, is not always co-equal with the extent of the liability of the person through whom he claims.

Privies are of three classes: (1) in blood (as heirs), (2) by estate (as lessees, assignees, etc.), (3) in law (as the lord by escheat, the tenant by courtesy, executors and administrators).

Second appeal from the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Canara in Appeal Suit No. 487 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Karkal, in Original Suit No. 361 of 1911.

Messrs. H. Balakrishna Rao and B. Ananda Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADSIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiffs represent the interests of the mulgeni tenants, who obtained a mulgeni lease in 1862 from the predecessor-in-title of the defendant, who is the purchaser from the purchaser of the mul right from the original landlord. The lands leased to the plaintiff's father consisted of several items. The small extent now in dispute is alleged by the plaintiffs to be a part of the lands leased on mulgeni right, while the defendant denies it. The defendant obtained this small extent of land now in dispute on darkhast grant from the Government in 1911 and is in possession of it. The first plaintiff's contention is that he and his father had been in possession of it along with the other mulgeni lands till September 1911 and that the defendant on the strength of the darkhast grant dispossessed the plaintiff in 1911. The defendant's case is that the plaint lands were not included in the mulgeni grant and that in any view, the lands having belonged to the Government, the defendant is entitled to possession of them as against his lessee after he (the defendant) obtained it from the real owner, the Government.

The District Munsif held that the plaint lands were included in the old mulgeni lease of 1862 and he further held that by virtue of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act the mulgeni right will attach to the plaint plot also in favour of the first plaintiff, notwithstanding that the plaint land did always belong to Government and was granted to the defendant in August 1911. The District Munsif, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge, without deciding the question whether the plaint land was included in the old mulgeni lease, held that section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply so as to give the first plaintiff a right to hold the plaint land on mulgeni lease and that the first plaintiff cannot claim such right on the strength of any other rule of law. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. The contention in second appeal is that both under section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act and on general principles of estoppel, the first plaintiff is entitled to a mulgeni right over the plaint land. (Of course, if the 1st plaintiff succeeds in this legal contention, the case would have to go back to the Subordinate Judge, as the learned Subordinate Judge has not decided the question whether the plaint land was included in the old mulgeni lease).

Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act is as follows: "Where a person erroneously represents that he is authorised to transfer certain immoveable property, and professes to transfer such property for consideration, such transfer shall, at the option of the transferee, operate on any interest which the transferor may acquire in such property at any time during which the contract of transfer subsists.

"Nothing in this section shall impair the right of transferees in good faith for consideration without notice of the existence of the said option."

The illustration to section 115 of the Evidence Act is as follows. "A, intentionally and falsely, leads B to believe that certain land belongs to A, and thereby induces B to buy and pay for it. The land afterwards becomes the property of A, and A seeks to set aside the sale on the ground that, at the time of the sale, he had no title. He must not be allowed to prove his want of title." The difference in language between section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act and the language of the illustration to section 115 of the Evidence Act seems to be that under section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, mere erroneous representation will apparently suffice and the representation need not be intentionally false, whereas the illustration to section 115 (Evidence Act) uses the words "intentionally and falsely." Again under section 43, there is nothing said about the belief of the transferee in the truth of the erroneous representation, whereas the illustration to section 115 implies that the transferee must have believed the intentional and false representation and acted on the faith of such representation. However, even as regards section 115 of the Evidence Act, it has been held that the representation of the transferor need not be fraudulent or dishonest in order to estop the transferor. [See Helan Dasi v. Durga Das Mundal (1)].

As stated already, in dealing with this legal question we have to assume without deciding that the plaint land was included in the old mulgeni lease of 1862 to the first plaintiff's father and that the defendant's predecessor-in-interest erroneously represented to the first plaintiff's father when granting the lease of 1862, that the plaint land belonged to him and that he had the power to grant a permanent lease of it though, as a matter of fact, the land belonged to the Government.

I am unable to accept the respondent's learned Vakil's contention that section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to transfers by way of lease, nor can I accept his contention that section 43 applies only as between the original transferor and the original transferee and does not bind the privies of the original transferor and cannot be taken advantage of by the privies of the original transferee. Unless a Statute expressly or by necessary implication precludes the application of provisions awarding rights to or imposing civil liabilities on the privies of the person to whom the rights are given or on whom the liabilities are imposed, the privies are entitled or are bound as the case may be, to the extent to which the original parties are so entitled or are so bound, under the general principles of jurisprudence.

Privies are usually described as of three classes:—Privies in blood (as heirs); privies by estate (as feoffees, lessees, assignees, etc.); and privies in law (as the lord by escheat, the tenant by courtesy, executors and administrators). It is of course rather loosely said that the privy stands in no better position than the party through whom he derives his title But it is well established that the extent of priviy's liability is not always co-equal with the extent of the liability of the person through whom he claims. Privies by blood are liable only to the extent of assets inherited by them. As regards privies by estate the extent of their liability is not so well settled. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XIII, page 403, it is broadly stated that "the lessor is estopped from repudiating the lease under which possession has been given or a tenancy which he has acknowledged, and that the assignee of the lessor's interest is estopped from denying anything which the lessor is estopped from denying. The foot-note at the same page begins by saying that "This is an example of the dictum that estoppels must be mutual and reciprocal." In Kurn Chowbey

(1) 4 C. L. J. 323.

v. Jankee Pershad (2) it was held that when a Raja granted a perpetual lease of certain lands in which the Raja had only an interest for a term, the plaintiff who purchased in auction-sale the proprietary rights of the Raja, who had after the lease to the defendant acquired such proprietary rights, was estopped from denying that the defendant had acquired perpetual occupancy rights. In Kazee Abdool Mannah v. Buroda Kant Banerjee (3) it was held that "parties holding an estate under a Permanent Ssettlement from Government cannot question the validity of a mokuraree pottah previously granted by themselves, when they sold the property under a temporary Settlement." The principle of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act is also embodied in section 18A of the Specific Relief Act.

If the matter were res integra, therefore, and if I were at liberty to construe section 43 of Act IV of 1882 according to its strict literal interpretation, I would hold that the defendant (assuming that he is a privy in estate to the original lessor as regards the disputed lands) cannot deny the right of the first plaintiff and the first plaintiff's option to treat the mulyeni right as attaching to the plaint lands which the defendant has recently obtained from the Government. But I am pressed by two decisions of this Court, the one in Subbaraya v. Krishnappa (4) and the other in Padmanabaya v. Ranga (5). In Subbaraya v. Krishnappa (4), where the first defendant got into possession of the disputed land as assignee of the second defendant, who was the plaintiff's lessee in respect of a barren sandhill which really belonged to Government as unassessed waste (though the plaintiff was entitled to Umki privilege in it) and who afterwards obtained a land on darkhast from the Government, it was held that the tenant (1st defendant) was not estopped from setting up a title adverse to the plaintiff as regards the land granted to him by the Government and that the plaintiff was not entitled to eject the 1st defendant simply because the 1st defendant entered into possession as plaintiff's tenant's assignee.

The learned Judges (Collins, C.J., and Parker, J.) stated quite broadly that when the plot was declared by the Revenue Authorities to be at the disposal of the Goverment and when they granted it to the defendant No. 1 (the assignee of the defendant No. 2), the tenancy of defendant No. 2 became determined. If this ruling is correct, it follows, that when the Government granted the plaint land to the defendant the plaintiff's tenancy was determined, the defendant was no longer the landlord of the 1st plaintiff as regards the plaint lands and the 1st plaintiff cannot take advantage of section 43 (Act IV of 1882) or of the priciple of estoppel embodied therein. Then in Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subba Raju (6) Benson and Krishnaswami Iyer, JJ., while conceding that section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act does not state that the transferee should have in good faith and after due inquiry believed in the erroneous representation made by the transferor and should have acted on that representation if he wanted to rely upon the rights given to him by section 43 to fasten upon the transferors after acquired title, the learned Judges nevertheless held that such words should be understood as embodied in that section, and they rely in support of their opinion on the decision in Gangabai v. Basvant (7). Now in paragraph 3 of the plaint in this case; it is not stated that the plaintiff's father, when he got the mulgeni right to the plaint lands in 1862, believed in good faith after taking reasonable care and making reasonable inquiry that the defendant's predecessor-in-title had power to grant the perpetual lease and he, therefore, obtained the said lease. In the absence of any allegation or proof to that effect, he is clearly not entitled (if Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (6) was rightly decided) to rely upon the principle of estoppel embodied in section 43. While I reserve my opinion on the question whether the decision in Subbaraya v. Krishnappa (4), has not been decided on too broad grounds (even the tenant's obligation to surrender possession before setting up the non-existence of the landlord's title not being referred to in the judgment in that case), and while I am free to confess that I feel some doubts as to whether the unqualified words of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act can be qualified by importing expressions found in section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, as seems to have been done in the case in Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (6), I do not feel myself strong enough to overrule the evidently considered judgment of the very learned Judges who decided the latter case. In the result, I would dismiss the second appeal with costs.

In conclusion, I might be permitted to express my appreciation of the very able manner in which this case has been argued for the appellants by Mr. H. Balakrishna Rao.

HANNAY, J.—I agree with my learned brother that, on the authority of the cases cited by him viz., Subbaraya v. Krishnappa (4) and Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subba Raju (6), this second appeal must fail and be dismissed with costs. Following the former decision I concur in holding that when the suit land was declared to be at the disposal of Government, the plaintiff's lease ceased to subsist and that, therefore, section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act is inapplicable and the plaintiffs cannot take the benefit of the section. The latter case is also authority that the plaintiffs cannot take the benefit of the section on another ground as well, namely, because they have failed to allege and prove that in taking the lease their predecessor believed in good faith and after due enquiry the erroneous representation made by the transferor. In this view it is unnecessary for me to express an opinion upon the question whether apart from these decisions the defendant, assuming he is a privy in estate to the original lessor in respect of the disputed land, would have been bound to concede to the plaintiffs the option allowed by section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act in the circumstances of the case.

Buddhist Law—Mortgage by husband, when binding on wife—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 85, 50—Mesne profits.

Where it is found that a Burmese Buddhist husband had authority from his wife to enter into a mortgage of the property, to sign the mortgage document and to register the same, and to be sued on the mortgage so as to bind her interest, the mortgagee is entitled to a declaration that he is the owner and to possession.

A decree for mesne profits may be passed against a defendant who has no right to be in possession as against the plaintiff, though he is the other defendant's tenant.

Mr. R. N. Burjorjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Johannes, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In 1906 U Meik, the husband of the 1st defendant, together with a son, San Bein, mortgaged the land in suit to the plaintiff. The plaintiff obtained a mortgage-decree against his mortgagors and bought the property with leave under that decree. The 1st defendant, who is the wife of U Meik, and her son, the 2nd defendant (San Chein), were in possession at the time when this suit was instituted. The wife claims that her half share in the property was not affected by the mortgage of U Meik or by the decree obtained against him in a suit in which she was not a party, or by the sale in pursuance of that decree. The land has stood in U Meik's name for several years. In 1900 he mortgaged this land; in 1904 he again mortgaged it and both the lower Courts have found that the wife knew of this present mortgage and acquiesced in it. I see no reason to interfere with that finding. The mortgage, therefore, by U Meik binds the wife's interest. It is urged that, under Order XXXIV, rule 1, which says all persons interested in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties, a decree obtained against U Meik is not binding on his wife. Order XXXIV, rule 1, supersedes section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act which had the following proviso: "Provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest." The unreported case of Ma

Tin May v. Maung Maung and Wightman and Company, Ltd. (1) of this Court shows, where a Burmese wife authorizes her husband to deal with her interest in landed property in his own name, the mortgage-decree obtained against the husband only binds the wife's interest in the land. In the present case the plaintiff, a Chetty money-lender, had known U Meik and his family for eight, nine or ten years, but there is nothing to show that he should be affected with notice that at the time of his mortgage the wife had a share in this property or that U Meik was not the sole owner. It is further contended that section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act requires the mortgagor, i. e., the wife, to sign the mortgage and that the mortgage of her interest must be by a registered document, her share in the mortgage being over Rs. 100 in value. The husband alone signed the document and he purports to mortgage the whole interest in the land. He must, therefore, be taken to have signed for himself and for his wife. Section 32 of the Registration Act says the person executing the mortgage is the proper person to register it. Therefore, it was not necessary for the wife to register the mortgage. The husband had authority from his wife to enter into the mortgage, to sign the mortgage document and to register the same, and to be sued on the mortgage so as to bind her interest. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to a declaration that he is the owner and to possession. He obtained a decree also for mesne profits against both defendants. It is contended that no decree for mesne profits should be made against the 2nd defendant because he was the tenant of the 1st defendant. But neither the 1st defendant nor the 2nd defendant had a right as against the plaintiff to be in possession. Both are, therefore, liable for mesne profits.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Practice—Madras High Court Original Side Rules, r. 48—Written statement, failure to file, in time—Delay, excuse of, if discretionary—Ex parte decree, setting aside of—Proof of promissory note—Witness examined—Notes of evidence not on record—Decree, if valid.

Under rule 48 of the Original Side Rules a defendant is not entitled, until the leave of the Court is obtained, to put in a written statement after the date fixed in the summons served on him and the Judge has a discretion to grant or refuse such leave.

Collins v. Vestry of Paddington, 5 Q. B. D. 368, 49 L. J. Q. B. 264; 42 L. T. 573; 28 W. R. 588, distinguished.

If, however, a written statement is filed after the due date without getting the leave of the Court, but an extension of time is afterwards applied for and obtained, the pleading already put in is not a nullity but can be looked into and accepted.

Graces v. Terry, 9 Q. B. D. 170; 51 L. J. Q. B. 484; 30 W. R. 748, explained.

Gill v. Woodfin, 25 Ch. D. 707; 53 L. J. Ch. 617; 50 L. T. 490; 32 W. R. 393 and Gibbings v. Strong, 28 Ch. D. 66; 50 L. T. 578; 32 W. R. 757, not followed.

An ex parte decree will not be set aside merely for the reason that it does not appear from the record, viz., (the Judge's notes) that the promissory note in suit had been properly proved, especially when the point had not been taken in the memorandum of appeal and where as a matter of fact it appeared from the statement of the Vakil for the respondent-plaintiff that an attestor of the note had been examined before the trial Judge.

Appeal from the decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Bakewell, dated the 7th Jaunary 1913, in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in Civil Suit No. 203 of 1911.

FACTS.—The suit was upon a promissory note. After successfully evading several summonses taken out for his appearance, the defendant was eventually served personally. He then put forward an untenable allegation that he was a lunatic and several months after the service of summons on him, he applied under rule 48 of the Original Side Rules for leave to file his written statement. In support of his application he filed an affidavit wherein he stated that he asked a third party to look after the litigation and that he had played him false. Bakewell, J., who heard the application refused the leave sought and decreed the suit. The defendant then preferred this appeal.

Mr. G. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the 2nd Appellants:—The learned Judge ought to have granted the extension of time applied for. Collins v. Vestry of Paddington (1), Gill v. Woodfin (2), Graves v. Terry (3) and Gibbings v. Strong (4). The suit promissory-note has not been properly proved. No witness has been examined. The decree is, therefore, illegal.

Mr. V. Visvanatha Sastry, for the Respondent:—The defendant successfully evaded service and delayed filing his defence. Further he put forward untenable allegations. Under the circumstances he was not entitled to any indulgence at the hands of the Court. The learned Judge had certainly a discretion in the matter and was justified in exercising it against the defendant. The point as to proof of the promissory note was not taken in the memorandum of appeal. As a matter of fact, however, one Singaravelu Pillay, an attestor, was examined in Court. The decree is, therefore, legal and proper.

JUDGMENT.—Rule 48 of the Original Side Rules clearly implies that until the leave of the Court is obtained, a defendant is not entitled to put in a statement of defence after the date fixed in the summons served on him to file such statement. It further implies that the Judge has a discretion to grant such leave and is not bound always to grant such leave. The case in Collins v. Vestry of Paddington (1), quoted by the appellant's learned Vakil, merely decides that when applications for extension of time are made before judgment, "reasonable relaxation" should be freely granted "whenever an unintentional mistake has been committed," and not that the Judge has no discretion in the matter of granting an extension of time. The decision in Gill v. Woodfin (2) professes to follow the decision in Graves v. Terry (3). The latter case only decided that the contention that a pleading paper not filed within the time allowed by the rules was a nullity, is not sustainable simply because an extension of time has not been obtained from the Court.

We take it that this means that if an extension is applied for and obtained, afterwards the pleading already put in might be looked into and accepted and need not be treated as a nullity and a fresh statement called for.

It must be admitted, however, that there are observations in Gill v. Woodfin (2) and Gibbings v. Strong (4), which seem to go as far as is contended for by the appellant, but with great respect we differ from those observations.

In the present case, the learned Judge clearly held that the defendant deliberately delayed putting in the statement of his defence till serveral months after the due date, and after evading the several summonses taken out for his appearance and after putting forward an untenable allegation that he was a lunatic. We are also not satisfied that the allegations in his affidavit that he asked somebody else to look after this litigation and that that man played him false, are at all reliable. We are, therefore, not prepared to interfere with the order of the learned Judge, who exercised the discretion vested in him by refusing to allow to the defendant leave to put in his statement of defence long after the due date.

It is next contended that the learned Judge in passing the ex parte decree in the plaintiff's favour failed to consider that the promissory note sued on had not been proved by any evidence found on the record. But this is not one of the grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal and as we are not bound to listen to it, we are not inclined to allow it to be argued in the circumstances of this case, especially as we are told by Mr. Visvanatha Sastry, the Vakil for the respondent, that one Singaravelu Pillay (an attestor of the promissory note) was examined by him before the learned Judge and did give evidence in proof of the promissory note, though his evidence does not appear among the Judge's notes.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

LAL SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 8—Occupancy rights, butamari per se does not confer—Criterion.

In the Sirsa Tahsil Settlement papers of 1863 and 1882, the clause giving the right to break up waste cannot be construed to import that butamari per se confers an occupancy right. As to whether it does or not, must turn on the question whether at the time when the land was first broken up and occupied, the competition for land was such that the tenant could dictate his own terms, or such that the landlord could do so Revision from the order of the Commissioner, Ambala Division, dated the 24th January 1914.

JUDGMENT.—I have heard the parties in this case. The applicants are tenants in Mauza Ganga of Tahsil Sirsa, and the land in dispute was broken up by them partly before and partly after 1882, while a portion of it was not broken up by them at all but received by them in an already cultivated state. The landlord having sued for possession by ejectment, the tenants sued for occupancy rights, which all the lower Courts have found that they have failed to establish.

As in many villages of the Sirsa Tahsil, the administration papers of the Settlements both of 1862 and 1882 contain a clause which sets forth the right, in the first place, of the owners and, in the second place, of the occupancy tenants, to break up waste and adds that, if these be unwilling, the right will be given to some one else. In the fifth ground of the application for revision, the applicants refer to this clause and claim it as establishing their rights of occupancy.

A clause of the same character in the administration paper of the village of Diwan Kheora in the Dabwali Tahsil of the old Sirsa District came under the consideration of the Financial Commissioner, Sir J. Lyall, in Case No. 5 of 1881-82. He observed that there was nothing in the rule expressly declaring that an occupancy tenant, obtaining and cultivating waste land under the clause, would acquire a right of occupancy in it. But in the circumstances of the particular case (which was one of first founding in 1853 and a subsequent re-founding in 1861 after abandonment in consequence of drought), Sir J. Lyall held that tenants of the village, classed as occupancy tenants at the Settlement of 1862, who had been allowed to break up waste land under this clause within the term of the expiring Settlement (1862-1882) were entitled to a right of occupancy in the lands broken up.

In Arjan v. Mandas (1) a similar case connected with occupancy rights in the same tract came before Mr. Thorburn, then Financial Commissioner. In the course of his judgment Mr. Thorburn observed: —

"Considering the fact that clause 6 only gave the right to break up waste, but is silent as to what status such butamari confers, it cannot be held that butamari per se confers an occupancy right. As to whether it does or not, must turn on whether or no at the time butamari were scarce, in a position, so to say, to make their own terms, and the advantages of getting new land brought under the plough were great to the landowners. A decision on this point will partly depend on the rents taken."

In the particular case then under his consideration, Mr. Thorburn decided that each plaintiff was "entitled to occupancy rights under section 8, Punjab Tenancy Act, in respect of all land broken up and since held by him or his predecessor-in-interest in or before 1882, and that, in respect of lands subsequently broken, the question depends on the finding of fact as to in what year...from any cause the competition changed from one for tenants on any terms almost, to one for land amongst tenants on such terms as the landlords chose to dictate."

In the case now before me, the second ground of revision amounts to a claim that this judgment has established as a general principle of tenancy law for unirrigated villages of the old Sirsa District, that a tenant who has broken up land prior to 1882 is entitled to occupancy rights in that land. This claim is not limited to tenants who enjoyed occupancy rights in other land in the village prior to 1882, and in this case t is shown that the father of the applicants had no such rights in this village prior to the Settlement of 1882.

The Assistant Collector who originally decided against the applicants held that, in the present instance, there was not the slightest reason to suppose that there was any scarcity of tenants when their father broke up the land now in dispute and added that the rent rate (which, as pointed out by Mr. Thorburn, is an important consideration in determining whether the evidence points to a scarcity of tenants) is high. The rent rate is four annas and four pies per pakka bigha, equivalent to seven annas and two pies per acre, a rate which is certainly not particularly low for barani lands in the Sirsa District and was double the land revenue rate in this village. In rejecting the application for revision, the Commissioner observed that the real point was "whether at the time that this land was first broken up and occupied by appellant or his ancestors, the competition for land was such that the tenant could make his own terms, or such that the landlord could do so, i.e., was land scarce or were tenants scarce," and he held that the facts established that the tenant was, at the time, in the less favourable position, a conclusion from which there is no reason to differ.

Mr. Thorburn's decision in Arjan v. Mandas (1) did not establish a new principle of law conferring occupancy rights under section 8 on all tenants in the old Sirsa District who had broken up waste prior to 1882. It merely provided a new criterion by which each claim put forward by such persons to the establishment of such rights might equitably be decided. The application of the criterion depends upon the particular facts of each case, and the question at issue in every such case is one of fact, whether the circumstances, and in particular the rate of rent paid, point to the conclusion that at the time, when the waste was broken up, tenants were so scarce as to be in a position to dictate their own terms. In cases where the breaking up of the waste took place prior to 1882, the probability that tenants were so scarce as to be in a position to dictate their own terms is greater than in cases where it took place later. But the probability is not to be taken as a certainty in any case, and all the circumstances must be examined.

In the present case, there are no grounds of revision at all in respect to that portion of the land which was received by the applicants' father in an already cultivated state. In respect to the remaining land, the contention of the applicants fails for the reasons explained, and they have not proved the facts which are requisite in order to establish the occupancy status on the principle laid down in Arjan v. Mandas (1).

The application is rejected.

Execution—Attachment—Dismissal of application, effect of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 57, whether has retrospective effect—Lease created during continuance of attachment—Auction-sale—Right of lessee as against auction-purchaser.

While after the passing of the new Civil Procedure Code, Order XXI, rule 57, has the effect of releasing an attachment when the execution application, under which the attachment was made, has been dismissed it cannot have a retrospective effect upon an order of dismissal made before the operation of the Code.

The dismissal of an application puts an end only to an attachment made on that application.

Where a lease was executed by the judgment-debtor while an attachment under the old Code was still subsisting

Held, that it was invalid as against the right of the auction-purchaser under his purchase in Court-auction held in pursuance of the attachment.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Kurnool, in Appeal Suit No. 59 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Nandyal in Original Suit No. 546 of 1911.

FACTS.—The suit land originally belonged to the father of the 2nd defendant, who gave a muniguttu lease thereof to one Rama Rao, who transferred the same to the plaintiff. This lease had still five years to run at the date of suit. Subsequent to the grant of the above lease, the 2nd defendant conveyed the said land by means of a colourable sale-deed to his brother-in-law, the 3rd defendant, who had no means of his own and was living with the 2nd defendant. It also appeared that after this alienation the 2nd defendant had mortgaged this very property as his own. After his purchase the 3rd defendant granted a reversionary muniqutta lease of the suit land to plaintiff for a further period of 12 years, to commence after the expiry of Rama Rao's lease. In the meantime the 1st defendant had the suit property attached in August 1906 in execution of a decree he had obtained against the 2nd defendant, brought it to sale, purchased it in February 1910 and obtained delivery thereof through Court. The plaintiff thereupon instituted the present suit for a declaration that the delivery obtained by the 1st defendant was only symbolical and did not affect his rights for a period of 17 years, made up of the unexpired five years of Rama Rao's lease and the 12 years of the 3rd defendant's lease. The 1st defendant, who alone contested the suit, admitted plaintiff's right to continue in possession for the unexpired portion of Rama Rao's lease, but disputed the validity of the 3rd defendant's lease. The Court of first instance decreed the suit so far as the admitted five years of Rama Rao's lease were concerned, but dismissed the suit as regards the period covered by the 3rd defendant's lease, holding that the sale by the 2nd defendant to the 3rd defendant was not true and was void as against the 1st defendant, that the plaintiff was not a bona fide alienee from the 3rd defendant and that in consequence the plaintiff's claims could not prevail over those of the 1st defendant. On appeal by the plaintiff the District Judge of Kurnool held that there was no attachment subsisting on the property on the date of 3rd defendant's lease, and that the plaintiff obtained the same, without notice of 3rd defendant's infirmity of title, if any, bona fide and for valuable consideration from the 3rd defendant, the ostensible owner. He, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's suit. The 1st defendant thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Appellant:—The order of remand is illegal. The lower Appellate Court clearly erred in modifying the decree of the District Munsif. The latter found that the sale to 3rd defendant was not true and was void as against the 1st defendant. The learned District Judge has not dissented from that finding. He ought, therefore, to have dismissed the appeal. Further, the District Munsif has found that prior to the grant of the lease the plaintiff was aware of the attachment by the 1st defendant, having been informed of it by the 3rd defendant. There is also evidence to show that some inquiries were made before the lease was taken. Under the circumstances the plaintiff cannot be said to be a bona fide alienee. Mere payment of consideration is not enough. There must also exist bona fides. The District Judge erred in holding that no attachment was subsisting. The petition had only been struck off and it had repeatedly been held that striking off did not have the effect of raising the attachment. [Srinivasa Sastrial v. Sami Rao (1)].

The attachment having been effected before the new Civil Procedure Code came into force, it cannot be affected by a dismissal of the petition. The provisions of Order XXI, rule 57, have no retrospective effect.

Mr. S. Duraiswami Iyer, for the Respondents:—The decree of the learned District Judge is quite correct. Whatever may be the effect of the dismissal of an execution petition on an attachment effected thereunder under the old Code, in the present case, Exhibit VII shows that in April 1909 an application was made under the new Code for sale of attached properties and that the same had been dismissed. The attachment, therefore, ceased to exist by virtue of Order XXI, rule 57, and the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. The validity of the 3rd defendant's purchase had been upheld by the order passed on a claim petition preferred at the instance of a lessee of the 3rd defendant in 1906. It cannot be re-opened now. No objections have been filed against the finding of the District Munsif. In the face of the findings of fact the 1st defendant is not entitled to succeed.

JUDGMENT.—The 1st defendant is the appellant He purchased in Court-auction the 2nd defendant's rights in the plaint lands, the Court auction-sale having taken place in February 1910. The attachment had taken place in August 1906 before the new Civil Procedure Code came into force. The execution petition, in pursuance of which the attachment was made, was struck off on the 1st of October 1906, but the subsequent proceedings show that, as usual under the old practice, the attachment was considered by all parties and by the Court as still subsisting, so that when fresh applications for execution are made, they need not pray for fresh attachment but need only pray for sale of the attached property already remaining under attachment, the fresh execution applications being treated as a revival and continuation of the execution application which was struck off (for non-payment of batta or some similar cause).

The 2nd defendant had, before the attachment of August 1906, executed a nominal and colourable sale-deed to the 3rd defendant in 1901. The 2nd defendant's father had, in September 1887, executed a registered munigutta lease, Exhibit A, for 28 years to the plaintiff's assignor. The 3rd defendant in December 1909 executed Exhibit B in plaintiff's favour giving the plaintiff a further lease for a term of 12 years. to commence after the expiry of the 28 years' lease then subsisting. The 1st defendant's contention is that this 12 years' lease, having been made during the continuance of the attachment and having been taken from his judgment-debtor's benamidar (the 3rd defendant), is not binding upon him, while the plaintiff's case is that the 3rd defendant was not the 2nd defendant's benamidar but a bona fide purchaser from the 2nd defendant and that the plaintiff was not aware of the 1st defendant's attachment.

The plaintiff brought the suit for a declaration that the 1st defendant's purchase in Court auction would not affect the plaintiff's right to enjoy the lands during the unexpired five years' portion of the first lease of 28 years' duration, nor the plaintiff's right to enjoy during the next 12 years granted by the second munigutta lease-deed obtained from the 3rd defendant. The 1st defendant contested the suit only as regards the plaintiff's alleged right to enjoy during the second 12 years' period.

The District Judge has decreed the plaintiff's suit even as regards the second period of 12 years on the following grounds :—

(1) There was no attachment subsisting on the property in December 1909, when the plaintiff obtained the 12 years' extension.

(2) The plaintiff was not aware of the said attachment and he took the second lease in good faith and for valuable consideration from the ostensible owner of the property (the 3rd defendant).

It will be seen from the above that the District Judge does not interfere with the District Munsif's finding that the 3rd defendant was only an "ostensible owner," in other words, that the 2nd defendant's sale to the 3rd defendant in 1901 was a colourable transaction.

As regards the non-existence of attachment in December 1909, both the lower Courts rely on the provision first introduced by the new Civil Procedure Code, Order XXI, rule 57. But Order XXI, rule 57, while it of course has the effect of releasing an attachment when the execution application under which the attachment had been made was dismissed after the passing of the Code, cannot have a retrospective effect upon an order of dismissal made before the Act came into force. If, then, the attachment subsisted notwithstanding the order of dismissal in 1906 of the execution application in which that attachment had been made, that attachment would not cease to exist merely by the passing of the new Code so as to make the provisions of the new Code apply to the old order of 1906.

It is also significant that the plaintiff in this case nowhere alleges that on the date when he got his fresh 12 years' lease, the attachment had ceased to exist. On the other hand, in paragraph 9 of the plaint he admits that the 1st defendant attached and put up the schedule mentioned land to sale and in paragraph 10 he merely says that he was not aware of attachment when he got the second lease. Further, the District Munsif says in paragraph 6 of his judgment that the plaintiff's own witness admitted that he told the plaintiff of the existence of the attachment in December 1909, that is, at the time of Exhibit B. Again, if the execution petition for sale filed in September 1909 by the 1st defendant is treated as a continuation and revival of the old execution application of 1906, the attachment has clearly continued to subsist. In short, the District Munsif (after the remand) and the District Judge seem to have taken up a point in plaintiff's favour, namely, the alleged non-existence of the attachment, which was not put forward by the plaintiff himself in his plaint. It is argued by the respondents' learned Vakil that Exhibit VII shows that there was another execution petition in April 1909, which was dismissed on some technical ground. But there is nothing to show that any attachment was made on such petition or even what the nature of that petition was. Order XXI, rule 57, clearly means that the dismissal of an application puts an end only to an attachment made on that application.

In the result, we hold that the 12 years' lease granted to the plaintiff under Exhibit B was invalid as against the rights of the 1st defendant under his purchase in Court auction held in pursuance of the attachment which was subsisting on the date of Exhibit B, and setting aside the lower Appellate Court's decree, we restore the decree of District Munsif with costs payable to the 1st defendant by the plaintiff in the District Court and in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDS, C. J.—The material facts connected with this appeal are as follows:—On the 11th of June 1881, Amir Singh and Musammat Dulra Kunwar executed a usufructuary mortgage of certain zemindari property in favour of Rani Dharam Raj Kunwar. The real mortgagor was the said Amir Singh. Possession of the sir land was not given in accordance with the provisions of the mortgage-deed and the Rani brought a suit against the mortgagors for possession and mesne profits. She obtained a decree, and in execution for mesne profits and costs the mortgaged property was attached, put up to sale and purchased by the Rani. The sale was subsequently confirmed and the usual certificate issued. Lal Bahadur Singh now represents the estate of Rani Dharam Raj Kunwar. The plaintiffs are the grandsons and great-grandsons of Amir Singh, and they have brought the present suit for a declaration that the auction-sale mentioned above is null and void and that they are still entitled to redeem the mortgage. There is a further claim for a declaration that the plaintiffs, or some of them, are in any event ex-proprietary tenants of the sir land.

It seems to me that the only question we have to decide is, what is the effect of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, which was in force at the date of the purchase by Rani Dharam Raj Kunwar? It has not been contended that if the Rani had never occupied the position of mortgagee, and if she had obtained a simple money decree, and in execution of such decree purchased the property, the plaintiffs, who are the grandsons and great-grandsons of Amir Singh, could now set aside the sale and get possession of the property. The contention is that the sale was in contravention of the provisions of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act and, therefore, null and void. In my opinion this case must be disposed of on the assumption that the plaintiffs have exactly the same rights as Amir Singh would have had if he had brought the suit instead of them. Section 99 is as follows :—

"Where a mortgagee in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of any claim, whether arising under the mortgage or not, attaches the mortgaged property, he shall not be entitled to bring such property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under section 67."

It seems to me that the decision depends on whether a sale at the instance of a mortgagee in contravention of the section was a wholly illegal act. If it was thus, the equity of redemption never vested in the Rani and the mortgage is still capable of being redeemed. Section 99 has been repealed and new provisions have been substituted in the Code of Civil Procedure. Order XXXIV, rule 14, of the first Schedule is as follows:—

"Where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgage property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage."

Two things will here be noticed, first, that the provisions of law restraining a mortgagee from bringing mortgaged property to sale is not so wide as previously, and second, that the provision finds its place in an Act dealing with matters of procedure and not of substantive law. If the effect of section 99 is that all sales in contravention of its provisions are absolutely null and void, great hardship might occur in many cases: for example, a purchase might be made by a perfectly innocent third party who would have to give up the property. In considering the construction of the section I can see no distinction between a purchase by the mortgagee and a purchase by a third party. Undoubtedly the mortgagor, or any one interested in the property in cases governed by section 99, could object to the sale of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee on foot of a simple money decree, and in all probability the sale could be set aside on this sole ground at any time before confirmation. But can the sale be set aside after the confirmation? This question depends on whether we regard the provisions of the section as enacting that no sale can legally be had, or as merely giving the mortgagor and persons interested in the property a right to object to the sale being had, provided the objection is taken at the proper time, that is to say, sometime before the sale was confirmed.

In the case of Tara Chand v. Imdad Husain (1) the plaintiff sued for partition. His title to his alleged share was a purchase by him at an auction-sale at the instance of the mortgagee who had obtained a simple money decree. A Bench of this Court held that he was entitled to partition notwithstanding the provisions of section 99. It is true that in that case the Revenue Court had already overruled the objection that the property could not be sold and had confirmed the sale. Nevertheless it is quite clear that if the sale was a nullity, the plaintiff would have acquired no title to the share upon which he based his right to partition. It is true also that the plaintiff in this case was not the mortgagee, but section 99 restrains the mortgagee from "bringing the property to sale." If any act is rendered illegal, it is the "bringing of the property to sale."

In the case of Muhammad Abdul Rashid Khan v. Dilsukh Rai (2) the mortgagees had brought the equity of redemption to sale in exercise of a simple money decree for mesne profits and costs and purchased it themselves. The plaintiffs brought their suit to redeem the property, treating the sale to and purchase by the mortgagees as a nullity. A Bench of this Court was of opinion that the sale was not a nullity. The sale in this case was apparently before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. But it seems a clear authority for the proposition that if the mortgagor allows the equity of redemption to be sold and the sale confirmed without objection, he cannot later on take exception to it.

(1) 18 A. 325, A. W. N. (1896) 94.
(2) 27 A. 517; 2 A. L. J. 210; A. W. N. (1905) 80.

In the case of Mangli Prasad v. Pati Ram (3) the question arose as to whether or not the plaintiff had a right to redeem a subsequent mortgage. His claim was based on purchase at an auction-sale of the equity of redemption in execution of a simple money decree obtained by a mortgagee. A Bench of this Court held him to be entitled. The Court was clearly of opinion that the auction-sale was not a nullity.

Again, in the case of Madan Mukund Lal v. Jamna Kaulapuri (4) a Bench of this Court laid it down that where a sale has been had of mortgaged property in execution of a simple money decree and the sale confirmed, the title of the auction-purchaser becomes complete.

In a case reported in Kishan Lal v. Umrao Singh (5) exactly the same view was taken.

A contrary view seems to have been taken by Dillon, J., in the case of Jhabba Lal v. Chajju Mal (6), but the case of Tara Chand v. Imdad Husain (1) and the cases reported in Mangli Prasad v. Pati Ram (3) and Madan Mohund Lal v. Jamna Kaulapuri (4) do not seem to have been brought under the notice of the learned Judge. It seems to me that with the exception of this last-mentioned case, and another recent decision to which I shall presently refer, all the decisions of this Court have been in favour of the view that the sale at the instance of a mortgagee of mortgaged property is not a nullity, and that if no objection is taken before the confirmation, such objection cannot be taken later.

In the case of Sirdar Singh v. Ratan Lal (7) the facts were as follows: Nandan Singh executed a mortgage in favour of Ratan Lal. Ratan Lal sued in 1898, but only asked for a simple money decree which was granted. In execution of this decree he purchased the property himself. The sons of Nandan Singh were not made parties to the suit in which the decree had been obtained, and they then brought a suit to redeem the mortgage and get possession. A Bench of this Court was of opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled to redeem. With regard to this case, I can only say that in my opinion with regard to the cases governed by section 99 the restrictions on a mortgagee acquiring the equity of redemption ought to be confined to the provisions of the section, and that in future the substituted provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure should regulate the rights of mortgagors and mortgagees in this respect. If, however, the learned Judges who decided the case of Sirdar Singh v. Ratan Lal (7) intended to decide that a sale in contravention of section 99 was, even after confirmation a complete nullity, such a decision was contrary to the cases previously decided in this High Court with the exception of the one case I have already mentioned. While I admit that the question is not free from difficulty I think we ought not, without grave reason, to depart from a series of rulings of this High Court, and for this reason I do not intend to refer to the rulings of the other High Courts at any great length.

The case of Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (8) was a reference to the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court. The questions were, (1) whether when a sale has been held in contravention of the provisions of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, the sale is a nullity, or an irregular and voidable sale, and (2) whether the right of redemption of the mortgagor is or is not affected by such sale. Rampini, A. C. J., said in answer to the first question:

"I think we must, after the expression of opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khairajmal v. Daim (9), reply that a sale held in contravention of the provisions of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act is not a nullity, but an irregular and voidable sale. In my opinion such a sale can be avoided before confirmation of sale by an application under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, without its being necessary for the applicant to show more than that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act have been contravened. But after confirmation the sale can only be avoided by an application under section 244, provided that the applicant proves that owing to fraud or other reasons he was kept in ignorance of the sale proceedings preliminary to the sale.

"The case should, therefore, be remanded to the Subordinate Judge to be disposed of after inquiry into these matters and after decision of any other issues that may arise in the case. The costs will abide the result.

"It seems neither necessary nor advisable for us to answer the second question put by the referring Bench."

It seems to me the reason why the learned Acting Chief Justice did not answer the second question was that the answer to the first question answered the second, unless the applicant should prove that he was kept in ignorance of the sale proceedings preliminary to the sale.

Brett, Mitra and Woodroffe, JJ., all agreed. Mookerjee, J., referred in a more elaborate judgment at length to the various rulings on the question, but I have no reason to think that he intended to differ from the other members of the Bench.

It is true that Woodroffe, J., was party to a subsequent decision in the case of Pancham Lal Chowdhury v. Kishun Pershad Misser (10). With great respect I must confess to be quite unable to reconcile the two decisions. It seems to me that if the equity of redemption is sold in execution of a decree and purchased either by a third party, or by a mortgagee with the leave of the Court, the equity of redemption is transferred from those persons who previously held it to the purchaser and that the result is that if that sale is neither void nor set aside, there is no longer a right to redeem left in the previous owners of the equity of redemption. On the whole, I see no sufficient reason for overruling the previous decisions of this High Court, and I would, therefore, allow the appeal, stating at the same time, though it is perhaps hardly necessary to do so, that we express no opinion on the question whether the plaintiffs have ex-proprietary rights in the sir lands. The claim clearly is not a matter for the Civil Court.

BANERJI, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion and have very little to add. The learned Vakil for the respondents laid considerable stress on the fact that the plaintiffs were no parties to the suit in which the decree against Amir Singh was obtained, in execution whereof the equity of redemption in the property in question was put up for sale and purchased by the mortgagee. In the recent rulings of this Court and of their Lordships of the Privy Council, it has been held that in the case of a joint Hindu family the manager of the family represents the whole family. The present plaintiffs must, therefore, be deemed (if they existed at the time) to have been represented by Amir Singh in the suit which was brought against him, and they were thus parties to that suit. As the learned Chief Justice has observed, the plaintiffs cannot claim a higher title than that which Amir Singh could have set up in respect of the mortgage made by him. If Amir Singh could not maintain the present suit, no more can the plaintiffs.

This leads to the question whether by reason of the provisions of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, the auction-sale at which Rani Dharam Raj Kunwar purchased the equity of redemption was a nullity. As has been pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, the course of rulings in this Court has been that such a sale is merely voidable, and not having been avoided before confirmation, it binds the mortgagor and those whom he represented as the managers of the joint family. I deem it unnecessary to refer to those rulings. The only case in which a contrary view was held was that of Jhabba Lal v. Chajju Mal (6), decided by Mr. Justice Dillon. With all respect I am unable to agree with him.

The next case on which the learned Vakil for the respondents relies is the recent ruling in Sirdar Singh v. Ratan Lal (7). In that case Mr. Justice Rafique distinguished the cases reported in Tara Chand v. Imdad Husain (1), Banh Bal v. Manni Lal (11), Kishan Lal v. Umrao Singh (5), on the ground that the sale in those cases was not in favour of the mortgagee but in favour of a third party. With great deference I fail to see any distinction between the case of a purchase by the mortgagee and that of a purchase by a third party. What the section declares is that a mortgagee shall not be entitled to bring to sale the equity of redemption of his mortgagor in execution of any claim which he may have, whether arising under the mortgage or not. It does not prohibit the purchase of the property by the mortgagee, if the Court permits him to purchase it and allows a sale to take place. If section 99 does not render a sale in violation of the section absolutely null and void, there is nothing to prevent a mortgagee purchasing under such a sale with the leave of the Court. It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a mortgagee who purchases with the leave of the Court is exactly in the same position as any other purchaser. Therefore, the fact of the purchaser being a person other than the mortgagee, in my opinion, makes no difference so far as the application of section 99 is concerned. The learned Judges in that case do not, as it seems to me, go the length of holding that a sale in contravention of section 99 is absolutely void. If that is so, and if such a sale is only voidable, it not having been avoided before confirmation, the title of the mortgagor or of those whom he represents or of those who derive title from him passes absolutely to the purchaser, and no right remains in those persons by virtue of which they can claim redemption.

TUDBALL, J.—I concur.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed with costs in all Courts, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 5—Shop—Building situate in a lane—Part used as shop and part as residential quarters—House or shop.

Where in a pre-emption suit it appeared that the building in suit was situated in a lane not a Bazar and was originally purely residential, but that there had been some subsequent alterations in the structure with the result that the three rooms abutting on the lane could be used as shops, and in fact had been used as such for some time, while the upper storey had been used as residential quarters by different persons including the owner

Held, that as there was no evidence that at the time of the sale or at any time shortly before it the building was used for commercial purposes, it was not a shop and the plaintiff was entitled to pre-empt.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Delhi Division, dated the 20th October 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, first Class, Delhi, dated the 10th July 1913, dismissing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection comes from respondent that the appeal is time-barred, inasmuch as the appellant is not entitled to reckon out the time spent in the review proceeding, but I think this was a case in which the appellant had a reasonable hope that the learned Additional Divisional Judge might view the spot and change his opinion as the result of that view. I overrule the objection and admit the appeal.

On the merits, my view is that the condition of the premises at the time of sale is a very important factor to the decision whether the building is a residential quarter or a shop. Originally no doubt the building was purely residential and it is situate in a lane, not a bazar. Between 1880 and the time of sale, the structure of the house was altered, and fashioned so that the three rooms abutting on the lane could be used as shops, and at some time no doubt they were used as shops; at the same time, the rear portions and the upper storey of the building were used as residential quarters by different persons, including the owner.

There is, however, no evidence that at the time of the sale, the building was used for commercial purposes, nor is there any evidence that it was used for such purposes at any time shortly before the sale.

In a bazar it might be urged in regard to a building that once a shop it is always a shop, but the maxim has no force when the building lies in a lane and has been at some time casually used as a shop.

For these reasons I am not prepared to find against the learned Divisional Judge's conclusion that the building is not a shop and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63, O. XXXVIII, r. 9—Suit under O XXI, r 63, object of—Suit, whether abates, if attachment raised.

The statutory right under Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, is merely to establish the right which the attaching plaintiff claims in the property, i.e., to attach it as the property of the defendant whenever it is his interest to do so. The fact that the attachment before judgment ceases to be operative on the dismissal of the suit by virtue of Order XXXVIII, rule 9, of the Code, does not also cause the suit, under Order XXI, rule 63, to abate.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Coimbatore in Original Suit No. 37 of 1910.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's attachment was raised and he sued the claimant to establish his right under Order XXI, rule 63, of the Civil Procedure Code (formerly section 283). The District Judge afterwards dismissed the suit, and it is now contended that as the attachment before judgment, if still subsisting, would have been raised as a consequence of the dismissal of the suit pursuant to Order XXXVIII, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the effect of the dismissal of the suit in which the attachment was made was in effect to cause the suit under Order XXI, rule 63, to abate. No authority has been cited for this novel proposition which we are altogether unable to accept. The statutory suit under Order XXI, rule 63, is to establish the right which the attaching plaintiff claims in the property in dispute. This, in our opinion, is the right to attach the property in question as the property of the defendant whenever it may be his interest to do so and the effect of not suing would be to debar him from claiming to attach such property at any future time. The fact that the attachment effected by him would, if it had not been raised previously, have come to an end by the dismissal of the suit, does not affect his right to sue under Order XXI, rule 63. The appeal must be allowed and the case remanded for disposal according to law.

The costs will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.

Cox, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage bond. The plaintiff was given possession and his case was that the defendants dispossessed him. He, therefore, sued for the money, to be realised by the sale of the mortgaged property.

The Courts below found that he had never been dispossessed by the defendants. The lower Appellate Court held that, as the mortgage was an usufructuary mortgage, the plaintiff had no right to recover the money by the sale of the mortgaged property.

The plaintiff appeals and on his behalf it is argued that even though he was in possession of the property, there was a covenant to pay the money on which this suit would lie. The question before us is whether there was such a covenant. On this point there seems to be some conflict of judicial opinion. In the case of Luchmeshar Singh v. Dookh Mochan Jha (1) the covenant runs as follows:—"We give in bharna 6 bighas 4 cottas of land as per boundaries for a term of three years, having paid the principal money in the month of Chait 1297 we shall take back the document and the land. If the principal sum be not paid at the time fixed, then all the terms of this sudbharna will remain in force."

It was held that these terms did not amount to a covenant to pay. In the case of Pargan Panday v. Mahatam Mahto (2), the terms were: "I shall re-pay the principal amount on the full moon day of the end of Jait 1287 Fasli, and take back the bond. If I shall not be able to re-pay the same on the due date of payment, then this document shall remain in tact up to the re-payment of the same. As security for the said amount, I have mortgaged and hypothecated the said field." It was held that this was a covenant to pay.

It appears to me that the covenant in the present deed is less in favour of the plaintiff than either of the two covenants that I have recited. There is no promise to pay money. What is said to be the promise is contained in a conditional statement which runs as follows:—"When I or my heirs and representatives shall pay off in cash and in one lump Rs. 250, the amount covered by this surpeshgi deed, on the 30th of Magh 1311 F. S. or on the 30th of Magh of any other year after expiration of this deed, to the said surpeshgidar or his heirs and representatives, I shall take back this deed and enter upon possession of the lease hold property, and I or my heirs shall not apply for redemption of mortgage without paying off the peshgi money. In security for the peshgi money I mortgaged and hypothecated the said lease-hold property." So far as this is a covenant by the mortgagor to do anything at all, it is a promise that he will pay the amount due either on the 30th Magh 1311 or on the 30th Magh of any other year.

It seems to me to have been the intention of the parties that the plaintiff should have the land for three years at least and that after that the land should remain in his possession until the defendants paid what was due on the 30th Magh in any year. It does not seem to me to have been the intention of the parties that the plaintiff should be entitled to insist on giving up possession of the property and recovering the money. This view is strongly supported by the fact that the suit, as appears from a perusal of the plaint and of the issues, was based exclusively on the alleged dispossession which has been disbelieved. In my opinion the decision of the District Judge is right and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

This judgment governs Second Appeal No. 1134 of 1912, except as regards costs, no one appearing for the respondent.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 47—Execution and Registration—Operation, date of.

Under section 47 of the Registration Act a registered deed operates from the date of its execution and not of registration.

Mr. Sin Hla Aung, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was the owner of a house which he had bought from one Ma Aye Me, the wife of Po Cho, a Chinaman, on the 8th May 1913. The defendant is a judgment-creditor of Po Cho and he attached the house or attempted to attach the house on the 20th May. The defendant alleges that the sale to the plaintiff was not a bona fide one. The Township Court has found that the plaintiff had honestly bought the house from Ma Aye Me, who had a right to sell it. Po Cho had left his wife and had given her authority to sell the house. The District Judge based his judgment upon the assumption that the sale to the plaintiff was made on the 5th June. The sale was by a registered deed which was presented for registration on the 8th May when the parties admitted execution, and receipt of the consideration, but for some reason, which does not appear, it was not actually registered until the 5th June. The District Judge, I think, has overlooked the provisions of section 47 of the Registration Act, under which a registered deed operates from the time of execution in a case such as this There is nothing in the evidence to show that the sale was not bona fide: the plaintiff had acquired the ownership in the house before the defendant obtained a decree against the judgment-debtor, and there is nothing to show that the plaintiff knew that the defendant had instituted a suit against Po Cho at that time.

The appeal, therefore, must be allowed with costs and the decree of the Township Court will be restored. The plaintiff will have his costs in all Courts.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Manmotha Nath Roy, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit relating to a tract of jungle 1¾ acres in extent covered with canes. The plaintiffs' title appears to have been established in both Courts. But the learned Judge in the Court of appeal below has found that the plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation. He has based his decision on the fact that eleven years five months before suit the final Record-of-Rights was published by the Settlement Department showing the defendants to be in possession at that time, and he has drawn the inference that having regard to the well-known practice of the Settlement Department, which is itself a kind of judicial procedure, the defendants must have been found to be in possession at least seven months before that Record was published; and he further points out that that being the case, the plaintiffs have not attempted to show that they were dispossessed at any time within that short period of seven months. On the contrary they date their dispossession to a very recent period.

We have carefully considered the authorities that have been laid before us, the cases of Thakur Singh v. Bhogeraj Singh (1), Rajkumar Roy v. Gobind Chunder Roy (2), the Full Bench case of Mahomed Ali v. Abdul Gunny(3), and the Privy Council case of Ramjeet Ram Panday v. Goburdhan Ram Panday (4), and we are of opinion that in the circumstances of this case the learned Judge was justified in drawing the inference of fact from facts that he has done and that there is no error of law. As was pointed out by the Full Bench in Mahomad Ali v. Abdul Gunny (3), the presumption that possession followed title in these kinds of cases must depend upon the circumstances of the case. The mere fact that the Judge does not refer to the allegation that the plaintiffs cut canes within three or four years of suit as rebutting the inference he draws, is not an error of law. If he has overlooked certain evidence it is a matter for review, or it may be that he has not considered it of sufficient value to outweigh the presumption arising from the Record of Rights subsequent to publication.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed without costs, as no one appears for the respondents.

Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Suit for accounts—Consent of parties.

A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain suits for accounts, and consent of parties does not give a Court jurisdiction which it has not got.

Mr. Anklesaria, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ausam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued the defendant in the Small Cause Court for one-third share of the profits of the defendant's refreshment business, which the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff by way of remuneration for looking after the defendant's business, whilst the defendant was away in India. The defendant, in his written statement, says, inter alia, that it is a suit for accounts. The case was not heard by the Court but by consent of the parties it was referred to a Commissioner to ascertain what the profits of the business were, if any. The Commissioner found that there were no profits or that the plaintiff had not shown that there were any profits. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court upon objection of the Commissioner's report upheld the report and has dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff now appeals. The Counsel for the respondent as a preliminary objection contends that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the suit was one for an account. The appellant's Advocate admits that the suit was one for an account and that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction, but he contends that he should not be mulcted in costs and that the plaint should be returned to be presented to the proper Court. The suit was clearly one for an account and the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. Assuming that the defendant submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court, the consent of the parties cannot give a Court jurisdiction which it has not got. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the suit dismissed on the gound that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. The plaintiff must pay the defendant's costs in both Courts; the defendant by allowing the matter to go before the Commissioner may have done so, feeling confident that he could oust the plaintiffs on the merits, and he did not undertake not to raise the question of jurisdiction if the plaintiff appealed. I know of no authority which is for allowing the plaint to be returned at this stage.

The suit is, therefore, dismissed for want of jurisdiction and the plaintiff will pay the defendant's costs in both Courts.

Suit dismissed.

Where a written rental agreement is inadmissible in evidence, oral evidence, though not admissible to prove the terms of the tenancy or period of the lease, is still admissible to prove that the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between the parties.

When the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant is once proved to exist its continuance is presumed under section 109 of the Evidence Act and the burden of proving the contrary lies upon the person who denies the relationship.

Mr. A. Viswanadha Aiyar, for the Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. C. Parthasarathy Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We must accept the Subordinate Judge's finding that the sales in 1st plaintiff's favour were real transactions and that the 1st plaintiff was not the benamidar of any other person.

As regards the lands (items 1 and 2), we think that the Subordinate Judge (on appeal) intended to accept and did accept the evidence of the 1st plaintiff and his witnesses that the 1st plaintiff directly enjoyed the lands till ten years before suit. The decision of the question whether there was an oral lease afterwards of the lands to the defendants, becomes unnecessary.

Coming to the house site, item 3, the Subordinate Judge accepts the evidence of P. W. No. 7, which proves that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the 1st plaintiff and Venkanna in about 1892. Oral evidence to prove such relationship is admissible, even if the rental agreement is not admissible in evidence and even if the terms of the tenancy (such as the period, the rate of rent, the covenants of the lease, etc.) cannot be proved by oral evidence. [See Amir Ali v. Aykub Ali Khan (1)]. Under section 109 of the Evidence Act it is for the 1st defendant to prove that that relationship ceased to exist before Venkanna's death which took place within twelve years before suit. The 1st plaintiff's possession, therefore, of the house site continued till 12 years before suit and his claim is not barred even as regards the house site. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The decree of this Court will, however, make it clear that the site alone of item 3 is decreed to the plaintiffs and that the defendants are at liberty to remove the superstructure at any time before delivery, through Court, is made to the plaintiffs of the site.

RAJENDRA PROSAD JHA v. UPENDRA NATH JHA.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are very simple. The appellants brought a suit against two sets of defendants. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit against the first set, but decreed it against the second set. The latter appealed making the appellants only parties as respondents. The Appellate Court found that the second set of defendants were not liable for the claim, allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit against them. It went on, however, apparently per incuriam to say that it passed a decree against the first set of defendants. The appellants now seek to execute the decree against the first set of defendants, who object on the ground that they were not parties to the decree sought to be executed. The Munsif threw out the objection on the ground that it is not open to a Court executing a decree to challenge it in any way. On appeal the Subordinate Judge allowed the objection and dismissed the application for execution. It appears to me that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is correct. It is true that this Court has frequently held that a Court executing a decree is not entitled to challenge the correctness of it, and that it has been held in some cases that such a Court cannot even inquire whether the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to do so, but it appears to me that the present case stands on an entirely different footing from any of those to which reference has been made. In the present case though the Appellate Court said: "I pass a decree against the first set of defendants," it took no steps towards giving effect to its decision. It did not make those defendants parties to the appeal as it might have done, and in the decree, as prepared, the names of the first set of defendants do not appear at all. In my opinion the appellants are not entitled to take out execution against the first set of defendants. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

UPENDRA NATH JHA AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 65—Auction sale, bid in, whether can be withdrawn.

If a person goes to bid at a sale and in full knowledge of the condition offers bids for the property, and the property is knocked down to him, the mere fact that the Court has subsequently the discretion to confirm or annul the Nazir's auction, does not leave it open to the bidder to withdraw his bid.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge of Sonthál Parganas, dated the 6th of August 1913, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of Deoghar, dated the 9th of June 1913.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, (with him Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterjee), for the Appellants.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, (with him Babu Bepin Chandra Bose), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COXE, J.—The facts in this case as I gather from the judgments of the Courts below are as follows: The property in question was put up to sale on the 5th February and then knocked down by the Nazir for Rs. 5,000 to the decree-holder. The papers were then submitted to the Subordinate Judge in order, apparently, that he might exercise the discretion given to him under condition No. 3 of the sale proclamation. The next day the decree-holder came in, and asked that the sale might be set aside on the ground that the proclamation had not been properly published. This application was refused. A month later he came in again and asked that he might be allowed to withdraw his bid. This has been refused both by the Subordinate Judge and by the District Judge on appeal, and the decree-holder comes up to this Court in second appeal.

A preliminary objection has been taken that no second appeal lies. It certainly appears to me that there has been no adjudication of any rights of the parties and that, therefore, the preliminary objection ought to succeed; but it is not necessary to decide this point, because it appears to me that on the merits the appeal must fail.

It has been suggested by the learned Pleader for the appellant in reply that the property was not, as a matter of fact, knocked down by the Nazir. It is quite clear from the judgments that this was never questioned in the Courts below, and on looking into the record I find that it was not questioned in the cross-examination of the Nazir. It was contended, however, that the Nazir could not finally sell the property and that the auction remained incomplete until the Judge had decided whether or not the bid should be accepted. It may possibly be the case that in the Mofussil the Nazir frequently takes the orders of the Court before he completes the sale of a property. Except condition No. 3 of the proclamation of sale to which I will refer later, I can find no authority for this practice. Rule 65 prescribes that the sale shall be conducted by the officer of the Court, and it is the Nazir's business under that section to carry out and complete the sale. The warrant, of which a form is given in Appendix E No. 27, commands the bailiff of the Court to sell the property by auction and it seems clear to me that this command is not obeyed, if the Nazir, as is contended on behalf of the appellant, merely has to make a list of the offers from the various bidders, and submit the same to the Court, in order that the Court may decide what bids should be accepted and may in fact sell the property itself. The third condition of the proclamation of sale certainly gives the Court as well as the Nazir discretion to decline acceptance of the highest bid, when the price offered appears so clearly inadequate as to make it advisable to do so. In my opinion this condition must be read with rule 65 and form No. 27. It appears to me to give the Court a quasi-revisional discretion in the matter, and not to require the Court itself to knock down the property. Nor do I think that because the 3rd condition of the proclamation of sale reserves a certain discretion to the Court, it necessarily follows that the bid is incomplete, as against the bidder, until the Court has exercised that discretion. If a person goes to bid at a sale and, in full knowledge of this condition, offers bids for the property, and the property is knocked down to him, the mere fact that the Court has subsequently the discretion to confirm or annul the Nazir's auction, does not leave it open to the bidder to withdraw his bid. That the sale was complete seems to me clear from the appellant's petition of the 7th February. In that petition he did not ask to withdraw the bid. He asked that the sale might be set aside on the ground that the sale proclamation was not properly published. He, therefore, was then perfectly satisfied that a complete sale had been effected.

Our attention has been drawn to two cases on behalf of the appellant. One is Kenaram v. Kailash Chandra (1) and the other is Askutosh Chatterjee v. Sudhindra Chandra Moulik (2). In the first case, however, the property had not been knocked down and that circumstance distinguishes the case from the present one. The second case was one under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the only question was whether it was desirable to interfere in the interest of justice, and the learned Judges decided that it was not. They did not lay down any rule of law.

I think, therefore, that the decision of the Court below is right and the appeal is dismissed with costs, the hearing-fee being assessed at three gold mohurs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. I think there is much doubt whether the order of the first Court declining to give way to the attempt of the plaintiff-decree-holder to withdraw the bid which he had himself made and upon which the hammer had fallen, was a decree within the meaning of the definition in section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but let it be assumed that the order was a decree and the appeal before us is competent. Let it further be assumed that the first Court had a discretion to allow the decree-holder (the appellant before us) to withdraw his bid. Even so, I can find nothing in the mode in which that discretion, if a discretion exists, was exercised, which would justify us in interfering in appeal or in saying that the discretion should have been differently exercised.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

HANUMAN PERSHAD—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 115—Revision—Principal and agent—Objection as to right of agent, whether can be taken for first time in High Court—Procedure.

The objection, whether the plaintiff is or is not the agent of a particular person on whose behalf he has sued to recover money in the Court of Small Causes, cannot be taken for the first time in the High Court in revision.

Parvatibai v. Venayak Pandurang, 12 B. 68, followed.

Application for revision against a decision of the Small Cause Court Judge of Allahabad, dated the 7th May 1914.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant for revision in this case is one Budhu Khan, who describes himself as a broker at Allahabad. A suit was brought against Budhu Khan and one Gaya Din in the Court of Small Causes at Allahabad. In that suit one Hanuman Pershad apparently represented himself as an agent of His Highness the Maharaja of Darbhanga and got a decree against the applicant and Gaya Din. No objection appears to have been taken upon the point whether Hanuman Pershad was or was not an agent of the Maharaja. The point is, however, taken for the first time in this application for revision. I am not prepared to entertain it when raised for the first time at this stage. I prefer to follow the principles laid down in the case of Parvatibai v. Vinayak Pandurang (1).

A second point is raised in the application, i.e., that in face of the lease executed by Gaya Din no decree should have been passed against the applicant who acted as a broker only. This point was considered by the Court of Small Causes and the Court came to the conclusion that Budhu was the lessee. though Gaya Din's name was put in the lease. The Court found that Budhu was not a broker but a lessee and was liable for the balance of the claim made.

Principal and agent—Misappropriation by agent—Termination of agency—Suit to recover money—Cause of action against agent and his legal representatives, whether same—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 62, 89, 120.

A suit to recover money alleged to have been misappropriated by the defendants' father, acting as the plaintiff's agent, is barred by time if brought more than three years after the termination of the agency and also after the amount due was ascertained by arbitration.

Where the defendants are sued as the representatives of their deceased father, the cause of action against them is the same as against their father; and if the suit would be barred against him if he had lived, it is also barred against them.

Article 120, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act is not applicable to a suit brought against the representatives of a deceased agent, and while Article 89 applies to a suit against an agent for acts committed during the continuance of his agency, the Article applicable in respect of money payable by him after the termination of his agency would be Article 62.

JUDGMENT.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—The suit is brought by the plaintiff to recover a certain sum of money alleged to have been misappropriated by his agent Palaniappa, the defendants' father. The Judge dismissed his claim except with reference to a few items. The plaintiff appeals.

When the plaintiff's agents appointed to succeed Palaniappa inspected the accounts, it is said they found that he was liable to pay the plaintiff about Rs. 30,000 misappropriated by him. The dispute was referred to arbitration; and it was settled that Palaniappa should pay the plaintiff more than Rs 3,000. The suit, so far as this item of claim is concerned, is rightly held by the Subordinate Judge to be barred by limitation. It is brought more than three years after the termination of the agency and also after the amount due was ascertained by arbitration.

There is another item of claim. The plaintiff says that in January or February 1907, he dicovered that Palaniappa had been guilty of misconduct or fraud with reference to certain matters. The Subordinate Judge has held that these matters also were included in the reference to arbitration. The appellant's Counsel disputes before us the correctness of that finding and refers to an entry made in the accounts alleged to have been received from the defendants' father after the arbitration proceeding. The plaintiff knows what matters were referred to arbitration. No evidence is given on his side to show that these were not included in the reference. The probabilities are they were all included. I agree with the Judge in his finding.

It is then argued that, though the claim against the father may be barred, it is not barred against the sons. This argument proceeds on the basis that the cause of action against the sons is different. The decisions are against the appellant. The defendants are sued as the representatives of their deceased father and as the suit would be barred against him if he had lived, it is also barred against the defendants. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

SPENCER, J.—It is argued that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that items 3 and 5 were covered by the award of arbitrators and that it dealt only with items 1 and 2.

It does not appear from the evidence of the plaintiff or the evidence of the two witnesses who state that they arbitrated in the matter, what were the items referred to arbitration. Assuming, however, that items 3 and 5 were not included in the reference to arbitration, the accounts, Exhibit B series, show clearly that none of the transactions were within three years of suit. The defendants' father died in April 1909 and the suit was brought on December 11th, 1909 against his minor sons. I am clearly of opinion that there would be no different cause of action against the sons from the cause of action against the father. The decision in Natesayyan v. Ponnusami (1), which was cited by the appellant's Counsel, has been overruled on this point by subsequent decisions in Mallesam Naidu v. Jugala Panda (2) and Periasami Mudaliar v. Seetharama Chettiar (3).

There is no reason why Article 120 of the Limitation Act should be applied to a suit brought against the representatives of a deceased agent, when the Article applicable to a suit against the agent for acts committed during the continuance of his agency would be Article 89 and limitation would run from the termination of his agency; and the Article applicable in respect of money payable by him after the termination of his agency would be Article 62. In either case the limitation period is only three years and, therefore, these claims are barred. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Res judicata—Incorrect specification in plaint—Decree accordingly—Acquiescence by plaintiff—Further suit on same cause of action, whether maintainable.

RAMUJAGAR PANDE v. BHAGIRATHI.

Where a litigant, who is fully aware of the facts which constituted his cause of action, mismanages his litigation and fails through his own mismanagement to obtain from the Courts the full reliefs to which he is entitled, neither he nor his transferees are entitled to maintain any further suit upon the same cause of action.

Therefore neither a reversioner to the estate of a deceased, who brought a suit to set aside a sale made by the widow of the deceased and wrongly described the extent of the property claimed by him and on a decree being passed acquiesced in that decree and also in its interpretation, nor the transferee of that property is entitled to maintain a further suit for the property.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Benares, dated the 23rd April 1913.

Dr. S. M. Suleman, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokul Prosad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case must now be dealt with as determined by the findings returned by the lower Appellate Court on the issues remanded by me in my order of the 17th of June 1914. One Musammat Sheo Rani was in possession of a certain zemindari share with a Hindu widow's estate. On July 16th 1873, she executed a deed of sale transferring this share to the predecessor-in-title of the principal defendants-respondents. She died on the 10th of August 1905. The reversioner to the estate of Sheo Tahal, husband of Musammat Sheo Rani, was Musammat Gulabi Kunwar, who is impleaded in this suit as defendant No. 6. She brought a suit to recover possession of the property transferred by the deed of the 16th July 1873, by avoidance of the transfer, on the ground that the said transfer was valid only for the life-time of Musammat Sheo Rani, and she obtained a decree. It so happened, however, that in the sale-deed in question the share thereby transferred was described in a manner which was both ambiguous and inaccurate. Musammat Gulabi Kunwar in bringing her suit copied into her plaint the description of the property as she found it in the sale-deed, and the decree was framed accordingly. When she applied for possession under her decree the Court executing the decree put a certain interpretation on the terms of the decree, with the result that Musammat Gulabi Kunwar only obtained possession of a small fraction of the property which had been actually transferred by the sale-deed of July 16th, 1873. She has since executed a deed transferring to the present plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-title whatever rights she still possessed in the zemindari share, which had formerly belonged to Sheo Tahal. The present suit was filed on the 7th of January 1912. In the plaint as drafted, the position taken up was one which is clearly unsustainable in view of the findings which have now been returned by the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiffs alleged that what was transferred by the sale-deed of July 16th 1873 was, not the entire share which had belonged to Sheo Tahal and was then in possession of his widow, Musammat Sheo Rani, but only that small fraction of the said share in respect of which Musammat Gulabi Kunwar had obtained possession under her decree of June 12th, 1906. With regard to the rest of the share it was alleged that the principal defendants had obtained possession of the same, not under the sale-deed of July 16th, 1873, but by virtue of a distinct transaction which constituted them trustees on behalf of Musammat Sheo Rani for her life-time. That position has necessarily been abandoned in view of the findings already referred to. It is, however, contended that, upon a correct statement of facts, the present suit is maintainable and the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree. When Musammat Gulabi Kunwar brought the suit which resulted in the decree of June 12th, 1906, she undoubtedly intended to claim, and presumably did claim, whatever property passed to the principal defendants under the sale-deed of July 16th, 1873. By an oversight she wrongly described the extent of the property claimed by her in her plaint, and she has acquiesced in a decree under which she has obtained a small fraction only of the property to which she was entitled. It is contended for the appellants under these circumstances that, as transferees from Musammat Gulabi Kunwar, they are now entitled to claim upon the same cause of action, namely, the invalidity of the sale-deed of July 16th, 1873, to confer any title extending beyond the life-time of the vendor Sheo Rani, the rest of the property which Musammat Gulabi Kunwar failed to obtain possession of under the decree of June 12th, 1906. This contention is supported by reference to various decided cases, of which the most important are Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Husain (1), Venkata Viraraghavayyangar v. Krishnasami Ayyangar (2); and Bhup Singh v. Gulab Rai (3). The general principles therein laid down are that a right which a litigant possesses without knowing or ever having known that he possesses it, can hardly be regarded as a portion of his claim, and that a litigant cannot be required to include in his suit the claim for a relief based upon facts of which he is in ignorance. I do not think these rulings cover the present case. Musammat Gulabi Kunwar knew that her father's share had been transferred by her mother under the sale-deed of July 16th, 1873, and that the vendees were in possession thereof under that deed. She got into trouble because she framed her suit without previously consulting the village-papers for a correct specification of this share, but copied down without question the specification given in the sale-deed, which subsequently was proved to be both ambiguous and inaccurate. She has acquiesced in the decree passed upon the incorrect specification given in her plaint, and in an interpretation of that decree which was seriously unfavourable to her. Her case is that of a litigant who, while fully aware of the facts which constituted her cause of action, has mismanaged her litigation and has failed through her own mismanagement to obtain from the Courts the full relief to which she was entitled. Neither she nor her transferees are, in my opinion, entitled now to maintain any further suit upon a cause of action which arisees from the sale of July 16th 1873, and accrued to them on the death of Musammat Sheo Rani on the 10th of August 1905. This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Rent-decree, when executed as money decree—Purchaser of right, title and interest of usufructuary mortgagee, position of—Right of re-entry—Second appeal—Party, whether entitled to make a new case

Where several different holdings are included in one rent decree, the decree can only be executed as a money decree and nothing but the right, title and interest, if any, of the judgment-debtor in the holdings can pass to a purchaser on sale of the holdings in execution of that decree.

Hridoy Nath Das Choudhury v. Krishna Prosad Sircar 34 C 298, 6 C. L. J. 153; 11 C. W. N. 497, and Nanda Lal Mukherjee v. Sadhu Charan Khan, 7 C L J. 96, followed.

Therefore, a purchaser of the right, title and interest of a mortgagee is not entitled to khas possession if before his suit for possession the mortgage is redeemed

A party is not entitled to make a new case in second appeal.

Appeal against the decree of the Second Sub-Judge at Arrah, dated the 13th January 1912, setting aside that of the Officiating Munsif, third Court, at Arrah, dated the 14th December 1910.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Prasad Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. W. Chippendale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of 1 bigha 8 cottahs of land. The plaintiff's allegation was that the defendant No. 7 held 8 bighas 1½ cottahs of kasht land partly ancestral and partly by purchase in Mouza Shiritola, that the landlord brought a suit for rent of the various holdings which made up this 8 bighas and odd, specifying them in his plaint, and that he got a decree and that the various holdings were sold and specified in the sale-certificate which was given to the plaintiff-purchaser. It appears that the land in dispute, on the finding of the Subordinate Judge in appeal, formed part of the guzashta holding of the defendants Nos. 1 to 6. That holding consisted of 3 bighas and odd, of which 1 bigha 2 cottahs was admittedly sold to Musammat Manbarn and has become apparently a separate holding in her hand, and 1 bigha 9 cottahs was given in usufructuary mortgage to defendant No. 7 in 1893. There remained, therefore, a considerable portion of defendants Nos. 1 to 6; original holding in their hands, and it cannot be said that the portion mortgaged to defendant No. 7 was anything more than a part of a holding. Moreover, several different holdings having been included in one rent-decree, on the authority of the cases of Hridoy Nath Das Chowdhury v. Krishna Prosad Sircar (1) and Nanda Lal Mukherjee v. Sadhu Charan Khan (2), the decree can only be executed as a money decree, and nothing but the right, title and interest of defendant No. 7, mortgagee, can have passed to the plaintiff.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the defendants redeemed the mortgage and are in possession of the land, and he, therefore, considers that the plaintiff is not entitled to khas possession, even if he be a bona fide purchaser about which he has strong doubts. We at one time thought that it might be necessary to remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a more clear finding as to what he means by some reasons to suspect that there was collusion and that the defendant No. 7 had himself purchased the land in the name of the plaintiff. But in the view we take it is unnecessary to remand the case. The appeal must fail, on the simple ground that the plaintiff has purchased nothing more than the right title and interest of defendant No. 7 and that, that right, title and interest had at the time he brought this suit ceased to exist.

It is urged before us by the appellant that he is at least entitled to re-enter as usufructuary mortgagee, having purchased the right, title and interest of the former usufructuary mortgagee. But unfortunately for him he strenuously denied that there was any usufructuary mortgage at all, and we cannot, therefore, allow him to make this new case in second appeal.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

An application for execution of a mortgage-decree for sale, wrongly returned for want of a certificate under section 238 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, although not re-presented is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act.

Mr. A. Sundaram, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Madharan Nair, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question is whether Execution Petition No. 761 of 1905 was a step-in-aid of execution in accordance with law. It is urged by the appellants that it was not so, because it was returned for want of a certificate under section 238 of the Code of Civil Procedure then in force and was not re-presented. The decree under execution was, however, one for sale on a mortgage, and no attachment of the mortgaged property was necessary. Section 238 applies only to petitions for attachment. The Court was, therefore, wrong in returning the execution petition as defective. The petition not having been defective and the failure to present it again after its return being, therefore, immaterial, it must be held to have been a step-in-aid of execution in accordance with law.

The appeal is not pressed with reference to the application dated 6th February 1903.

The appeal against appellate order is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Section 140 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not afford the only remedy against a distraint made erroneously or on insufficient materials.

The Court which passes an ex parte order has the power to review it, as the Court has an inherent power to deal with an application to set aside an order made ex parte and to set it aside on a proper case being substantiated.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling on the opposite party to show cause why the order purporting to cancel the previous order of distraint should not be set aside, on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction.

We are not prepared to hold that section 140 of the Bengal Tenancy Act affords the only remedy against a distraint made erroneously or on insufficient materials, nor that any Court which passed an ex parte order has not the power to review it. Were we to do so, we should have ourselves to revise the original order, as it was clearly made on an insufficient finding not complying with the provisions of section 121 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But it was held by the Full Bench in the case of Bibi Tasliman v. Harihar Mahto (1) that the Court has an inherent power to deal with an application to set aside an order made ex parte and to set it aside on a proper case being substantiated. There is nothing either in the Bengal Tenancy Act or the Code of Civil Procedure which militates against this view. On the contrary section 151 of the new Code of Civil Procedure seems expressly to emphasize such a view.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs. This order will govern the 11 cases before us and there will be a single hearing fee of two gold mohurs.

Rules discharged.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXI, r. 66—Civil Rules of Practice (Madras), r. 189—Attachment of debt—Court, duty of, to inquire as to its existence—Receiver, appointment of, whether irregular—Jurisdiction.

Where an application for attachment of a debt is made the Court is not bound to satisfy itself as to the existence of the debt and if it appoints a Receiver in consonance with rule 189 of the Civil Rules of Practice (Madras), it does not fail to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law or act with material irregularity in the exercise of such jurisdiction within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Narasapur, in Execution Petition No. 389 of 1913, in Small Cause Suit No. 10891 of 1911 on the file of the Court of the Small Causes, Madras.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The point urged before me is that the District Munsif ought to have inquired into and decided the plea of discharge set up by the garnishee and that by not doing so, the Court either failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it or acted with material irregularity in the exercise of that jurisdiction. The argument was that until the Court is satisfied that there is an existing debt, it cannot proceed to pass orders for the appointment of a Receiver or for sale of the debt under rule 189 of the Civil Rules of Practice. The decision in Seriah v. Muckanachary (1) is relied upon in support of the contention that an inquiry should be held. In that case it is observed that under section 287 (e), corresponding to Order XXI, rule 66, clause 4, of the present Code, the Court has power to summon any person it thinks necessary in order to ascertain the nature and value of the property and that "if there is notice or reasonable cause to suppose that there is no debt due, the Court not only can, but ought to satisfy itself on the point." The reference to section 287 shows that the observation only applies to a case where sale is ordered, and it is evident from the citation of the case Harilal Amthabhai v. Abhesang Meru (2) and Seriah v. Muckanachary (1) that it was in the interests of the auction, purchaser that inquiry was considered necessary. It seems to me, therefore, that the case of Siriah v. Muckanachary (1) is hardly in point here. Assuming, however, that the principle would apply, there is no rule or provision of law which prescribes the course to be adopted by the Court in circumstances such as the present, in order to satisfy itself as to the existence of the debt. Then, although the garnishee puts forward a document (Exhibit I) as evidence of the discharge set up by him, the decree-holder himself contended that Exhibit I evidenced a sham transaction intended to defraud creditors. The lower Court in paragraph 4 of its order makes some observations which tend to show that it was inclined to accept that contention, and though it has not recorded a specific finding on the point, I take it that it was not satisfied that the plea of discharge was true. In these circumstances, I am unable to hold that the lower Court has failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law or has acted with material irregularity in the exercise of such jurisdiction. In the circumstances of the case, the lower Court appears to have acted in consonance with rule 189 of the Civil Rules of Practice by appointing a Receiver instead of ordering sale. The petition is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

A decree nisi in a foreclosure suit on the basis of a conditional mortgage may either direct an account to be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff or declare the amount due. Where the Court orders that an account be taken of what would be due to the plaintiff, the day to be fixed by the Court under section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) rule 2, Order XXXIV, of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908) is to be within six months not from the date of the order nisi, but from the date of declaring in Court the amount due.

In construing judicial orders, wherever practicable, they should be so interpreted as to be consistent with and not in contravention of law.

JUDGMENT.—The substantial question in controversy in this appeal relates to the validity of a decree absolute made in a foreclosure suit on the basis of a conditional mortgage. The suit was commenced on the 14th November 1904. The judgment was delivered on the 21st September 1908, by which it was directed that an account be taken of what would be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage and for costs of the suit and interest at six per cent. per annum from the date up to the date of payment, and the defendants were directed to pay the amount to the plaintiff within six months from the date of the decree. The accounts were subsequently taken, and so far as we can gather, on the 22nd January 1909 the decree was signed and a statement was inserted therein to the effect that Rs. 2,859-14-8 was due from the defendants to the plaintiff. This decree was made absolute on the 25th May 1909. Subsequently the decree-holder obtained delivery of possession of the mortgaged property through Court. The defendant contends that the decree absolute could not have been passed till after the 22nd July 1909, inasmuch as he was entitled to redeem within six months from the date of the decree. In reply, the mortgagee, decree-holder, argues that the period of six months should be deemed to run from the 23rd September 1908 and that consequently the right of redemption expired on the 23rd March 1909. The Courts below have overruled the contention of the judgment-debtor. In our opinion the view taken by the District Judge cannot be supported.

Section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is applicable to this case and which has been substantially reproduced in rule 2 of Order XXXIV of the Code of 1908 is in these terms: "In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall make a decree, ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit (if any) awarded to him on the day next hereinafter referred to, or declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree, and ordering that, upon the defendant paying to the plaintiff or into Court the amount so due, on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due, to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall transfer the property to the defendant free from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, or, where the plaintiff claims by derived title, by those under whom he claims, and shall, if necessary, put the defendant into possession of the property; but that if the payment is not made on or before the date to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the property."

It is plain that the decree nisi may either direct an account to be taken or declare the amount due. No difficulty arises when the Court is in a position to embody in its decision the amount due. But where, as here, the Court orders that an account be taken of what would be due to the plaintiff on the day referred to, subsequently a question of some nicety arises as to the mode in which the rights of the parties are to be worked out. It will be observed that the day to be fixed by the Court is to be within six months from, not the date of the order nisi, but from the date of declaring in Court the amount due. Consequently, when the accounts are directed, they must be kept open till the very last moment; that is, up till the moment when the Court determines the final date for payment and simultaneously declares with reference thereto the amount payable. In the case before us, this provision was overlooked, and the Subordinate Judge did not declare in Court the amount due before the 22nd January 1909, when the amount was entered in the decree drawn up on that date. From his judgment, it is perfectly plain that he intended to allow the defendant six months' time to redeem. This six months, under section 86, must run, not from the 23rd September 1908 when the judgment was delivered, but from the 22nd January 1909 when the amount due was declared in Court. We observe that the Subordinate Judge in his judgment directs the defendant to pay the amount due within six months from the date of the decree. The expression "date of decree" has, no doubt, a technical meaning, as under rule 7 of Order XX of the Code of Civil Procedure, the decree shall bear date the day on which the judgment was pronounced. But it is plain that the Subordinate Judge intended by the expression 'date of the decree' the date when the decree was actually drawn up and signed by him, embodying a declaration of the amount due. To attribute any other meaning to the judgment would be to hold that the Subordinate Judge acted in contravention of the clear provisions of section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is an elementary rule for construction of judicial orders that wherever practicable, they should be so interpreted as to be consistent with, and not in contravention of, law: Brojo Lal Bai v.

KHAGARAM DAS v. RAM SANKAR DAS.

Tara Prasanna (1). In this view, the decree nisi could not have been made absolute before the expiry of six months from the 22nd January 1909, and the order of the 25th May 1909 must be deemed premature.

The question next arises, what is the most equitable method whereby rights and obligations of the parties may be worked out in view of the fact that the decree-holder has already obtained delivery of possession of the mortgaged property through the Court on the basis of the decree absolute, which, we have found, was erroneously made, and must consequently be discharged? The judgment-debtors cannot rightly be called upon to pay the whole of the redemption money and be left to pursue a separate remedy for restitution against the mortgagee. In the events which have happened the foundation for the delivery of possession to the mortgagee disappears, and the mortgagee must now be deemed to have been improperly in possession of the premises. He is consequently bound to make restitution to the mortgagor on the principle explained by the House of Lords in Parkinson v. Hanbury (2). See also Anandrav v. Ravji (3), Ramji v. Chinto (4); Ramshet v. Pandhari (5).

We direct accordingly that this appeal be allowed, that the decree of the District Judge as also the decree absolute made by the Subordinate Judge on the 25th May 1909 be discharged, and that the case be remitted to him with instructions to carry out the directions embodied in this judgment. The Subordinate Judge will, in the first place, determine the amount realised by the mortgagee from the property in his possession. This sum will carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the end of each year. The Subordinate Judge will, in the second place, determine the amount due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee on the footing that Rs. 2,859-14-8 was due to him on the 23rd March 1909, and will allow interest on such sum from that date at 6 per cent. per annum. The difference between the two sums thus determined will be declared payable by the defendant to the plaintiff and the defendant will be called upon to pay such sum in Court to the credit of the mortgagee within one month from the date on which the amount found due is notified to him. If the amount is paid within the period fixed, the defendant will be declared owner of the property and will be restored to possession thereof, unless the mortgagee has previously surrendered possession in his favour, as he has expressed a desire to do in this Court. If the amount is not so deposited, and if no ground is established for an order for extension of time in terms of the proviso to sub-rule (2) of rule 3 of Order XXXIV of the Code, the decree absolute will be passed. When such decree is passed, the right of redemption will be deemed to have been extinguished. We may add that if the mortgagee decides to surrender possession of the property at once to the mortgagor, steps for re-delivery of possession must be taken through the Court, so that no question may hereafter arise as to the reality of the change in possession, if any. There will be no order for costs at any stage of these proceedings.

RAM SANKAR DAS PRAMANIK AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 16, 74—Interest, penal—Court, power of, to grant relief—Penal stipulation as to interest, test of—Unconscionable or extravagant bargain, how determined—Stipulation for accelerating payment, when penal—Domination of Will—Undue influence.

A Court is competent to grant relief whenever the rate of interest appears to the Court to be penal.

Section 74 of the Contract Act as amended in 1899 is comprehensive enough to cover all cases where the contract contains "any stipulation by way of penalty."

KHAGARAM DAS v. RAM SANKAR DAS.

The test to determine whether a contract contains a stipulation by way of penalty is, was the agreement to pay the damage for the breach of covenant or contract unconscionable and extravagant, such as no Court ought to allow to be entered into. In order to determine what is unconscionable and extravagant no hard and fast rule can be laid down, the particular facts and circumstances of each case should be considered.

A stipulation merely accelerating payment of the whole debt on default of payment of one or more instalments is not, by itself, by way of penalty. But the position is very different where the entire sum, which the creditor had agreed to receive in instalments without interest, is not only made repayable in one sum, but is also made to carry interest at an unusual rate. The Court may, in view of all the circumstances of the case, regard the stipulation for the payment of interest at an exorbitant rate, as a penalty.

Where the stipulation was made that upon default of payment of one or two instalments not only would the whole balance due become forthwith payable, but would carry interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum:

Held, that the covenant for payment of interest at this rate was a penalty.

The urgent need of money on the part of the borrower does not of itself place the lender in a position to dominate his will within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act But where the creditors are in a position to take advantage of the embarrassment of their debtors the bargain is unconscionable.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs to enforce a mortgage security executed in their favour on the 9th June 1904. The history of the transactions between the parties prior to the mortgage may be briefly narrated. On the 24th July 1895, the plaintiffs advanced to the defendants a sum of Rs. 375 to carry interest at 24 per cent. per annum. On the 25th January 1899, the defendants gave the plaintiffs a bond for Rs. 600 in renewal of the promissory note of the 24th July 1895. The bond carried interest at the rate of 75 per cent, per annum. In 1901, the plaintiffs sued to recover their money. The Court held that the plaintiffs should not be allowed interest at 75 per cent. per annum and made a decree for the amount named in the bond with interest at 24 per cent. per annum. The amount decreed was Rs. 1,060 and this carried interest at 6 per cent. per annum till realisation. On the 8th June 1903, the plaintiffs advanced to the defendants a sum of Rs. 300 on a promissory note which carried interest at one pice per rupee per day, that is, at the rate of 570 per cent. per annum. On the 9th June 1904, accounts were taken between the parties, and it was found that Rs 1,230 was due on the decree and Rs. 2,010 on the promissory-note. The creditors, however, agreed to receive Rs. 100 in cash and an instalment mortgage bond for Rs. 1,500. The mortgage instrument provided for the payment of this sum of Rs. 1,500 in ten instalments spread over five years, with the condition that if default was made in the payment of one or two instalments, the creditors would be at liberty to realise the whole sum due together with interest thereon at 75 per cent. per annum from the date of default. Ample security was given for the sum named and the plaintiffs accepted the instalment bond. They then commenced this action on the 5th July 1909 on the allegation that only Rs. 200 had been paid by the debtors, that default had been made in the payment of one instalment and that they had become entitled to realise the entire sum secured less the amount paid, with interest thereon at 75 per cent. per annum from the date of default. The claim was for Rs. 1,300 as principal money and Rs. 3,949-14 as interest thereon from 15th June 1905 to the date of the institution of the suit. The substantial defence was that the claim for interest was not enforceable. The Subordinate Judge has accepted this view, and has made a decree for Rs. 1,300 with interest thereon at 24 per cent. per annum from 15th June 1905 till the date of realisation. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and have contended that interest should have been decreed at 75 per cent. per annum. On behalf of the appellants reference has been made to the cases of Sunder Koer v. Sham Krishen (1), Miajan v. Abdul Jubbar (2),

On behalf of the respondents a two-fold argument has been advanced, viz, first, that the stipulation for payment of interest on default at 75 per cent. per annum was by way of penalty and, secondly that, as the circumstances of the case show, the creditors were in a position to dominate the will of the debtors, the stipulation for payment of interest at an exorbitant rate was not enforceable. In support of these positions, reference has been made to the cases of Maneshar Bakhsh Singh v. Shadi Lal (14); Baldeo Singh v. Bulaki Das (15); Dhanipal Das v. Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (16); Velchand v. Lieut. A. Flagg (17); Public Works Commissioner v. Hills (18). We are of opinion that the contention of the defendants must prevail.

The first contention of the respondents is that the stipulation for the payment of interest at an exorbitant rate upon the entire amount secured by the mortgage in the event of default of payment of one or two instalments was in the nature of a penalty. Before we examine this argument in the light of judicial decisions, it is desirable to point out that in the solution of this question, no real assistance can be derived from the class of cases in which there is a stipulation for payment of interest at an advanced rate on default of payment of principal or interest on the due date or the other class of cases in which on default of payment of principal or interest, stipulation is made for payment of compound interest at the same rate as the simple interest originally agreed to be paid or at a higher rate. The case before us falls within the class where there is a stipulation for payment of interest at a specified rate, if the principal or a part thereof is not paid on the due date. One of the earliest examples of this class of cases is the decision in Motaji v. Sheikh Husen (19), where a promissory-note, after stipulating for the re-payment of the sum due by monthly instalments without interest, provided that on default of payment of any one instalment, interest would be payable at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum. It was ruled that the stipulation for interest was in the nature of a penalty. This view was followed in Para v. Govind (20), where a promissory-note provided for re-payment of the sum due without interest within three months from the date thereof, and for interest at 75 per cent. per annum in the event of default in punctual payment; it was ruled that the rate of interest was a penalty. The Court overruled the contention that the creditor was entitled to enforce the contract strictly under Act XXVIII of 1855, which abolished all usury laws. Section 2 of the Act provides that in any suit in which interest is recoverable, the amount shall be adjudged or decreed by the Court at the rate, if any, agreed upon by the parties, and if no rate shall have been agreed upon, at such a rate as the Court shall deem reasonable. The Court held that the Statute did not destroy the equitable jurisdiction of the Courts to relieve against a penalty. A similar view was taken in Bansidhar v. Bu Ali Khan (21). There the defendant agreed to re-pay to the plaintiff a loan of Rs. 50 on a certain date, and, in default, to pay interest at Re. 1 per day, that is at the rate of 730 per cent. per annum. It was held that, looking at the entire instrument, the amount of interest appeared to be in the nature of a penalty, because "one rupee per diem for failure to pay Rs. 50 is, as interest, an extortionate amount, for which no adequate consideration is shown and which no man would contract absolutely to pay." The contention that the Court was fettered by Act XXVIII of 1855 was overruled, and it was said that if any other view were taken, there would be no limit to the extravagant and extortionate extent to which the most usurious claims might not be carried in the name of "interest." This decision accords with that in Chuhar Mal v. Mir (22), where interest payable on default at the rate of 37½ per cent was held penal. In Kunjbehari Lal v. Ilahi Bakhsh (23) and Maya Ram v. Naubat (24), where the interest stipulated to be paid on default of payment without interest on a specified date was 24 per cent, it was held to be not penal; the rate, it was said, was not so exorbitant as to justify reduction by the Court. The principle recognised in these cases lies at the root of the decision in Vythilinga v. Ravana Sundarappa (25), where the defendant had agreed to re-pay a loan of Rs. 10 within 15 days, and, on default, to pay interest at the rate of one anna per rupee per diem, that is, at the rate of 2,250 per cent. per annum. It was ruled that the stipulation for interest was penal, though the Court was not agreed upon the question whether section 74 of the Indian Contract Act covered the case. The uniformity of the current of decisions we have analysed, was arrested by the case of Arjan Bibi v. Asgar Ali (7), where the bond provided for the re-payment of the loan within a certain period, and, on default, for interest at 150 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond. The Court held that the stipulation for payment of interest was enforceable, as the case fell within section 2 of Act XXVIII of 1855 and was not covered by section 74 of the Indian Contract Act (as it then stood), inasmuch as the bond mentioned only one rate of interest and did not provide for the payment of two rates of interest. This view was adopted in Gokal Chand v. Khwaja Ali Shah (26), though the opposite position was immediately afterwards accepted in Kanhaya Lal v. Narain Das (27). In Sankaranarayana Vadyar v. Sankaranarayana Ayyar (8), the bond provided for re-payment of the sum due in twevle instalments, with the stipulation that in the event of default, the debtor should become liable to pay the whole amount of the loan with interest at the rate of 180 per cent. per annum. The Court held that the rate could not be said to be exorbitant, "having regard to the relations between the parties and the circumstances in which the defendant undertook the obligation which he failed to fulfil." To the same effect is the decision in Chinna Venkatasami v. Pedda Kondiah (28) (where, however, the rate of interest was only 12 per cent. per annum) as also in Periasami v. Subramanian Asari (29). Notwithstanding the small group of cases to which we have referred, where a restriced view was taken of the authority of the Court to relieve against a penalty, the tide has turned back, and the more modern cases repudiate the doctrine that any rate of interest, however exorbitant, cannot be deemed penal. Thus in Miajan v. Abdul Jubbar (2), where there was a stipulation for the payment of interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond on failure to pay the principal sum in two instalments on specified dates, the Court held that the stipulation was in the nature of a penalty and declined to follow Arjan Bibi v. Asgar Ali (7), Sankaranarayana Vadyar v. Sankaranarayana Ayyar (8), as authorities for any inflexible rule of law. This view was adopted in Velchand v. Lieut. A. Flagg where 60 per cent interest on an account originally made up very largely of interest at an exorbitant rate was treated as penalty. It is obvious that each case must be treated on its own circumstances; thus, while in Annamalai v. Sellappa (30), interest at 36 per cent. was held not penal, in Ganapathi v. Sundara Thevan (31), compound interest at Rs. 300 per cent on default of payment on due date was deemed a penalty [See also Salem Town Bank Ld. v. Vencatachariar (32); Sampat v. Chango (33)]. We adopt the principle, consequently, as fairly deducible from the more modern decisions that the Court is competent to grant relief whenever the rate of interest appears to the Court to be penal. This view has now been adopted by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Avathani Muthukrishnier v. Sankaralingam Pillai (34). It is not of much moment to consider whether the Court can grant such relief in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction or under section 74 of the Indian Contract Act as amended in 1899. It is sufficient to observe that although the section was originally framed to deal with the doctrine of penalty and liquidated damages as understood in the Law of England, it is in its present form comprehensive enough to include the type of cases now before us, because it covers all cases where the contract contains "any stipulation by way of penalty." The question consequently reduces in any concrete case to this: Does the contract contain a stipulation by way of penalty? In the solution of this question, the observations of Lord Mersey in Webster v. Bosanquet (35) may be usefully borne in mind. The test is, was the agreement to pay the damage for the breach of covenant or contract unconscionable and extravagant, such as no Court ought to allow to be entered into? No hard and fast rule can, however, be laid down as to what may or may not be unconscionable or extravagant to insist upon in the circumstances of the particular case. As Lord Halsbury said in Clydebank Engineering and Shipbuilding Company v. Yzquierdo Castaneda (36), it is impossible to lay down any abstract rule as to what it may or may not be extravagant or unconscionable to insist upon, without reference to the particular facts and circumstances which are established in the individual case. In the same case, Lord Davey added: "You are to consider whether it is extravagant, exorbitant or unconscionable at the time when the stipulation is made—that is to say, in regard to any possible amount of damages which may be conceived to have been within the contemplation of the parties when they made the contract." It need not be disputed that a stipulation merely accelerating payment of the whole debt on default of payment of one or more instalments is not, by itself, by way of penalty: Burden, Ex parte, Neil, In re (37); Sterne v. Beck (38); Wallingford v. Mutual Society 39); Illustration (f) to section 74 of the Indian Contract Act. But the position is very different, where the entire sum, which the creditor had agreed to receive in instalments without interest, is not only made repayable in one sum, but is also made to carry interest at an unusual rate. The Court may, in view of all the circumstances of the case, regard the stipulation for payment of interest at an exorbitant rate as a penalty. In the case before us, the history of the previous transactions between the parties shows that a very considerable portion of the sum (Rs. 1,500) secured by the mortgage was interest on the original sums advanced by way of loan. The decree, which had been obtained by the creditors, carried interest at 6 per cent. per annum, while the promissory-note carried interest at such an exorbitant rate (Rs. 570 per cent. per annum) that no Court could possibly enforce payment thereof. When the creditors received payment of Rs. 100 in cash and agreed to receive the balance (Rs. 1,500) in instalments without further interest and spread over five years, the transaction was by no means too favourable to the debtors, who were made to furnish ample security.

In these circumstances, when the stipulation was made that upon default of payment of one or two instalments, not only would the whole balance due become forthwith payable, but would carry interest at the rate of 75 per cent per annum, we may properly hold that the covenant for payment of interest at this rate was a penalty, that is, it does not represent the damages which the creditors were likely to suffer by reason of the default of the debtors, but was rather intended as an effective means to secure punctual performance of the contract. In our opinion, the Subordinate Judge very properly declined to allow the plaintiffs interest at 75 per cent. per annum.

The second contention of the respondents is that the Court should decline to enforce the covenant for payment of interest at 75 per cent. per annum in view of the provisions of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act as amended in 1899. There is considerable force in this contention, as the case is of the type mentioned in illustration (c) of section 16. We need not dwell at length, however, on this aspect of the case ; it is sufficient to point out that when the mortgage was executed for Rs. 1,500, the debtors were in a position of extreme embarrassment. The creditors held a decree which they could execute any moment and sell up their properties, and the case for the defendants is that they threatened to do so. At the same time the creditors held a promissory-note which carried interest at the ruinous rate of 570 per cent. per annum. There can be no question that the creditors were in a position to dominate the will of their debtors, within the meaning of section 16, and although the latter furnished ample security, the creditors made the best bargain they could ; they obtained a covenant for interest at 75 per cent., that is, interest at the very rate which had been disallowed by the Court in 1901, even when they were in the position of unsecured creditors. It need not be disputed, as has been repeatedly laid down, that urgent need of money on the part of the borrower does not, of itself, place the lender in a position to dominate his will within the meaning of section 16 : Sundar Koer v. Sham Krishen (1) ; Ganesh v. Vishnu (12) ; Umesh Chandra v. Golap Lal (4); Chatring Moolchand & Co. v. Whitchurch (40); Debi Sahai v. Ganga Saha (41); Meghraj v. Ganga Baksh (13); Meghraj v. Hargayan (42); Sri Chand v. Niadar Singh (43).

(43) 10 Ind. Cas. 14, 8 A. L. J. 407.

But, in the case before us, it is not necessary for the debtors to rely upon this doctrine ; here the facts make it clear that the creditors were in a position to take advantage of the embarrassment of their debtors and the bargain they made was unconscionable ; consequently, there is a concurrence of the two elements which must combine to attract the operation of section 16: Davis v. Maung Shwe Go (44), Subba Chariar v. Muthuveeram Pillai (45).

We desire to add, however, that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is erroneous, and if there had been a cross-appeal by the defendants, we would have varied it. The Subordinate Judge has allowed interest at 24 per cent. per annum till realisation. This is clearly wrong. Interest at such rate should have been allowed only up to the date fixed for re-payment and redemption by the decree, and interest thereafter should have been allowed only at 6 per cent. per annum. We are also of opinion that the rate of 24 per cent. allowed by the Subordinate Judge is too high; in view of the fact that the sum secured by the mortgage was composed largely of interest at a high rate on the original loan and that the debtors had furnished ample security, the justice of the case would have been met if interest had been allowed at 12 per cent. Finally, the Subordinate Judge has allowed the plaintiffs full costs of the suit (inclusive of the Court-fees and hearing fee), though he has decreed the claim for less than half the amount; in ordinary course, each party should have been allowed costs to the extent of his success ; at any rate, the plaintiffs should not have got costs on the amount not decreed in their favour. It is thus plain that the appellants have no reason whatever to complain of the decree of the Subordinate Judge which is really too favourable to them.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at thirty gold mohurs.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree on the ground that the provision for interest at 75 per cent. was a stipulation by way of penalty.

Appeal dismissed.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), ss. 18, 26—Succession certificate, revocation of—Jurisdiction—Succession certificate granted by Subordinate Judge—District Judge, whether can revoke—Regulation V of 1799—Intestate—Succession—District Judge, power of.

Ordinarily the revocation of a succession certificate must be made by the Court which granted it, if it still exercises jurisdiction in that district.

Therefore, a certificate granted by a Subordinate Judge invested with the powers of a District Court in certificate cases under section 26 of the Succession Certificate Act cannot be revoked by a District Judge if the former is still exercising jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of a District Judge under Regulation V of 1799 is of a limited character and is more administrative than judicial. He can act thereunder only if there is no claimant

Therefore, a District Judge has no jurisdiction in an intestate case to ignore the claim of one who has obtained a certificate, until it is revoked by a competent Court.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge of 24-Parganas, dated the 26th May 1913.

Babu Rani Charan Mitter, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—One Dhyan Singh, an ex-convict from the Andamans, having died intestate, an application for a succession certificate was made by a minor, named Pandu Singh, through his mother Sukhia Bewa on the allegation that the said Sukhia Bewa was the widow and the said Pandu Singh was the son of the said deceased; a certificate was granted by the first Subordinate Judge at Alipore acting as a Court invested with the powers of a District Court under the Certificate Act. The Collector of Alipore was informed that the claimants were not the legal representatives of the deceased and that the certificate had been obtained by a fraud on the Court. On this information the Collector made some enquiry and then applied to the District Judge for taking proceedings under Regulation V of 1799 and this case was numbered as Intestate Case No. 12 of 1913. In this case the learned Judge issued a notice upon Sukhia Bewa to show cause why the Succession Certificate should not be cancelled and after taking evidence, revoked the certificate and ordered the issue of notice for claimants. Having passed this order in Intestate Case No. 12 of 1913, the learned Judge recorded an order of revocation in the Certificate Case No. 51 of 1912 in the Court of the first Subordinate Judge of Alipore and it is this order of revocation that is appealed against.

It is contended that the order of the learned Judge is incompetent. Section 26 of the Succession Certificate Act, VII of 1889, empowers the Local Government to invest Courts inferior to that of the District Judge with the powers of a District Court under the Act, and declares that the Courts so invested would have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Court in the exercise of all the powers conferred by the Act on District Courts, provided that an appeal from such inferior Court would lie to the District Court.

In this case the certificate was granted by the Subordinate Judge of Alipore and an appeal lay to the District Judge. As no appeal had been made, the order granting the certificate was final. Section 18, however, provides for the revocation of certificates granted under the Act, for certain causes. This revocation can be made at any time when the circumstances enumerated in the section are proved, irrespective of the finality of the grant by reason of no appeal having been filed against the same. But who is to make the revocation in a case where the grant is by an inferior Court? The appellant contends that the revocation can be made only by the Court which made the grant. Section 18 does not make any specification in this matter: it is true that clause (2) mentions the concealment of a material fact from the Court as a reason for revocation and the Trial Judge would perhaps be in a better position to judge about such concealment, but that by itself does not seem to exclude the jurisdiction of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction. Section 27 provides for the surrender of a revoked certificate to the Court which granted it. This seems to indicate that ordinarily the revocation must be made by the Court which granted the certificate; this, however, must be so only when the Court granting the certificate is still exercising jurisdiction in the District. In this case the 1st Subordinate Judge of Alipore is still invested with the powers of a District Court in certificate cases and the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to make the revocation. It is true that he could withdraw the case to his own Court under sub-section 4 of section 26, but that power could be exercised only when the case was pending decision. The learned Judge has made a further mistake in making the revocation in the intestate case: his jurisdiction under the Regulation is of a limited character and is more administrative than judicial. He can act thereunder only if there is no claimant: in the present case the appellant was a rightful claimant under the certificate and the learned Judge was bound to respect the same until it was revoked by a competent authority. It has been said that this is a mere irregularity not affecting the merits of the case and we should not, therefore, interfere. I have held, however, that there was no jurisdiction and in the face of that finding this argument cannot be of any avail. The order of revocation, therefore, must be set aside with costs, two gold mohurs.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

Order set aside.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 4—Practice—Suit by representative of deceased—Probate or Letters of Administration obtained—Succession certificate, whether necessary—Suit, whether to be dismissed if certificate not previously obtained.

Where Probate or Letters of Administration have been obtained as regards the estate of a deceased, a Succession Certificate is not necessary under section 4 of Act VII of 1889 to entitle a person to sue.

Where a Succession Certificate is necessary to entitle a plaintiff to maintain a suit, it should be allowed to be produced before a decree is passed and the suit should not be dismissed because the Succession Certificate has not been obtained previously.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee, Siva Nandan Roy and Jnanranjan Chatterjee, for the Appellants.

Babus Provas Chandra Mitter and Jatindra Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover a certain deposit made in a Bank, known by the name of Sheo Lal Majhilal in the town of Gaya, by their uncle and predecessor, Bisseswar Dayal. The plaintiffs are the three minor nephews of Bisseswar and his brother, Pasupat Nath, who has obtained Letters of Administration to his Will. The case is that Bisseswar Dayal and Dudhnath, who predeceased him leaving his son plaintiff No. 3, and plaintiff No. 4 are members joint in mess and estate in a Mitakshara family. Bisseswar died in February 1908, leaving a Will dated the 2nd January 1908, of which Will Pasupati Nath obtained Letters of Administration, with a copy of the Will annexed, to the property and credits of Bisseswar on the 22nd September 1910. From the Will it appears that the testator admitted that he was fully joint with his brothers as regards the ancestral property, which he sets out in Schedule I, and his statement in the 3rd column of Schedule I must be taken to mean that his share would be ⅓rd on partition, but that no partition had ever taken place. He also had a considerable amount of immoveable and moveable property acquired by him alone, and he gives a list of that in Schedule II. But it appears that that list is not complete, inasmuch as another item is mentioned in the body of the Will which is not included in Schedule II. The parties went into evidence on the merits and both parties say here before us that they are anxious for a decision on the merits.

The learned Judge has dismissed the suit on a preliminary point and we think that he has erroneously decided that point. He says that the fact that Bissesswar Dayal made a Will negatives the theory that he was joint with the plaintiffs. That was his first error. We have shown that the Will itself clearly shows that he was joint with the plaintiffs. He further says that they cannot get a decree until they produce the Succession Certificate. This is his second error. Section 4 of Act VII of of 1889 is perfectly clear on the point that Probate or Letters of Administration evidencing the grant of Letters for administration of the estate of the deceased is sufficient to render a Succession Certificate unnecessary.

It has been argued before us that those Letters of Administration are not with a copy of the Will annexed. It is only in cases of intestacy that Letters of Administration without copies of the Will annexed are given, and it is apparent from the alternative words —a Probate or Letters of Administration— that the section includes Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed. Even if a Succession Certificate had been necessary we must point out to the learned Judge in the Court below that the practice of the Courts in India approved by this Court has always been to allow the Succession Certificate to be produced before the decree is passed and not to dismiss the suit outright because the Succession Certificate has not yet been obtained. However, we do not think that any Succession Certi cate is necessary, because the plaintiff No. 4 has obtained Letters of Administration to the estate of Bissesswar.

Then it is argued that the plaintiff No. 4 did not bring the suit upon the basis of the Letters of Administration and that, therefore, he cannot be allowed to amend the plaint now so as to alter the character of his suit. We think that this is a very technical view to take of the pleadings. Paragraph 9 of the plaint says that the Will was proved in solemn form before the District Judge of Gorakhpur and Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will was granted on the 27th May 1910. Following hat, paragraph 10 says that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the whole amount from the defendants. The Letters of Administration are, therefore, clearly referred to, and the case falls within the remarks of the Privy Council in Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Musammat Thakooranee Rutta Koer (1) and the case of Raja Rup Singh v. Rani Baisni (2). The case in Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Musammat Thakooranee Rutta Koer (1) was somewhat of the same nature as the present case. The nature of the transaction and the status of the obligor, their Lordships say, make it peculiarly desirable that the Appellate Court should have the benefit of the judgment of the Court below on the issues on the merits, and they, therefore, allowed an amendment of the plaint in what is a much stronger case against such amendment than the present; for we are of opinion that this case could have proceeded on paragraphs 9 and 10 of the plaint without any amendment, and that the question of the Letters of Administration, the question of survivorship and the question of inheritance could have been gone into upon the plaint as it stands. But as the parties are still anxious that the verbal amendment should be made so as to make the two paragraphs clear, we think it right to accede to their prayer and to expand paragraph 10 of the plaint so as to enable all these pleas which are referred to in the plaint itself to be specifically included. Paragraph 10 would be amended as follows: that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the whole amount from the defendants, as plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 are the nephews and plaintiff No. 4 is the brother of the deceased depositor, who has left no issue or widow. Whether this is under the Will or by survivorship or by inheritance does not appear to us to be very material. But if the defendants desire to give any evidence to show that the plaintiffs are not entitled on either of those grounds to any share in any money that may be found due to Bissesswar's estate, they are at liberty to give evidence on the point; and it shall further be added to paragraph 10, that the plaintiff No. 4 is entitled to recover the whole amount from the defendants on behalf of the other plaintiffs as Administrator to the estate of Bissesswar. The case will then be tried on the merits.

The result is that the appeal is decreed. The decision of the Court below and its decree on the preliminary point is discharged and the case is remanded to the lower Court for decision on the merits.

The appellants are not entitled to any costs in this Court as their own defective pleadings seem to have got them into this trouble; but the costs of the suit in the lower Court will abide the result of the final decision.

The Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded to the appellants.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 38—Maintenance—Suit based on agreement—Claim not made by maintenance-holder—Jurisdiction.

In a division between two Hindu brothers, S and V, it was agreed that their mother would live with S and that V would pay S therefor a certain quantity of paddy by way of maintenance. V fell into arrears. On the death of both S and V, the sons of S sued the sons of V for the arrears due in the Small Cause Court.

Held, that the suit, not being by the maintenance-holder or for maintenance, but being based on a contract was not one 'relating to maintenance' within the meaning of Article 38, Schedule II, of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and that it was, therefore, cognizable by the said Court.

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Miller, in Civil Revision Petition No. 824 of 19 2, dated 27th November 1913, and reported in 22 Ind. Cas. 39, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, in Second Civil Suit No. 323 of 1912.

Mr. K. S. Jayaram Iyer, for the Appellants.—Ramaswamy Pantulu v. Narayanamoorthy Pantulu (1) is no authority on the point. There was no discussion on the question and the decision itself requires re-consideration. The phrase "relating to" is far wider than the word "for." In the old Act, XI of 1865, the language is "suit for maintenance." The language in section 4 of the Pensions Act of 1871 is exactly similar. Under that Act also the decisions go to show that if, in its inception and original character, the right claimed comes within the purview of the Act, the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain a suit, even though the right claimed may not come directly within the provisions of the Act. See Vasudev Sadashiv v. Collector of Ratnagiri (2), Babaji Hari v. Rajaram Ballal (3), Syed Mahommed Isaack Mushyack v. Arzoon Nissa Begam (4), Vyankaji v. Narjarao Apajirao (5). See also Bhup Singh v. Lachman Kunwar (6) and Saminatha Ayyan v. Mangalathammal (7).

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question argued here, which was raised before the learned Judge, is whether the suit is excluded from the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes on the ground that it is covered by Article 38, Schedule II, of Act IX of 1887.

We think that Ramaswamy Pantulu v. Narayanamoorthy Pantulu (1) is in point, and that the fact that the plaintiffs sued here on an agreement, not on a determination of their joint liability with that of the defendants by a decree, is not material. The point is that the money is not claimed by a maintenance-holder or as maintenance, but solely on a contract. And in those respects, Saminatha Ayyan v. Mangalathammal (7) and Bhup Singh v. Lachman Kunwar (6) are distinguishable. As the claim is not, in our opinion, one relating to maintenance, we concur with the learned Judge and dismiss the Letters Patent Appeal with costs.

Putni Regulation VIII of 1819—Putni tenure, sale of—Irregularity in service and publication of notice of sale, effect of.

A due publication of the notices prescribed by Regulation VIII of 1819 forms an essential portion of the foundation on which the summary power of sale is exercised and makes the zemindar who institutes the proceedings exclusively responsible for its regularity.

Maharajah of Burdwan v. Tarasundari Debi, 9 C. 619 at p 622; 13 C. L. R. 34; 10 I. A. 19; 7 Ind. Jur. 212; 4 Sar. P. C. J 414 and Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamani Dasi, 14 C. 365; 14 Ind. Jur. 275; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 772, referred to

The provision for the advertisement of sale in the Collectorate is very material and is not directory but mandatory, and failure to duly observe it is a sufficient ground for setting aside a sale.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of two suits for setting aside a putni sale in which the zemindar is the purchaser. Appeal No. 91 arises out of the suit brought by the patnidars and No. 339 out of the suit brought by the dar-putnidar of some of the mouzas covered by the putni. The grounds on which the sale is impeached are the same in both suits, namely, irregularities in the service and publication of the notices required by law and irregularities in the conduct of the sale. The Court below has set aside the sale and the purchaser, the zemindar, has filed these appeals. It is contended on his behalf

(1) that the findings as to the irregularities are not justified by the evidence on the record;

(2) that the provisions of the Putni Regulation are directory and it is not necessary that they should be followed in every detail;

(3) that the plaintiffs have not shown that they suffered any injury by reason of the irregularities complained of;

(4) that the irregularties, even if proved, do not vitiate the sale.

We shall first see if the irregularties complained of are proved.

Under section 8 of the Putni Regulation the zemindar's application for sale and notice that the defaulting property is to be sold on the 1st of Jyestha if the arrears are not paid before that, have to be stuck up in some conspicuous part of the kutchery.

The Nazir of the Collectorate who was examined as a witness produced a bundle of papers stuck up in respect of the sale of the 15th of May 1911. This bundle does not contain the original application of the zemindar. Even the notice that has been exhibited as being in respect of the disputed mehal, Exhibit A, is in respect of a different mehal altogether, bearing a different jama and a different number and owned by a different putnidar. This may be due to some mistake in the Court below in marking one document for another, but no notice of this was taken by the appellant until it was pointed out by the learned Vakil for the respondent. But supposing this was a mistake for the correction of which no steps have been taken by the appellant, there is nothing to show that the original application was stuck up. Our attention has been drawn to Exhibit C, the notice to the putnidar, which mentions that the original petition is going to be stuck up in the Saddar Kutchery, but that is no evidence that it was stuck up in the Collectorate and the whole bundle produced by the Nazir did not contain this. The appellant has, therefore, failed to prove that the original application was stuck up.

As regards the sticking up the Nazir says that the ishtahar (notice of sale) was hung upon a board in the verandah, but it used to be taken down by the Muktears and placed on his table to be hung up again at the close of the day. The appellant's witness Muktear Purna Chandra Chatterjee admits that this used to be so formely when he used to go to the Nazarat, but he is not aware of the present practice. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that this way of dealing with the notices is proved and does not make out that continuous unobstructed presentation to the notice of the public which the law contemplates. In the case of Bejoy Chand Mahatap v. Atulya Chandra Bose (1), the sticking up of the notice from 10 to 5 in the day during Court hours was held to be not in conformity with the Regulation. This view was considered to be an obiter dictum in the case of Sachi Nandan Dutta v. Maharaj Bejoy Chand Mahtap Bahadur (2) by Brett and Gupta, JJ., and the learned Judges held that this sort of publication was sufficient to meet the requirements of the Regulation. The present case is, however, distinguishable in that in it the notice bundle was removed from the notice board and placed on the table in the Nazir's room for the inspection of the Muktears, so that although the notices might be on the board in the night and during short times when the Muktears did not remove them to the Nazarat, they were not on the board during the greater portion of the Court hours. There is no evidence that the public had notice of the removal or had access to the Nazarat. It is not for the Muktears alone that these notices are meant, and we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the sticking up was not in accordance with the requirements of the Regulation. A similar notice is to be stuck up in the Sadar Kutchery of the zemindar, but the appellant's Nazir says he only hung up a list of the defaulting mehals with the names of the defaulters and the amounts due. This is not strictly in accordance with the letter of the law, but we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that this may be taken as a substantial compliance.

Then the notice in the Mofussil was served in the kutchery of the dar-putnidar, althought it incorrectly states that it was served in the kutchery of the putnidar. Now the dar-putni is in respect of three only of the six mauzas covered by the putni. The dar-putnidar's kutchery, however, is in the principal village on the defaulting tenure and we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that service there was good service.

As regards the conduct of the sale several irregularities are complained of. One is that the public had not unobstructed access to the place of sale and the sale was, therefore, not in a public kutchery as required by the law. It is clear from the evidence that the sale was in the Court-room of the Collector and, therefore, in a public kutchery, but it is also clear that the chaprasees of the Collector who were placed at the wicket gate for keeping order did not allow many persons to enter for preventing overcrowding. The learned Subordinate Judge has believed this evidence and we have no hesitation in agreeing with him.

Then it is urged that the sale took place too early, i.e., before 12 o'clock, the usual hour for holding these sales. There is no evidence as to at what particular time this sale took place, as no one referred to his watch. The Collector is under the impression that he commenced sale at 12 but he is not quite sure. There is evidence that the Muktears remarked at the time that the sale was too early and they had to hurry to the ejlas to look after the interests of their clients. The law, however, does not require that the sale should be at any particular hour and the defaulter cannot impeach the sale as illegal merely on the ground that it took place earlier than usual; he may, however, be permitted to show that he was misled to his prejudice by the deviation from the usual practice. Now supposing the sales of the day commenced at or very near 12, if the formalities enjoined by the law had been observed, the sale of this property would have taken place much later and the plaintiffs could have paid up the money, which they no doubt brought to the kutchery but could not pay as they could not enter the sale room before the sale on account of the excessive zeal of the chaprasees of the Collector.

(1) 32 C. 953; 3 C. L. J. 46.
(2) 11 C. W. N. 729.

Section 10 of the Regulation requires that the lots shall be called up successively in the order in which they may be found in the notice. If the lots in the several notices of the Nawab Bahadur, Maharaja Tagore, Maharaj Bahadur Singh and the appellant Maharaja were called one after another and orders were passed on each before the property in suit was reached, it would have taken a good deal of time and the plaintiffs who came with the money in arrears would have been able to pay to the Muktear according to the usual practice and save their property. The earlier lots, however, were passed over as the zemindar's would not proceed with the sales, having probably received the arrears, and the sale of this property was finished in 3or 4 minutes, the zemindar's Muktear being the only bidder. The section further directs that the observance of the forms mentioned in the section shall be recorded in a separate rubakari to be held upon each lot sold. There was a rubakari but it was not prepared at the time of the sale; it is signed not by the Collector, but by a Deputy Collector and is dated the 18th May 1911 corrected into 15th May 1911. It is clear it was not prepared at the time of the sale.

Then the 15 per cent. of the purchase-money was not deposited as required by section 9.

These are the irregularities and we agree with the Court below that they are proved. In the case of Maharajah of Burdwan v. Tarasundari Debi (3) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say: "Their Lordships desire to point out that the due publication of the notices prescribed by the Regulation forms an essential portion of the foundation on which the summary power of sale is exercised, and makes the zemindar, who institutes the proceeding exclusively responsible for its regularity". In another case, the Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamini Dasi (4) their Lordships say: "Their Lordships have to construe the Regulation. They find a process prescribed by it, which its framers thought it indispensable to fix, for the observance of which they have declared the zemindar to be exclusively answerable, and which is calculated to protect all persons interested in the estate against injury by the working of a very swift and summary remedy given to the zemindar." Some of the irregularities found in this case might not be of much consequence but they are certainly deviations from the rules laid down in the Regulation, but there are others, such as the advertisement in the Collectorate, which are very material and cannot by any means be called directory only and not mandatory.

As regards injury, the learned Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the plaintiffs and we are of the same opinion. In fact the matter was not pressed before us. There are, we think, sufficient reasons for setting aside the sale. We, therefore, dismiss these appeals with costs. We assess the hearing fee in Appeal No. 339 at 5 gold mohurs. We do not interfere with the order of the lower Court as to costs in that Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Remand, evidence taken on—Appellate Court, discretion of—High Court, power of, to interfere in second appeal.

BHULAN v. WAZIR.

A High Court is not justified in second appeal in interfering with the discretion of the lower Appellate Court to the extent of refusing to recognize the additional evidence taken on remand under Order XLI, rule 27, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge of Aligarh, dated the 30th May 1914.

Mr. Mohan Lal Sandal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for possession of a house. On the pleadings in the Court of first instance it was admitted that one Chand owned a house which was situated in an enclosure shown as enclosure No. 21 in the map of the village abadi, and that it was described as the second of three houses in the said enclosure in the explanatory statement (khasra) appended to the said map. The plaintiffs claimed that the house in suit was the said house of Chand, while the defendant replied that this was not so, but on the contrary the plaintiffs were still living in a house in the said enclosure which was the house No. 2 belonging to Chand referred to in the settlement khasra. The lower Appellate Court caused certain further evidence to be taken, and then came to a finding that the house in suit is the house No. 2 belonging to Chand referred to in the Settlement map and khasra. It has also recorded a finding that the house in suit was occupied by permission of the plaintiffs by one Musammat Nasiban, who died recently. These are clear findings of fact and this appeal cannot succeed unless the defendant-appellant can show cause for interference with these findings in second appeal. It has not been shown to me that there is any force in the pleas taken in the third and fourth paragraphs of the memorandum of appeal. The District Judge had before him admissions by the parties that the house belonging to Chand, situated within the boundaries of plot No. 21, was the property of the plaintiffs. The defendant said that the house in question was the one in which the plaintiffs were living at the time of the institution of the suit. The District Judge came to the conclusion that this was not the case, because the house in which the plaintiffs were living was situated partly outside the boundaries of plot No. 21 and was shown to have been built after the preparation of the Settlement khasra and map which were plaintiffs' documents of title. There was no suggestion before the Court that either of the other two houses admittedly situated within the limits of plot No. 21 was the house described in the Settlement khasra as the house of Chand. On the pleadings, and on the evidence before him, the District Judge was entitled to come to the finding which he has recorded in favour of the plaintiffs. The only difficulty about the case is that suggested in the first two paragraphs of the memorandum of appeal. The Court of first instance had dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, on the ground that the evidence before it was not sufficient to prove that the house in suit was the house which had formerly belonged to Chand. When the case first came before the District Judge he recorded an order, dated the 28th of April 1914, to the effect that the conclusion arrived at by the first Court appeared correct on the evidence before that Court. He proceeded, however, to direct further evidence to be taken under Order XLI, rule 27, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The additional evidence taken was that of a Commissioner, who was ordered to take certain measurements on the spot to enable the Court definitely to satisfy itself as to the manner in which the Settlement map applied to existing facts. The learned District Judge presumably acted under Order XLI, rule 27, clause (1) (b), and it cannot be denied that, in the absence of some measurements such as those which were taken by the Commissioner on remand, it was practically impossible to understand how the Settlement map applied to the existing facts of the case and the suit would have to be decided more or less by conjecture. The real question is whether the District Judge was justified in ordering further evidence to be taken, and might not have been content with dismissing the appeal before him on the simple ground that the plaintiffs, on whom the burden of proof lay, had failed to prove their case. I do not think, however, that this Court would be justified in second appeal in interfering with the discretion of the lower Appellate Court to the extent of refusing to recognize the additional evidence taken on remand. If this is so, this appeal must necessarily fail and I dismiss it accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 14, Sch. I, Art. 11—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXI, r. 63—Removal of attachment—Appeal and revision—Advocate's act, how far binding on his client—Agent—Negligence.

Under Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, an order on the application for removal of attachment is conclusive, subject to a regular suit to establish the right to the attached property, and under Article 11 of the Limitation Act one year is allowed for such a suit. Therefore, it would be culpable negligence on the part of an Advocate to file an appeal or revision notwithstanding the plain provisions of Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, and the time spent in such appeal or revision cannot be excluded under section 14 of the Limitation Act, as the plaintiff would be bound by his Advocate's negligence under the ordinary rule that, if a person employs an agent, he is bound by what his agent does in the course of his employment.

Kura Mal v. Ram Nath, 28 A. 414; A. W. N. (1906) 67; 3 A. L. J. 218, distinguished.

Section 5 of the Limitation Act leaves it to the discretion of an Appellate Court to exclude the time, whereas section 14 obliges a Court to exclude time if it finds a certain state of facts.

Mr. J. R. Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Fox, C. J.—Some land was attached in execution of a decree obtained by the respondent against the legal representatives of one Pa Gale. The appellant applied for removal of attachment on the ground that the land was his. His application failed: the order dismissing it was made on the 15th March 1912. He appealed to the Divisional Court against this order. The appeal was rejected on the 29th April 1912 on the ground that no appeal lay against the order. The plaintiff presented an application in this Court on the 28th May 1912 asking for revision of the order. This application was dismissed on the 3rd September 1913 on the ground that there was no power to revise the order. He filed a suit to have his title declared on the 9th September 1913. This has been dismissed as barred by limitation under Article 11 of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act.

For the plaintiff it was contended that he was entitled to have excluded the time taken in prosecuting the abortive appeal and application for revision.

Sub-section (1) of section 14 of the Act says that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the defendant, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature is unable to entertain it. The course which the plaintiff should have pursued is very clearly indicated in rule 63 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, which says that where a claim or an objection is preferred to an attachment, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive. Article 11 of the Limitation Act gives one year from the date of the order for the institution of such suit.

With such plain provisions staring him in the face, it was sheer culpable negligence on the part of the Advocate who was then acting for the plaintiff to incur the risk of the plaintiff losing all remedy by filing the appeal and the application for revision. If the plaintiff is bound by the acts of his Advocate no case for exclusion of time under section 14 of the Act is made out, because proceeding contrary to a clearly expressed provision of law cannot be regarded as prosecuting another civil proceeding in good faith, in the sense in which the words "good faith" are defined in the Act, viz., done with due care and attention. It is urged, however, that the plaintiff should not be held bound by what was done for him by his Advocate and that as he employed a lawyer and did according as he was advised by him, the plaintiff personally prosecuted the appeal and application in good faith, and he is entitled to the exclusion of the time they took up. The case of Kura Mal v. Ram Nath (1) was cited in support of this proposition. This was a decision in a case in which the question was whether the power under section 5 of the Act to admit an appeal after time should have been exercised. The section leaves it to the judicial discretion of an Appellate Court to do so, whereas section 14 obliges a Court to exclude time if it finds a certain state of facts. I do not think that section 14 should be restricted to the plaintiff personally. There is nothing in the wording so restricting it, and the ordinary rule that if a person employs an agent he is bound by what his agent does in the course of his employment, should apply. If it were otherwise, the same method would have to be applied to many other provisions of law in which mention is made of a plaintiff only. Order III of the Civil Procedure is based on the principle that the acts of the agent in legal proceedings are the acts of the principal, and the latter is bound by them, and may have to suffer for them if they are wrong. A person resident, say, in Europe and having some legal proceedings conducted in this country by an authorized agent could scarcely be heard to say in such a case as the present that he must be allowed time, because he personally acted with due care and attention.

In my opinion the District Court's decision was right, and I would dismiss the appeal with costs, two gold mohurs.

A consent decree can only be varied by consent. Therefore, no modification of a consent decree can be allowed in execution on grounds not recognised in the decree itself as giving a right of such modification.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Ahmednagar confirming that of the Subordinate Judge at Parner.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. C. Virkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we think that the learned Judge was wrong in not enforcing the decree according to its terms. The decree is quite explicit. The first instalment is to be paid on or before the 1st of March 1908. Thereafter the defendant is to go on paying to the plaintiff an instalment every year. If the defendant fail to pay any two instalments at the proper time, the plaintiff is to take the property into his possession by right of ownership. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has held that the first two instalments were paid too late, but were accepted, and that subsequent two instalments have not been paid in time. There has been, therefore, a default with regard to the last two instalments which entitled the plaintiff to take possession of the property. The case is very similar to Bapu v. Vithal (1), which we recently decided, following the decision of Mr. Justice North in Australasian Automatic Weighing Machine Co. v. Walter (2), where it was held that a consent decree can only be varied by consent. There is no consent here, and as pointed out by this Court in Suguna v. Sadashiv (3), it is obvious that no modification of a decree can be allowed in execution upon grounds not recognised in the decree itself as giving a right of such modification. The decisions cited by the learned District Judge, Krishnabai v. Hari Govind (4) and Balambhat v. Vinayak Ganpatrav (5), are inapplicable where the relation of landlord and tenant is not created by the decree. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case in order that the decree may be executed according to its terms. The respondents must pay the costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89—Prior mortgagee of property sold at auction—Right to set aside sale.

A prior mortgagee of a property sold at auction has an interest in the property by virtue of a title acquired before the sale; he is as such entitled to apply to have the sale set aside under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code.

Ram Shankar Lal v. Ganesh Prasad, 4 A. L. J. 278; A. W. N. (1907) 97; 2 M. L. T. 248, 29 A. 385 (F. B.); Muhammad Ahmadullah Khan v. Ahmad Said Khan, 10 Ind. Cas. 863, 8 A. L. J. 356; 33 A. 481; Srinivasa Ayyangar v. Ayyathorai Pillai, 21 M. 416; 3 M. L. J. 54, referred to.

Civil revision against an order of the District Judge of Allahabad, dated the 10th March 1914.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. Haider (with him Messrs. Muhammad Yusaf and Abdul Bari), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Certain property, to wit one anna 8 pies 10 karants seven jaw out of a 3-annas share in Mouza Pauran, Mahal Talab Ali, was sold in execution of a decree.

The notification of sale is to be found on the record as paper 11 C. The language used is very specific. The Court gave notice to would-be purchasers that it was selling not the interest in certain lands, but was selling a well-defined and specific part of immoveable property. There is no allusion to any charges or incumbrances on the property and the ordinary meaning of the notification of the sale, which any purchaser would have a right to put upon it, was that this clearly defined and specific property was being sold by the Court.

After the sale and within the period allowed by law Hatim Ali came forward and in an application, which is to be found as 18A on the record, applied to have the sale set aside on depositing in Court the 5 per cent. of the purchase-money for payment to the purchaser and the amount specified in the proclamation of sale for payment to the decree-holder. In his application Hatim Ali does state incidentally that he was a murtahin mukuddam or prior mortgagee of the property sold.

The Munsif of Allahabad in whose Court this application was filed allowed it and set aside the auction-sale. The learned Judge of Allahabad to whom an appeal from this order was presented by Musammat Kashmiro Bibi agreed with the view taken by the Court of first instance and dismissed the appeal. Musammat Kashmiro Bibi was the auction-purchaser and she applied to this Court in revision, on grounds that the Courts below had no jurisdiction to entertain the application of Hatim Ali, that Hatiffl Ali Khan was a prior mortgagee of this property and this being the case, he was not a person who held an interest in the property sold by virtue of a title acquired before the sale and he had no locus standi and the Courts acted without jurisdiction in accepting and coming to a decision upon his application. There was a further plea that the Courts below acted with material irregularity in setting aside the sale of the property at the instance of such a person as Hatim Ali.

The line which the learned Vakil for the applicant took in argument before me was that the property sold in this case was the equity of redemption over the one anna, etc., share and this being the case, he was not a person who had acquired an interest in the property by virtue of a title acquired before such sale.

In support of his contention reference was made to several rulings passed before the present Code of Civil Procedure came into force. I do not mention those rulings because the language used in section 310A was very different from the language now used in Order XXI, rule 89, which has taken the place of section 310A. But special stress was laid amongst those rulings on the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Ram Shankar Lal v. Ganesh Prasad (1), in which it was held that the words "property comprised in the mortgage" as used in section 85 were probably intended to denote no more than the estate or interest which is the subject of any particular mortgage, that is, if the mortgage be a mortgage of the absolute estate in the land, then the land itself, if it be a puisne mortgage, then the interest in the land of the mortgagor, that is, the equity of redemption.

The principle laid down in that ruling would strongly favour the contention of the learned Vakil. He continued to draw attention to a ruling of this Court in Muhammad Ahmadullah Khan v. Ahmad Said Khan (2). That case, however, was a very peculiar case and cannot be safely relied upon as having universal application. The decree-holder in that case held two decrees against the same judgment-debtor, the one being a decree for sale on two mortgages and the other a simple money decree, and caused part of the mortgaged property to be sold by auction. After it was sold and purchased by a stranger the same decree-holder applied to get the sale set aside. The learned Judges refused to consider the decree-holder as a person entitled to apply under Order XXI, rule 89. The line which was adopted is not without interest so far as the present case is concerned. It was held that "ordinarily a mortgagee of the property sold is a person who has an interest in it, and in view of the provisions of rule 89, he would be competent to make an application, but we have to consider the facts of this particular case. Here the holder of the decree for money was also the holder of two mortgages in respect of the property of which he sought to have a sale. He caused the property to be sold either free from the mortgages or subject to the mortgages. If it was sold free from the mortgages, he must be deemed to have adandoned his mortgages and in that case he has no interest, in the property sold. If he caused the property to be sold subject to the mortgages, the sale only related to the interest of the mortgagor, that is, his right of redemption. In this right of redemption the mortgagee has no interest."

In the present case the property which the Court has professed to sell and which was sold was the property i.e., the one-anna odd share in Moura Pauran, Mahal Talab Ali, and in that property Hatim Ali Khan had undoubtedly an interest by a title acquired before the sale. The Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application. Under the special circumstances of the case when the Court entertained his application, all that it knew was that certain immoveable property had been sold in execution of the decree and that the person applying had a right by virtue of a title acquired before the sale to have the sale set aside. The plea then that the Court had no jurisdiction does not prevail with me.

There remains the question, whether the Court, when it was in possession of the facts of the case, acted with material irregularity in setting aside the sale of the property at the instance of a person who had under Order XXI, rule 89, acquired a title before the sale, still to be answered.

Looking to the very wide language used in Order XXI, rule 89, I am not prepared to hold that Hatim Ali Khan did not hold an interest in the property. The language of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act differs considerably from the language used in Order XXI, rule 89. Ordinarily I should have followed the ruling of this Court in Muhammad Ahamadullah Khan v. Ahmad Said Khan (2), but that case, as I have already said, is a very peculiar case and the Judges had before them the peculiar circumstances of the applicant.

Srinivasa Ayyangar v. Ayyathorai Pillai (3), which was a case decided before the present Code came into force, was a very similar case to the one before me and it was held that a mortgagee came within the words "owner of immoveable property" of section 310A of the former Code. Hatim Ali Khan did in my opinion hold an interest in the property sold by virtue of a title acquired before the sale and he could apply to have it set aside.

The pleas taken fail and the application is dismissed.

As regards costs, there is this important fact that Hatim Ali was called upon by the Court which was selling the property to produce his mortgage-deed at the time it was making an inquiry into the property sold, but he did not produce the mortgage-deed. Under such circumstances I make the order that each party bear its own costs.

Application dismissed.

AGRA AND OTHERS—CONVICTS—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 105 (2), 147, 304, 325—Right of private defence of property, limitations of—Unlawful assembly—Common object—Death caused by some members—Liability of all members

The Penal Code does not give any right of private defence of property in regard to which an offence under section 403 or 411 of the Code has been committed.

Section 105 (2) of the Penal Code applies to cases of theft only. Where more than 25 persons went in a body to enforce the right or supposed right of one of them to an animal by removing it from the house of a third person, and after they had removed it and gone some distance, they were followed by that person, who was consequently attacked and beaten by some of them and died by a blow on the head:

Held, that the assembly was an unlawful assembly within the meaning of section 141, Penal Code, and the force used by some of them in beating the deceased being in prosecution of their common object, all were guilty of rioting, but all could not be convicted of an offence under section 304, Penal Code, as the offence could not be said to have been committed in prosecution of the common object, nor was it such as the members of the assembly know to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object.

Where a man receives only one blow on the head and dies, and there is no evidence to show which of the two persons attacking him gave that blow, neither of the two will be convicted under section 304 but both of them can be convicted of an offence under section 325 of the Penal Code.

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, first Class, exercising enhanced powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, Lyallpur, dated the 21st May 1914, convicting the appellants.

Mr. Beechey, for the Appellants.

Mr. Broadway, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case 26 persons, appellants, have been convicted under section 304, part II, Indian Penal Code, read with section 149, of culpable homicide of Ahmda, who died as a result of fracture of the skull caused by a blow inflicted upon him on the 25th of February 1914. Bahadra and Agra, appellants, who are said to have been the persons who actually struck the deceased, have been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, and all the other appellants have been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment each. Mr. Beechey has filed a joint appeal on behalf of all the convicted persons and has argued for them all jointly.

There is not really very much dispute about the main facts in this case. It is common ground that on the 25th of February 1914 two of the appellants, Hassu and Pathana, went to the haveli of Mathela (P. W. No.) and took away from there a buffalo, which Hassu alleged to be his, which had strayed away from his house nearly a year before. Mathela and his relation Ahmda, coming to know that the buffalo had been taken away, followed them and at some distance from the haveli a fight took place in the course of which Ahmda received a severe blow on the head from which his death resulted a few days later. Mathela received only some trivial injuries. According to the prosecution theory all the other appellants came with Hassu and Pathana at the time when the buffalo was removed. According to the evidence for the prosecution when Mathela and Ahmda overtook the appellants, only four of them, Bahadra, Agra, Allah Ditta and Moman, turned back and Bahadra and Agra struck Ahmda, and the other two beat Mathela. After the occurrence Hassu made a report at Kilianwala thana in regard to the buffalo. In this report Hassu frankly admitted that he had seized his buffalo and was going away with it when certain persons came after him and attempted to rescue it and, in the fight which ensued, he and his companion Pathana and the men of the other party all received injuries. He went on to say that on the alarm being raised Bahadra, Moman, Agra, Allah Ditta, Sadeq and Palla, caste Dhaniwal, who were searching for a strayed she-camel, had come up and rescued them and that the buffalo was with their help taken to a certain well. He said he had left the buffalo with his companion Pathana at that well and had come to make a report. Upon this report the Police started a case in regard to the buffalo under section 411, Indian Penal Code, and it was only on the 28th of February, while the inquiry in that case was going on, that Mathela made his present statement in regard to the occurrence. The lower Court has examined the reasons given by Mathela for his delay in reporting the occurrence to the Police. His chief reason, that he was senseless and unable to go to the thana, has been held to be false. The delay appears really to have been due to the fact that Mathela took Ahmda to the Lyallpur dispensary and afterwards returned to his village. Jhanda (P. W. No. 3) stated that he did go to the thana to make a report but it was not taken down, and he was told to bring the wounded person there. Hassu had already reached the thana and had made his report and it is, therefore, quite probable that the Police refused to credit Jhanda's story without some further evidence such as the production of the injured person. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I do not think very great importance should attach to Mathela's delay in reporting the occurrence. The Magistrate has devoted a great deal of space in his judgment to discussing whether the buffalo belongs to Mathela or to Hassu. He appears to have wavered a good deal and to have been in doubt as to whom it belonged to. But he has found that Hassu possibly believed the buffalo to be his own in good faith. He does not believe that Pathana and Hassu went in broad day-light with a number of other persons in order to commit a theft of one buffalo, and I quite agree with him in this view. I think it can hardly be said on the evidence that Hassu has proved the buffalo to be his own property. At the same time, there is a great deal of evidence to the effect that it is his property and I think he probably went to Mathela's haveli and seized it, believing in good faith that it was his animal which had strayed away about a year previously. The next question is whether Hassu and Pathana went alone and removed the buffalo or whether they were accompanied by the rest of the appellants. In this connection Mr. Beechey has laid a great deal of stress on the fact that Hassu and Pathana belong to the Multan District and have no connection with the Vahniwal accused who are said to have joined them in removing the buffalo. It is, however, admitted that six of the other appellants came up at the time of the fight and though no confliction is established between the other appellants and Hassu and Pathana, there is no reason why Mathela and the other prosecution witnesses should name them falsely Mr. Beechey comments on the fact that the eye-witnesses all belong to Mathela's village and are his distant collaterals. This, however, is what one would expect from the fact that the village is a very small one. It is also quite natural to find Mathela's fellow-villagers to be the eye-witnesses in a case of this sort. They would probably have been in the neighbourhood at the time of the occurrence, and there is no reason why they should not have seen the facts to which they depose. They have no enmity with any of the appellants, and, on the whole, there do not appear to be sufficient grounds for disbelieving their evidence. I consider then that it is established by the evidence that the 26 appellants went in a body to Mathela's haveli with the object of removing the buffalo, which Hassu claimed and honestly believed to be his. I find that they did in fact remove the buffalo, and that after they had gone some distance they were followed by Mathela and Ahmda and that then probably some abuse was given on each side, and the four appellants named by prosecution witnesses, Agra, Bahadra, Allah Ditta and and Moman, turned back and beat them. The other appellants took no active part in the beating.

Mr. Beechey urges that even accepting this finding his clients have committed no offence. His argument is that a man whose cattle have been stolen, is entitled to seize them out of the possession of another man with whom he finds them and that in order to effect his purpose he is entitled to take with him a large body of other men. He bases his argument on section 105, part II, Indian Penal Code, which lays down that "The right of private defence of property against theft continues till the offender has effected his retreat with the property, or the assistance of the public authorities is obtained, or the property has been recovered."

And in support of his argument he cites Jarha Chamar v. Surit Ram (1), and

(1) 7 Cr. L. J. 49; 3 N. L. R. 177.

SUPPA THEVAN v. RAMASWAMI AIYAR.

Baij Nath Dhanuk v. Emperor (2). In my opinion, the argument of Counsel has no force. In the present case there was no allegation that Mathela had stolen the buffalo. Hassu's report made on the 19th of February, i. e., six days before the occurrence, was that his buffalo strayed away from the grazing ground. Under these circumstances the buffalo might have been misappropriated by somebody and might have changed hands several times, and Mathela might easily have acquired it in a perfectly honest manner. In any case, it could not be said that he acquired it by theft, though he might possibly have received it dishonestly within the meaning of section 411, Indian Penal Code. The Code does not give any right of private defence of property in regard to which an offence under section 408 or 411, Indian Penal Code, has been committed. Moreover, in the present case there was obviously ample time for the appellants to have had recourse to the proper authorities with a view to recover the possession of the buffalo. Instead of invoking the proper authorities, they took the law into their own hands and went in a body to enforce Hassu's right or supposed right to the animal. Under these circumstances I have no difficulty in holding that the appellants constituted an unlawful assembly within the meaning of section 141, Indian Penal Code.

The next question is of what offence should the appellants be convicted. Mr. Broadway frankly admits that they could not all have been convicted of culpable homicide under section 304, Indian Penal Code. It cannot be said that that offence was committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly; nor was it such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. The very fact that the appellants went in such numbers would negative the idea that any such consequence as did occur was likely to take place. The common object of the assembly was to take away the buffalo and when Mathela and Ahmda came up to get it back, force was used by some of the appellants in order to drive them away. This force was used in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly, and, therefore, I hold that all the appellants are guilty of rioting.

As regards Bahadara and Agra, it is proved that they attacked Ahmda, but, according to medical evidence, he only received one blow on the head, and there is no evidence to show which of these two appellants gave him that blow. Under these circumstances and following Emperor v. Bhola Singh (3), I am of opinion that neither of these two persons can be convicted of an offence under section 304, Indian Penal Code. I think, however, it can safely be held that when they attacked him they intended or knew that they were likely to cause him grievous hurt. I, therefore, accept the appeal, and, setting aside the order of the lower Court, convict Agra and Bahadra of an offence under section 325, Indian Penal Code, and all the other appellants of an offence under section 147, Indian Penal Code. I do not think this is a case in which a heavy punishment should be given. At the same time the act of the appellants was a lawless one and was likely to lead to a serious fight. The sentences will be as follows:

Two years' rigorous imprisonment each to Bahadra and Agra, and one year's rigorous imprisonment to each of the other appellants. These sentences will not include any solitary confinement. The appeal is accepted and the convictions are altered and the sentences reduced as above stated.

Appeal accepted;
Sentence reduced.

Jurisdiction of Magistrate to take action—Dispute as to immoveable property—Breach of the peace.

The jurisdiction of a Magistrate to take action under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not ousted merely because the breach of the peace relates to immoveable property.

Emperor v. Abbas, 12 Ind. Cas. 833; 14 C. L. J. 429; 39 C. 150; 12 Cr. L. J. 560; 16 C. W. N. 83, followed.

Abkari Act (Bom Act V of 1878), s. 43—Mhowra flowers—Consigned by railway—Found at an intermediate station for transhipment—Possession—Consignor, whether guilty

The accused consigned at a Railway Station certain mhowra flowers for conveyance to Nandod. The Railway Company took possession of these goods and in the course of the conveyance to Nandod they were found at Ankleshvar, a place where they naturally would be in the course of this transport. Ankleshvar being a place in a prescribed area within which even the possession of mhowra flowers without a permit is unlawful the accused was charged and convicted for possessing mhowra flowers without a permit under section 43 of the Abkari Act:

Held, that the applicant was not guilty of the possession of the flowers, and in the absence of any evidence that he conspired with the Railway Company that these goods should be conveyed without a permit, he was not guilty of even abetting the offence.

Criminal applications for revision against the order of the the District Magistrate of Broach, varying the conviction and sentences passed by the Second Class Magistrate at Ankleshvar.

Mr. G. K. Parekh, for the Accused.

Mr. S. S. Parkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing what has been said in this case on both sides, we think that there is no ground whatever for prosecuting the present applicant. He consigned certain mhowra flowers partly at the Nadiad and partly at the Umreth stations of the Railway Company for conveyance to Nandod. The Railway Company took possession of these goods and in the course of the conveyance to Nandod they were found at Ankleshvar, a place where they naturally would be in the course of this transport. But Ankleshvar is a place in a prescribed area within which even the possession of mhowra flowers without a permit is unlawful. Assuming, which we do not for a moment admit, that the conveyance by railway from Nadiad and Umreth through Ankleshvar to Nandod did amount to a transport within or an import into or a possession of these mhowra flowers within a prescribed area, yet the offence, if any, was committed, to put it compendiously, by the Railway Company. The accused personally did not possess the mhowra flowers within the prescribed area or transport them within or import them into or export them from that area. Therefore quite plainly to our minds he is not guilty of the offence of which he was accused and of which he was convicted. But it is said that even if not guilty of that offence, he is guilty of abetting it. Why? We do not know. There is not a particle of evidence, not even a suggestion, that he conspired with the Railway Company that these goods should be conveyed without a permit. So far as the evidence shows, it was no business of his to inquire or to trouble himself whether the Railway Company did or did not obtain a permit. It was sufficient for him to do his business, which was to consign the goods and possibly to pay for their conveyance, and it was very natural and very proper that he should leave the Railway Company to do their business which would include, if it is necessary, the obtaining of a permit for the purpose of this transport.

We, therefore, set aside the convictions and direct that the fines and sums of money paid in respect of the confiscated goods be, in each of these two cases, returned to the applicant.

Convictions and sentences set aside.

To justify a conviction under section 497 of the Penal Code, the actual fact of marriage must be proved in some way or another.

The evidence that the man and woman spoke of each other as husband and wife and that some of those who were acquainted with them spoke of them as man and wife, proves nothing more than conduct, and under section 50 of the Evidence Act conduct alone is not sufficient to prove marriage.

Mr. Campbell (with him Mr. V. G. Ajinkya), for the Accused.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This is a peculiar case, because although the applicant (we are dealing with the matter in revision) was convicted under section 497 of the Indian Penal Code, it does not seem to have occurred to anybody in the Court of the trying Magistrate that it was necessary definitely to prove the marriage; the marriage of course being that of the complainant and the woman with whom, he alleged, the accused had committed adultery. But it is necessary specifically to prove a marriage in a case under section 497. This, I think, is so clear that I need say nothing more about it beyond referring to section 50 of the Evidence Act. That section indicates quite clearly that conduct alone is not a sufficient basis for finding a marriage proved in a case of this kind. But as a matter of fact the evidence proves nothing more than conduct. It proves only that the man and woman spoke of each other as wife and husband and that some of those who were acquainted with them spoke of them as man and wife. But not a single witness deposed to a marriage. The actual fact of a marriage must be proved in some way or another to justify a conviction under section 497. Now, these people may be married; there is absolutely no reason for supposing that they are not. Therefore, were this an ordinary case the defect which has been indicated would be remedied by remanding the case in order that evidence might be taken on the question of marriage. But this, as it happens, is not an ordinary case. The events which led up to it happend very nearly two years ago. In some form or another these events have been before the Courts practically without intermission almost since they occurred. Both sides have suffered. The accused in this particular case has been in jail for somewhere about or nearly four months. Therefore, we have to ask ourselves whether justice really requires that this case should be remanded. On the whole I have come to the conclusion that justice will be satisfied in the very peculiar and special circumstances of this case quite as well by wiping out, as it were, these proceedings as by continuing them in order to ascertain whether all the requirements of the law necessary for a convicition have been fulfilled.

Therefore, I think that the conviction and sentence should be set aside, and the applicant acquitted and the fine, if paid, ordered to be refunded to the applicant.

It may be said that although the conviction of adultery is not legally established on the present evidence, the conviction under section 451 is. But that does not necessarily follow, because the conviction under section 451 requires proof that the house trespass was for the purpose of committing an offence, the only one of the purposes mentiyned in the section which apparently would fit the circumstances of this particular case; so that apparently the conviction under section 451 is just as closely affected as that under section 497 by the defect which I have mentioned.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Further inquiry—Discharge after fully considering whole evidence—Notice to accused.

An order of further inquiry under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, is improper and is liable to be set aside on revision if the whole evidence on the record has been duly considered and the order of discharge is not manifestly perverse or foolish, etc.

Although before directing further inquiry notice to the accused is not absolutely necessary yet according to the general principle of criminal jurisprudence an order to the prejudice of an accused should not ordinarily be passed without giving him an opportunity of being heard.

Dulla v. Emperor, 2 P. R 1901 Cr.; 82 P L. R. 1901 and Wahid Ali v. Emperor, 32 C. 1090; 8 Cr. L. J.120, followed.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Jhelum, dated the 12th of March 1914, reversing that of the Additional District Magistrate, Jhelum, dated the 3rd of March 1914, and under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directing that a further inquiry be made into the case by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Pind Dadan Khan.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The order directing further inquiry in this case cannot be upheld and should be set aside.

It appears that the Munsif after the conclusion of the civil suit passed an order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code for prosecution of the petitioner for offences under section 467 and 471/109, Indian Penal Code. The complaint by the Munsif was inquired into by Sheikh Fazal Ilahi, Additional District Magistrate, who, after hearing all the evidence that the prosecution had to adduce, came to the conclusion, which was agreed to by the Public Prosecutor, that the case was not one of forgery or of using as genuine a forged document and that the complaint as originally filed must fail. The Magistrate was also of opinion that the only possible offence of which the accused might be guilty was that of fabricating false evidence which is punishable under section 193, Indian Penal Code, and after considering the evidence for and against the accused he found that the document used in evidence before the Munsif was not proved to be false. In consequence of that finding he dicharged the accused.

The learned District Magistrate has, on the motion of the Public Prosecutor and without issuing notice to the petitioner, quashed the order of discharge, on the ground that in his opinion there was a prima facie case of an offence punishable under section 193, and ordered further inquiry into that offence by another Magistrate. It is not alleged that the Trial Magistrate did not record any evidence which the prosecution wanted to produce, and I must take it that the object of further inquiry is the re-hearing of the case upon the same material. Now a Full Bench of this Court have laid it down in clear and unequivocal language that generally speaking further inquiry after discharge is improper, unless the order of discharge was manifestly perverse or foolish or was based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete, vide, Emperor v. Kiru (1). The order of discharge in the present case does not, in my opinion, belong to one of the classes mentioned by the Full Bench and further inquiry directed by the Magistrate is not, therefore, warranted by the rule laid down by this Court. On this ground alone, the order sought to be revised is liable to be set aside.

But it is urged before me that as the offence under section 193 was not mentioned in the complaint made by the Munsif under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, the Criminal Court has no jurisdiction to try the accused for that offence. If this contention be correct, the proceedings in pursuance of the District Magistrate's order would be coram non judice. The point, however, is not free from difficulty and as my decision on it, in this case, would be obiter dictum I do not consider it necessary to deal with it.

It seems to me that this is a case in which the Magistrate ought to have issued notice to the accused before passing order for further inquiry. It is true that it is not as a matter of law obligatory on a Court to issue a notice upon the accused before directing a further inquiry under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, but according to the general principle of criminal jurisprudence an order to the prejudice of the accused should not ordinarily be passed without giving him an opportunity of being heard, vide Wahed Ali v. Emperor (2) and Dulla v. Emperor (3).

Accordingly I accept this application for revision and set aside the order directing futher inquiry into the case of the petitioner.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 497, 498, scope of—Confession of one of accused materially corroborated as to others—Bail, whether to be granted to others.

The rule laid down in section 497 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, for the guidance of Courts other than the Hight Court is a rule founded upon justice and equity and one which should be followed by the High Court as well as by every other Court subordinate to it, unless anything appears to the contrary.

The extended powers given to the High Court under section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code are certainly not to be used to get rid of the very reasonable and proper provisions of section 497 of the Code.

Where one of the accused, under sections 307 and 337 of the Penal Code, made a confession implicating himself and the petitioners and the confession was corroborated by such of the evidence as was recorded by the Magistrate who was inquiring into the case, the High Court refused bail, holding that the evidence put forward was such that if believed it would amount to material corroboration of the confession.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Chittagong to show cause why the Petitioners should not be admitted to bail. It is opposed by the Crown represented by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer, and the District Magistrate has submitted an explanation in which he points out that one of the accused, who was captured at the time, has made a long confession implicating himself and the other persons who are now praying for bail before this Court, that the confession has been corroborated to a certain extent by evidence which has been recorded by the Magistrate who was inquiring into the case, and in a few days' time Mr. Higgins, the complainant, who was assaulted, will be in a position to give his evidence and we do not know what light it may throw on the matter. But what we have to consider in this case is whether the corroboration is in the nature of material corroboration at law, and from the account which has been placed before us by the learned Counsel appearing in support of the Rule, we must say that, so far as it goes, it is what the law considers material corroboration. Of course we do not, and we should not, think of throwing out any opinion as to whether this evidence is to be believed. We do not desire to prejudice the case in any way. We merely state that the evidence which is put before us through the learned Counsel is, if believed, evidence which in law amounts to material corroboration, and we think that the rule laid down in section 497 for the guidance of Courts other than the High Court is a rule founded upon justice and equity and one which should be followed by us as well as by every other Court unless anything appears to the contrary. The extended powers given to the High Court under section 498 are certainly not to be used to get rid of this very reasonable and proper provision of the law.

For these reasons we think that at the present stage of the case bail should not be given. It will, of course, be within the competence of the lower Courts to admit the petitioners to bail at any time after Mr. Higgins is examined, or whenever it should appear that the prima facie case against them has in any way been weakened.

The Rule is discharged.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 498—Enticing away married woman—Discarded wife living in her father's house—Protection—Knowledge or belief of her being wife of another man—Revision—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439.

A husband who openly discarded his wife for many years and recognised her as a free agent to go where she liked, has no ground for complaining under section 498 of the Penal Code even if she is enticed away by another man from her father's house where she lives.

In such a case it cannot be said either that her father has the care of her on behalf of her husband or the man enticing her away had the knowledge or belief of her being the wife of the complainant.

Petition for revision under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code of the order of the District Magistrate, Mianwali, dated the 23rd September 1914, affirming that of the Magistrate, second Class, Mianwali, dated the 16th September 1914, convicting the petitioners.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—Whatever the real facts about this peculiar case may be, I find it difficult to understand the grounds upon which the lower Courts have thought it right to convict the petitioners under section 498 or 498/109, Indian Penal Code.

The complainant is aged 40 and the woman Mussammat Ali about 25. It is clear from the Magistrate's long judgment that there was a good deal of doubt whether the complainant had or had not divorced her some years ago. During the pendency of these criminal proceedings the woman instituted a civil suit for declaration that she had been divorced, and from a certified copy produced before me it appears that the Civil Court has since given her a decree, dated the 23rd October 1914. This decree has been given ex parte and may not carry much more weight than the Magistrate's earlier finding to the contrary, but it, at any rate, goes to show that there is a good deal to be said for the woman's story.

The more important question is, however, whether either of the petitioners had any reason for believing the woman to be the complainant's wife and here both her own story of the irregular life which she has been long leading and the remaining evidence in the case, all lead to a reasonable conclusion that they could have had no such knowledge or belief.

It is certain that the woman left her husband years ago, whether she was formally divorced or merely turned out and discarded as a wife. She then lived more or less continuously with her father, Jhinda, having by her own account irregular intercourse with other men from time to time through a period of several years. This part of her story is supported to a material extent by the report made by her father to the Police on the 15th April 1914, which eventually led to the present prosecution.

There is nothing to suggest that her father had the care of her on behalf of the alleged husband, and the essential elements for an offence under section 498, Indian Penal Code, are wanting, even if the woman may have now attached herself to the petitioner, Pahlwan. She must have been long recognised as a free agent to go where she liked, and a young man like Pahlwan could not be expected to know the circumstance of her early life. Her father seems to have resented her last act of misconduct and to have put the complainant up to making a quite unjustifiable complaint. A husband who openly discards his wife for many years has no ground for complain if she elects to go off with some other man, and the assertion that she had left him only two months before is clearly quite untrue.

Even if it be assumed that the petitioners enticed the woman away from the father's house, which seems very doubtful, I must find that they have committed no offence in doing so. The revision is allowed. The petitioners are acquitted. Their sentences of imprisonment are set aside and they will be released The additional fines of Rs. 100 on Pahlwan and Rs. 25 on Niazi will be refunded if paid.

Petition allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Maintenance of children—Mother dissuading children from father's custody to enable her to claim them maintenance—Father, liability of

Where a father has custody of his minor children and is maintaining them properly, the mere fact that they go and live with their mother would not make him liable to be charged for maintenance under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, though he refuses to maintain them unless they return to his custody.

Review of the order of the Township Magistrate of Kayan, dated the 7th of August 1914, passed in Civil Miscellaneous No. 32 of 1914.

Mr. Halkar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. F. C. Brown, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The evidence clearly shows that Ma Shwe Hmyin and Mg. Po Chat were divorced some six years ago and that the fault must have been on Ma Shwe Hmyin's side, since Mg. Po Chat is a wealthy man and on divorce Ma Shwe Hmyin obtained no share of the property. After the divorce it is proved that the minor children, Ma Thein Me and Me Ba Tin, lived with their father and were under his guardianship. They sometimes stayed with their elder sister, Ma Thein. Some few months ago they left their father's house and went to live with their mother. It is suggested that the latter persuaded them to go to her, so that she could claim maintenance for them from their father, which she is now doing and which is the subject of the present proceeding. I think that this suggestion is probably correct. In any case the father has been their guardian all along since the divorce and has been maintaining them. He wishes to have their custody now and to look after them. There has been on his part, in my opinion, no such neglect nor refusal to maintain as comes within the meaning of section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The case is not unlike that of In re Venkatasubbaiyan alias Samaiyan (1).

BHAGWAN DAS—ACCUSED.

Excise Act (XII of 1896), s. 49—Selling medicine containing brandy.

A medical practitioner who puts a little brandy into one of the medicines prescribed and sold by him to a patient, does not thereby sell brandy and contravene the provisions of the Excise Law.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, with his No. 372, dated the 2nd June 1914, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

FACTS.—One Bhagwan Das, a foreign liquor contractor of Pind Dadan Khan, about the 8th or 9th of October last observed two carriers passing his door with a wired and sealed box, of the pattern in which bottles of spirit are usually packed. As they passed one of the carriers said: "This is for Bhagwan Das," to which the other replied "no, not this Bhagwan Das, Bhagwan Das, Doctor." Upon this the liquor contractor began to reflect that the vendors of medicines in Pind Dadan Khan, when in want of spirit for the making up of prescriptions, were in the habit of obtaining it from him, but that "Bhagwan Das, Doctor," the present applicant, was an exception to this rule. He suspected, therefore, that the man had a private supply of spirit which he was in the habit of selling, either as an ingredient in the medicines compounded by him, or otherwise. Five or six days later the Excise Inspector visited Pind Dadan Khan, and to him the liquor contractor communicated his suspicions. The two put their heads together, and got a prescription written in which brandy was one of the ingredients. This prescription was made over to one Govind Sahai, who was given a rupee, and was sent off to the shop of the present applicant to get the prescription made up. The idea of the liquor contractor and Excise Inspector, of course, was that the applicant had his own private supply of brandy, and would be tricked into indenting on that supply in order to make up the prescription. In this pious hope they were completely disappointed, for the evidence of their own emissary, Govind Sahai, himself shows that, when he went to the applicant, the latter remarked that the prescription contained 3 chhatanks of brandy, which he told the witness to go and get himself. The witness replied that he knew nothing about such matters and could not go himself, but would pay for the brandy if the applicant would get it for him. The applicant then sent off a man to procure the spirit, which he did from some source unknown, and on his return the prescription was duly completed. For the mixture, for which the applicant himself provided a bottle, he charged Rs. 1-5, of which Rs. 1-3 was paid at the time and annas two later.

The accused on conviction by E. G. F. Abraham, Esquire, Magistrate, first Class, Jhelum District, dated 7th March 1914, was sentenced under section 49 of the Excise Act to pay Rs. 20 as fine.

The present is an application for revision presented by the accused chemist, praying that the conviction and sentence may be set aside, and the proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds:—

It seems to me that the conviction was wrong, on the simple ground that there was no sale by the applicant. No doubt, the applicant procured the brandy from outside, poured it into the mixture, and charged Govind Sahai for the whole mixture; but there is nothing to show how much he charged for each ingredient in the mixture, nor is there anything to show where his servant got the brandy from, or what he paid for it. In other words there is nothing to show that the applicant made any profit over the transaction, and, that being so, Panna Lal v. Emperor (1) is an authority for holding, that the applicant cannot be said to have "sold" to Govind Sahai. In fact, it appears to me that the applicant acted merely as an agent for Govind Sahai, the purchaser, and that the only seller was the unknown person from whom the applicant's servant made the purchase.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Accused.

ORDER.—I fully agree with the Sessions Judge. I think it would be monstrous to hold that a medical practitioner, who put a little brandy into one of the medicines prescribed and sold by him to a patient, thereby contravened the provisions of the excise law and sold brandy.

I agree that there was no such sale as contemplated in the Excise Act and I, therefore, accept the revision, and set aside the conviction and sentence, and acquit Bhagwan Das and order refund of the fine.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 176—Failure to report—"Intentionally", meaning of—Co-existent obligation of another no excuse.

Where a person is under a legal duty to report certain facts and fails to report them, he must be presumed to intend to conceal them, unless he can show that he had reason to suppose that the authority to which the report was due had the information from other sources.

The mere fact that another person was also present at the time of the occurrence and was under a similar obligation to report does not justify omission to report.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Joint Magistrate of Palghat, in Criminal Appeal No. 93 of 1914, preferred against that of the Court of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate of Ponnani, in Calendar Case No. 256 of 1914.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—Petitioner in the case was bound under section 8 of Act IV of 1884 to give information to the Police of an explosion of fire-works which resulted in the death of a child. He omitted to do so, and has been convicted of an offence under section 176 of the Indian Penal Code.

The only question is whether his omission should be taken to be intentional. Dr. Swaminadhan for petitioner quotes the cases of In re Pandya Nayak (1) and the Queen-Empress v Gopal Singh (2), but these rulings are only authority for the proposition that where the Police are already in possession of the information, a person cannot be convicted of an intentional omission under section 176, because he fails to perform an entirely superfluous act in furnishing them with the information over again. In the present case, I am not referred to anything from which it would appear that petitioner had any reason to suppose that the Police had been informed of the matter by any one else. The most that can be said is that the Adhigari was also present, who was under a similar obligation to report; but this by itself is no legal justification for petitioner's omission.

It is also argued that the word "intentionally" in the section should be construed in the sense of an intention to conceal the facts which should be reported: but where a person is under a legal duty to report certain facts and fails to report them, he must be presumed to intend to conceal them, unless he can show that he had reason to suppose that the authority to which the report was due had the information from other sources.

The joint trial of a person accused of keeping a gaming house and others for being present in it at the time of a Police raid, is not warranted by the provisions of section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and thus being illegal must be set aside Makhan v. Emperor, 5 Ind. Cas. 720, 5 P W.R. 1910 Cr.; 11 Cr. L. J. 211; Subrahmania Ayyar v Emperor, 25 M. 61; 11 M. L. J. 233; 3 Bom. L. R. 540, 5 C. W. N. 866; 28 I. A. 257 (P C.); 2 Weir 271, referred to.

Case reported by the Additional Sessions Judge at Lahore with his No. 539 of 26th June 1914 under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

FACTS.—On the report of Gulab Singh, Sub-Inspector, dated 15th August 1913, confirmed by other information, the Sub-Divisional Officer, Kasur, issued a warrant under section 5 of the Gambling Act, III of 1867, in respect of a house situate in the Kasur town, and on 16th August 1913, the instruments of gaming of different kinds such as dice, etc., detailed in Exhibits II and P III, and currency notes of Rs. 30, together with cash in Rs. 14 and silver pieces and pice amounting to Rs. 6-5-1½ were seized there; and all the accused, 22 in number, were found in the house and arrested.

The accused, on conviction by Sardar Sohan Singh, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the first Class at Kasur in the Lahore District, was sentenced, by order dated 5th May 1914, under section 4/15 of Act III, 1867, to one month's rigorous imprisonment.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds:—

For reasons given in my judgment in Criminal Appeal No. 251/141, decided to-day (copy attached with this Office No. 541 of 27th June 1914), I refer the petition for revision to the Chief Court for order with a recommendation that the conviction be set aside and a retrial ordered separately from Ghulam Haidar, accused, who was tried and convicted under section 3 of the Act.

ORDER.—Nineteen persons have been convicted under the Gambling Act, one Ghulam Haidar under section 3 for keeping a gambling den and the rest under section 4 for frequenting it and gambling there. They have been tried together and the learned Sessions Judge has sent up the records with a recommendation that, inasmuch as under a ruling of this Court. Makhan v. Emperor (1), the joint trial was illegal, the convictions should be set aside and retrials ordered. The Privy Council ruling in Subrahmania Ayyar v. Emperor (2) is also referred to as showing that an error of this sort is not a mere curable irregularity, but is a fatal illegality.

The ruling of 1910 was by myself, and I find on again considering the matter, that I am still of the same opinion. Persons can only be jointly tried, apart from cases of offenders and their abettors, if—see section 239, Criminal Procedure Code—they are accused of the same offence or of different offences committed in the same transaction. Now here Ghulam Haidar has been charged with an offence and the others with a distinct offence; and I do not think that the keeping of a gaming house and the being present in it at time of a Police raid can be said to be part of the "same transaction." I am aware of no exact precedent, but the rulings under section 239 aforesaid afford valuable analogies, and the above is my conclusion. I, therefore, allow the revision and direct that, the convictions and sentences being set aside, the matter should be again tried, Ghulam Haidar being tried separately from the other accused persons.

Evidence—Statement made to Police officer, admissibility of.

A statement by a Police officer to the effect that certain persons made certain statements to him is not admissible in evidence unless it is evidence of general repute.

Application in revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Agra,

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Applicants

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Chainsukh and Hukmi, father and son, residents of a village in the Agra District, were prosecuted before a Magistrate of the first class on the allegation that they habitually committed the offence of counterfeiting coins. The Magistrate after a full inquiry passed an order requiring them to file security for a period of two years. As the security was not furnished, the Magistrate referred the matter to the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge has passed an order requiring security to be furnished as directed by the Magistrate, and sentencing both men to rigorous imprisonment for a period of two years in default of furnishing the said security. The order of the Sessions Judge is challenged in revision, substantially on the ground that it is based upon inadmissible evidence. I have examined the record, and I am satisfied that the applicants have made good their plea. At the outset of the Sessions Judge's order I find the following passages: "The search of the house of Hukmi led to the finding of nothing criminating except a telegram from Chiranji's brother. Under the circumstances in which this telegram was found I consider it a strong piece of evidence in corroboration of Chiranji's statement that Hukmi was his associate and the coiner of the counterfeit coin in his possession. In another recent case Badri and Dwarka also mentioned the name of Hukmi as being their accomplice." There is no legal evidence on the record that Chiranji or Badri or Dwarka made the statements relied on by the Sessions Judge. They were not called as witnesses in the case. The statements relied on by the Sessions Judge are statements by Police officers to the effect that Chiranji, Badri or Dwarka made certain statements to them. This is not evidence of general repute, and is not admissible under any provision of the Indian Evidence Act or of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The remark about the finding of the telegram is open even to equal objection. There is no telegram on the record alleged to have been found in Hukmi's house, nor is there anything on the record to show what were the terms of the telegram which the Sub-Inspector Ashiq Ali (P. W. No. 2) says he found. If the telegram in question was an exhibit of importance in the case, it should have been proved. The Court might then have considered its terms and considered further whether it was prepared to presume, without any direct evidence, that it was actually despatched by the person from whom it purported to come, and that that person was Chiranji's brother. The passages I have quoted from the order of the learned Sessions Judge are obviously material to the conclusion arrived at by that Court. The comments which I have made on them are sufficient to show that his order cannot be affirmed as it stands. I have examined the record in some detail, in order to see whether I should merely quash the proceedings or direct any further proceedings to be taken. The record seems to me to be saturated with evidence not legally admissible, and I am quite unable to concur with the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge as to the evidential value of the statements made by five Police officers, who have been relied on as proving that Chainsukh and Hukmi are by general repute habitual counterfeiters of coin. They appear to have been prosecuted on one occasion only, when they were convicted of a technical offence for which an almost nominal sentence was considered sufficient. The fact of this conviction, however, might account for the diffusion of the rumours unfavourable to the character of the persons so convicted. It would certainly serve to account for information unfavourable to their character reaching the Police officers. Any person caught with counterfeit coin in his possession, and desirous of concealing the real source from which it came, would find it easy to say that it proceeded from Chainsukh and Hukmi who had already been convicted in another case. I accept this application and set aside the order of the Sessions Judge. If the applicants are in custody, they must be released. If they have furnished security, their bonds and those of their sureties are hereby discharged.

Order set aside.

First report—No mention of offender therein—Subsequent assertion of his having been seen not reliable—Track evidence, value of.

Where the first report makes no mention of the offender and the complainant when questioned named nobody as his assailant, and there is no assertion therein that any fugitive had been seen, the complainant's subsequent statement that he had identified the accused at the time of the attack and the evidence of his neighbours that they saw him running with the instrument of crime in his hands, cannot justly be relied upon.

The track evidence of a flimsy nature should not be believed without sufficient corroboration.

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate first Class, Hissar, exercising enhanced powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, dated the 8th October 1914, convicting the appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted of the attempted murder of Hari Chand and has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The alleged motive is appellant's resentment in respect of a decree obtained by complainant's father against appellant's father shortly before the commission of the offence.

Hari Chand, complainant, was attacked as he lay asleep in the bazar in front of his shop. The first report was to the effect that Hari Chand, when questioned, had mentioned nobody and there is no mention that any fugitive had been seen.

Hari Chand stated before the Magistrate that he had identified appellant at the time of the attack, but the Magistrate declined to believe this and having seen the Police proceedings, I think the Magistrate was quite correct in his conclusion.

But the lower Court has convicted on the evidence of four neighbours of complainant, who say they saw appellant running away with a hatchet in his hand.

I place no reliance on these witnesses. They live quite close to the complainant, they say they heard the alarm and cries of wadh gaya, still they did not go to the spot and tell what they had seen. Moreover, appellant had been arrested on suspicion before their statements were recorded.

There is some track evidence of a very flimsy nature and the so-called tracker has not been corroborated. The lower Court does not rely on it.

There is no sound evidence at all against the appellant.

Ground 7 is withdrawn.

The appeal is accepted and the appellant is acquitted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer—Necessity of trying Magistrate's evidence—Burden of proof.

NABIBUX KHAN AHMEDKHAN v. EMPEROR.

An application for transfer based on the ground that the evidence of the trying Magistrate is necessary for the defence, cannot be entertained unless it is clearly shown that the evidence is really essential and that there is likelihood that he can give evidence which would aid the accused in his defence. The burden of proof lies very heavily on the applicant to show that such is the case.

Application for transfer of the case from the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mehar, to outside Larkana District.

Mr. F. J. de Verteuil, for the Applicant.

Mr. E. Raymond, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, for a transfer from the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mehar, of certain proceedings which had been instituted against the applicant under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code.

The first ground on which this application is based is that the District Superintendent of Police, Larkana, is taking a personal interest in the case and is pressing zamindars to be witnesses against him. This is an allegation which is supported by the affidavit of one person, but the Public Prosecutor for the Crown states that it is strongly denied by the District Superintendent of Police himself, and it is obviously a ground which cannot be accepted as sufficient unless there is a very strong reason to believe that the District Superintendent of Police is actually putting improper pressure on persons to give evidence or otherwise going beyond the proper limits of his duties as a Police officer. In this case it is stated that the proceedings were purposely put in the hands of the District Superintendent of Police, in order that there might be no suspicion of their institution improperly by a subordinate, and the Court must presume that an officer of the standing of District Superintendent of Police would not go beyond the proper grounds of his duty in such matters. I do not think that this allegation affords any substantial ground for the transfer applied for.

The 2nd ground on which this application is based is that the evidence of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is absolutely essential in this case for the accused's defence. It is stated that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, under the directions of the District Magistrate, made certain inquiries into other cases, in the course of which the applicant asserts that he expressed fears as to the results of his giving evidence and that the trying Magistrate re-assured him on the point. It is alleged that his fear was that if he did give evidence he would incur the enmity of the Sub-Inspector and that this is, therefore, material fact for the purpose of his defence viz, that the proceedings had been instituted against him on account of Police enmity. The Magistrate in the report which he has furnished in compliance with the order of this Court states that he made certain inquiries as alleged, but so far as he remembers the applicant did not in fact give evidence against the Sub-Inspector. He also says the applicant did not, so far as he remembers, express any fear to him nor does he remember re assuring him. It is quite clear that an application for transfer of a case pending before the Magistrate on the grounds that the Magistrate is a necessary witness for the defence, must be strictly scrutinized, as otherwise it would be open to any accused person to obtain a transfer of a case from a Magistrate, whom he did not want to try the case, merely on this particular ground; and it clearly cannot be the intention of the Legislature that this latitude should be open to the accused, unless there are sufficient grounds for his allegation. In this particular case it is clear that the fact of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate having made the inquiries referred to can be put in evidence by certified copies of proceedings. The allegation as to the accused's expression of fear before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and his re-assuring him, is, no doubt, a matter on which the Magistrate's evidence might more properly be required; but in view of the definite statement of the Magistrate that he is not in a position to give evidence which would support this allegation, I do not think that there is any sufficient ground for saying that it is expedient in the interests of justice that this particular case should not be tried by him and should be transferred to some other Magistrate. As I have already said, a very heavy burden of proof that the evidence of the Magistrate is necessary, lies on the applicant, and I do not think that it has been properly discharged in this case. I have been referred to the case of Emperor v. Abdul Latif (1), in which the learned Judge held that, inasmuch as the Magistrate was bound under section 257, Criminal Procedure Code, to issue a summons, unless he considered that the application was made for the purpose of vexation or delay, or for defeating the ends of justice, and it was not proper to leave the decision of such a question to the Magistrate whose evidence was required, the application for transfer ought to be granted. It is of course a matter in which there can be a difference of opinion as to whether it is or is not expedient that a Magistrate should be placed in such a position. But on the other hand, it must be borne in mind that if this view be adopted, it will, as pointed out by the learned Public Prosecutor, be open to any accused persons to obtain a transfer in this way. And for the reasons already given I do not think it expedient to order a transfer, unless it is clearly shown that the evidence of a Magistrate is really essential for the accused's defence, and that there is likelihood that he can give evidence which would aid the accused in his defence. I do not think that there is anything in this case to satisfy these conditions and the application is accordingly dismissed.

Application dismissed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 1215 OF 1914.

February 6, 1915.

Present:—Justice Sir P. C. Banerjee, KT.

RAM BEHARI—APPLICANT

versus

MUNESHAR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Dispute likely to cause breach of the peace not mentioned in notice—Parties aware—Magistrate—Jurisdiction—Revision.

Where there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace and the parties are aware of it, the Magistrate is not ousted of his jurisdiction to act under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code simply because in the notice issued it is not stated that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists.

Ganga Saran Singh v. Bhagwat Prasad, 5 Ind. Cas. 471; 7 A. L. J. 53; 11 Cr. L. J. 141; 32 A. 132, referred to.

Criminal revision against an order of the Magistrate of Gorakhpur.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hamilton, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The main ground upon which the application is made is that the Magistrate who made the order had no jurisdiction to make it, inasmuch as the notice which he issued under the section did not strictly comply with the requirements of clause (1) of the section. The first notice issued was no doubt very defective, but in the second notice the only defect was that it was not stated that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed. The parties, it is clear, were aware of the dispute which existed between them and as has been found, there was a dispute which was likely to cause a breach of the peace. As the learned Magistrate has pointed out, the applicants themselves considered that a breach of the peace was likely to ensue. That being so, I do not think this is a case in which this Court should exercise its powers of revision and should hold that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take proceedings under section 145. I may refer to the latest ruling of this Court on the point viz., Ganga Saran Singh v. Bhagwat Prasad (1).

There is a further plea taken in the application that the Magistrate ought not to have order the lock put on the shop in dispute to be removed. I think under the circumstances the Magistrate was fully justified in making that order, inasmuch as in proceedings under section 145 he had nothing to do with the moveable property contained in the said shop. I accordingly dismiss the application.

Application dismissed.

RAMANATHAM CHETTY v. RAGAMMAL.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL SUIT No. 21 OF 1913.

September 29, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri.

S. G. RAMANATHAM CHETTY AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

A. S. RAGAMMAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 19, 45, 78, 89—Administration, when comes to an end—Grant of Letters of Administration to Hindu widow—Her liability under an administration bond—Administrator of executor, whether a derivative executor—Executor, whether trustee—Assent to legacy, effect of—Suit on bond conditioned with performance of several acts—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 68

As soon as an administrator has performed the duties imposed on him by the Probate and Administration Act, the administration must be deemed to be at an end and when the person entitled to the estate is the executor or administrator himself, subsequent possession and acts are attributable to him not as administrator but as heir.

Where a Hindu widow obtained Letters of Administration to the estate of her deceased husband and executed the usual administration bond under section 78 of the Probate and Administration Act:

Held, that her liability under the bond was confined only to such acts of waste and mismanagement as could be attributed to her as administratrix and not any such acts attributable to her as the widow in possession of her husband's estate under Hindu Law after administration was over.

The administrator of an executor is not a derivative executor. Where, therefore, an executor dies without having fully administered the estate the duty of carrying on the administration of that estate does not devolve upon the deceased executor or administrator's personal representative but on a person appointed for the purpose under sections 19 and 45 of the Probate and Administration Act.

An executor is not an express trustee merely by virtue of the office in the absence of any trusts imposed upon him by the terms of the Will.

Mere assent to a legacy does not convert an executor into a trustee unless he has separated the fund and set it apart. It does not transfer the liability from the estate of the deceased and fasten it on to that of the executor so as to make it a debt payable by his executor or administrator in the usual course of administration.

In cases where a bond contains successive covenants each breach gives a separate cause of action, but the date of the last breach is the starting point of limitation in a suit on the bond when the bond is conditioned on the performance of several acts and the obligation to pay is enforceable till the last of the conditions is fulfilled.

Where the assignees of an administration bond executed by a Hindu widow in connection with the grant to her of the Letters of Administration to the estate of her deceased husband, sued for an account of the administration:

Held, that the suit was governed by Article 68 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act and having been brought more than three years from the period when the conditions of the bond were broken, was barred by limitation.

FACTS.—One Kuppu Chetty died leaving a Will of which he appointed Kandaswami Chetty executor. The Will provided that the executor should from the property set apart Rs. 500 for one Ramaswami Chetty and should hand over the said sum together with interest at half a rupee per hundred to him on his attaining the age of 18, and that the executor should pay another sum of Rs. 500 similarly with interest to Venkatasiva Chetty on his attaining the same age. After giving two more legacies, the testator continued: "After deducting the above mentioned four items and the expenses of my funeral ceremonies the whole of my remaining estate shall be enjoyed by my above-mentioned executor, Kandaswami Chetty." The Will was proved by Kandaswami Chetty and he died some years thereafter without paying the legacies above referred to. The 1st defendant Ragammal applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of her deceased husband the said Kandaswami Chetty. In paragraph 4 of her petition for Letters of Administration she stated as follows: "That the deceased Kuppu Chetty bequeathed by his last Will all his properties to the said Kandaswami Chetty and the latter took out Probate of the said Will and took possession of and enjoyed the estate during his life-time." Paragraph 5 of the petition ran as follows: "That the estate in the hands of Kandaswami Chetty was his own and no one save the petitioner has any interest therein." Letters of Administration were granted to her and an administration bond was taken in the name of the Registrar of the High Court, executed by the 1st defendant and as sureties for her by the 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants and one Subbaraya Chetty, whose legal representatives were the 5th and 6th defendants in this suit.
